CYCLISTS IN COURT.

The muddy, rutty roads may drive the bicyclists on to the inviting sidewalks, but those who fall for the lure are liable to a police court appearance. Five of them paid over $4.60 each this morning.

CARD OF THANKS.

Mr. and Mrs. George J. Jackson and daughter, wish to thank Mr. Kerr's Bible class of St. Andrew's Church, for the beautiful flowers sent him during his illness in St. Joseph's Hospital; also for Mrs. Wm. Stevens' kind services rendered, while ill.

The many friends of Mr. Jackson will be glad to hear he is doing nicely.

W. O. W. DANCE.

The Woodmen of the World intend holding another dance to compensate the Christmas Parcel Fund for members serving overseas. The attendance was somewhat affected by the wretched weather on the evening of the previous dance for this worthy object, and so it was decided to hold another one on Friday next, Nov. 2nd. Please keep this date open. Special meeting on Monday evening, October 29th.

The Belmont Club smoker held last night at the Clubrooms, George Street, was attended by about forty members, and a successful and pleasant few hours were spent. Solos by Mr. Grahame of the Collegiate Institute staff, and violin solos by Mr. Frank Whitehouse augmented the general success of the entertainment.

TORONTO FAT STOCK SHOW.

From indications, the Stock Show to be held at the Union Stock Yards of Toronto, December 7th and 8th next, will be bigger than ever. The 1916 show had 376 entries, comprising in all 2,309 show animals which sold for the Christmas trade, some of whom brought record prices. Premium list has been enlarged and each class carries a handsome prize.

For further particulars, write C. F. Topping, care of Union Stock Yards, Toronto.

YOUNGSTER HURT.

A young son of Mr. Charles Shannon, 294 Lake Street, was painfully injured yesterday when he got his fingers caught in a road scraper belonging to the city. He was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital, where Dr. King had to amputate the little finger of one hand.

CAPT. BURNHAM'S ADDRESS.

For the information of the large number of those desiring to consult the Federal member regarding friends overseas, it may be stated that Mr. Burnham, M.P., will be at the office of the Superintendent of the Patriotic Fund, Simcoe street, on Tuesday and Saturday evenings of each week, at 7 o'clock, until further notice.

This Morning's Market

The price of potatoes rose at the Market this morning from $1.25 to $1.65 per bag, and the rise met with slow sales.

Butter, 48c to 50c per pound.

Chickens, $1.25 to $1.75 per pair.

Geese, 20c per pound.

An unusually large number of ducks were brought in to-day, and sold at 75c to 90c each.

Apples ranged from $2 to $2.75 per bag.

The reform warden always made it a point to give each new arrival a chance to do the work with which he was familiar, if the penitentiary dealt in his line. A tailor named Levinski arrived, and it was ordered that he be employed at that trade, if there was an opening. There wasn't. He was asked if he was adept at anything else. "Yes," he replied, with a smile, "I am a crackerjack travelling salesman."

Sixty Thousand Italians Captured Says Berlin

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

BERLIN, October 27.—Sixty thousand Italians have been taken prisoner by the Austro-German forces in their offensive on the Italian front, Army Headquarters announced to-day. Guns to the number of 450 have been captured.

City Makes A Move To Secure Fresh Fish At 14 . a lb.

The Food Controller's plan for reducing the price of fish and thereby offering an attractive substitute for meat, was briefly considered by the council last night and transferred to a committee composed of Aldermen Dobbin and Stratton and Messrs. E. F. Mason and J. T. Braund, for their deliberation and decision.

By this scheme fresh white fish, pike and pickerel may be offered to the citizens at 14 cents a pound, instead of the present rather high price of 20 cents. As the seasons change other varieties will be provided. The scheme is altogether a war measure and where it has been adopted is reported to have been successful.

The first requisite step is the appointment of a committee to take charge of the local service.

WEDDING BELLS

GIBBS—MORRISON.

Quietly this morning in Knox Church, Rev. Mr. MacKenzie officiating, the wedding was solemnized of Ethel L. Morrison, daughter of Mr. R. Morrison, Bolivar street, and Sydney Gibbs, only son of Mr. Gibbs, 768 Water street.

The bride was stunningly attired in her travelling suit of burgundy, and wore a small grey hat and marabou furs.

The happy couple drove to the 8 o'clock C. P. R. train immediately after the ceremony and will spend a short honeymoon in Toronto and points west.

Mrs. Gibbs was the recipient of a large number of beautiful gifts consisting of cut glass and silver.

Among these were a silver tea service from the draftsmen and engineering office staff and a cut glass bowl from the engineering department of the C. G. E., where Miss Morrison was a member of the staff previous to her wedding.

PENNEFATHER—HAYES.

The details of the wedding of Miss Nanno Hayes, formerly of this city, and Lieut. Edgar Pennefather, Ottawa, announced last night, will be read with interest by Miss Hayes' many friends in the city.

The wedding was solemnized in the Church of Our Lady at 11 o'clock Rev. Father Doyle officiating. The bride, who was given away by her father, Judge Hayes, looked very beautiful in her wedding gown of white satin, with panniers caught up with orange blossoms The front and back panels were of exquisitely gold embroidered Georgette crepe and long satin train. She wore a wedding veil made in mob cap effect, with orange blossoms, and carried a shower bouquet of white orchids and lily of the valley. She was attended by Miss Phyllis Hayes, Toronto, Miss Georgie Stevenson, Peterborough, and Miss Pauline Hayes, all of whom were charmingly attired in pink Georgette over satin dresses, and wore large silver hats and carried old fashioned nosegays of pink roses, forget-me-nots and ferns.

Mr. de Laplante of Ottawa supported the groom, who wore the uniform of the Governor-General's body guard. Mr. Bob Hayes and Lieut. Guthrie acted as ushers. The two little flower girls who scattered roses before the happy couple, Miss Isabel Pennefather of this city, and Dorothy Rolph, were daintily attired in white frocks and wore pink veils. Miss Margaret Hayes also carried flowers, while Teddy Dunbar acted as train bearer.

After the ceremony the bridal party returned to Judge Hayes' home, 38 Suffolk street, where a reception and wedding breakfast were held. The parlor and dining room were decorated in chrysanthemums, the dining room in sweetheart roses.

Mrs. Pennefather's travelling suit was of brown velour, trimmed with fur. She wore a small brown feather hat, bronze shoes and gloves and carried a bouquet of ophelia roses and ferns. The happy couple motored to Hamilton, en route for New York.

The groom's gift to the bride was a gold watch, to the bridesmaids and flower girls beautiful rings, and to the ushers silver cigarette cases.

JAMES LONG WAS KILLED BY TRAIN

Untimely Death of Ops Township Resident—Mrs. Allison of Peterborough is a Sister

LINDSAY, Oct. 27.— Mr. James Long, a well known farmer residing on the Jas. McLean farm, West Ops, and a short distance from Lindsay, was killed yesterday about 12.30 o'clock on the G.T.R. tracks, a short distance from his home.

The unfortunate man was looking after some cattle on lot 22, 3rd concession, and was driving them across the track, when the 12.05 Toronto mixed hove in sight. In attempting to get off the track, the deceased, it is believed, caught his foot in some manner, and before he could clear the track, when the 12.05 Toronto hit his body being badly mangled. The train was stopped, and word of the accident was sent on to Lindsay. Dr. Blanchard, coroner, and Chief Short motored to the scene of the accident, and after making an investigation an inquest was decided on.

The late Mr Long, who was about 65 years of age, was well known throughout the district, and the news of his untimely death has evoked expressions of regret on all sides. He is survived by his sorrowing wife, and four sons, Allan, William, Joseph and Arthur, a sister, Mrs. Allison, resides in Peterborough.

This concert has been organized, and will be conducted entirely by the members of the Mission Band. If there are any people in the city who want to see what children can do in the way of organizations, when not interfered with by the grown-ups, let them come to St. George's Church next Tuesday evening. They will have an object lesson.

Humor on the drill ground: Sergeants, small and fierce—"'Old yer 'ead up, Private Rod. There ain't no threepenny bits lying about." Tall young recruit from northern parts—"Must I always look oop, sergeant?" Sergeant, very loud and very fierce—"Yes, always." Private Rod, pathetically, and in almost a whisper, eyes to heaven—"Then, good-bye sergeant I shall never see thee no more."

Fear of Hun Subs Caused Mid-Sea Suicide

PARIS, Oct. 28.— Miss Helen Cudahy, daughter of Patrick Cudahy, the Milwaukee meat packer, committed suicide in mid-ocean on October 19, according to the army edition of the Chicago Tribune. Fear of submarine is believed to have been the motive for her act, the newspaper says.

According to this account, Miss Cudahy, who was coming to France on a Red Cross mission, appeared to be cheerful in the early days of the voyage, but when the submarine zone was approached and a convoy met the steamer on which she was a passenger, she remained in her cabin.

A friend who went to her cabin on the night of October 19, found the room empty, the porthole open, and this hurriedly written note:

"It is all for the best. Keep as much as possible from father and mother. Notify my brother Michael."

Search of the boat failed to reveal any further evidences of her disappearance, or any person who witnessed the tragedy. Miss Cudahy's body has not been recovered.

ALLIES PLAN TO MAKE THE HUNS STAND AND FIGHT

Have Developments in Store Germans Never Dreamed Of, Says Repington—Military Critic Estimates Huns Have 5,600,000 Still in Service

RESERVES DECLINE

LONDON, Oct. 29.—Col. E. P. Repington, military expert of the Times states that attrition is now hard at work among the combatants. "As far as can be ascertained, the Germans have 5,600,000 men still in the service. Of these 2,200,000 ade in the west and 1,400,000 in the east, the latter made up of somewhat inferior troops. The balance includes depot coast defence and administrative services.

"There are probably not over 500,000 men in the German depots. Of these about 380,000 are below the 1919, which is still under training. The annual class in Germany numbers 500,000 but the unfit and exemptions reduce the figure to about 380,000.

"These and the recovered wounded are now the only sources from which Germany can sustain her armies in the field. If the fighting of 1918 is on the same scale as 1917 Germany must use her classes of 1920 and 1921 or be compelled to reduce the number of her divisions.

"She will probably make every effort this winter to even up the advantages now maintained by the allies in artillery effectives and in the air.

MUST CONSIDER ALLIES.

"This war," continues the military expert of the Times, "we must consider not only for ourselves, but for our allies; we cannot afford to run in blinkers. Major Moraht in the Tages Zeitung of Oct. 6th declares the French fighting strength now stands a little over 2,000,000 men, including all available reserves. He places the permanent or not French losses at 2,270,000, and the number of the French yearly class at 250,000:

"If the French classes are 250,000 a year and ours 350,000, then the allies, France included, can place more young men in the field annually than the Germans. The Germans must also know that we have between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 men of military age still left in civil life under the age of 42, that the American armies will constantly increase.

HINDY HAS OTHER CHOICES.

"After reviewing the engagements which took place during the past year and a portion of 1916, Col. Repington goes on to state that "the Ypres front is far from being the only one from which Hindenburg cannot run away without fighting, as he did on the Somme last spring. "There are certainly developments in store for the enemy that he dreams not of. The only thing he (Hindenburg) can do is to bring divisions from Russia, in which case he risks his conquests in the east without hope of winning in the west. Meanwhile the allied armies on the west are going to make the Marshal of Germany stand and fight in spite of his 'classic plans.'"

Correspondent's Impression Of The Recent Offensive On The Italian Front

Fury of the German Fire Made it Evident That the Enemy Would Seek to Regain the Vast Baiusizza Plateau—Gorizia is the Strategic Centre.

THE OFFENSIVE EXTENDS

ARMY HEADQUARTERS IN NORTHERN ITALY, Oct. 29.—Under the escort of an officer from headquarters the Associated Press correspondent had an opportunity to see Gorizia under a rain of shells from nearby Austrian batteries, and to look out from a castle dominating the city on the vast scene of military operations of which Gorizia is the strategic centre. The trip was made at an opportune moment, just as the Austrians and Germans were inaugurating their heavy offensive from the north in the effort to redeem their recent heavy losses.

A heavy artillery bombardment had initiated the movement, with the Italian batteries responding, along a front of twenty miles running across the Bainsizza plateau toward Tolmino. As the correspondent passed along the road from headquarters shells were falling freely three miles outside Gorizia and there was a steady roar of guns of all calibres, from the big fifteens to the rattling quick-firers. Such an offensive had been anticipated for several days, as information reaching headquarters showed that the enemy was preparing for the supreme move of the year. Austrian forces in the north, where they were no longer required against the inactive Russian armies, had been sent to this front. At the same time the German General Staff had awakened to the possibilities of the Italian front, and for the first time Brandenburg troops were identified along this front and shells from large calibre German guns were falling for the first time from the enemy position on Monte San Gabriel and around Monte Rosso.

This, with the fury of the German fire, made it evident that the enemy would seek to regain the vast Bainsizza plateau, which the Italians recently took, with 100,000 prisoners, as the Italian strip on the plateau opened the way for them to sweep over the Carso range back of Trieste and thus threaten the Austrian defence of Trieste.

It was therefore to protect Trieste and force back the Italians to the old line of the Isonzo River that the enemy forces were tripled, picked Brandenburgers, Saxons, Bavarians, and othere were added to the Austrian forces and the opening stages of the offensive were developed.

The city of Gorizia was entered over a bridge which Italian engineers had thrown across the Isonzo. The massive old stone bridge was out of service, with one of its stately arches blown to pieces. The iron railroad bridge further along had been entirely destroyed by artillery fire. The big paper mills along the river front were a mass of ruins, and lines of jagged walls, with gaping windows, extended for miles along the river.

Entering Gorizia, the city presented an aspect of ruin and desolation, with the crash of falling walls every now and then adding to the area of destruction. Within five minutes the correspondent counted five large churches, including the imposing cathedral, which had been reduced to a mass of ruins. The roof of the cathedral had fallen in from a succession of shell holes and the high altar could be seen above the tumbling side walls. The chief hotel of the city had been blotted out of existence by two large calibre shells. What is left of one of the principal buildings is now used for an emergency fire department to prevent further destruction.

Going to the top of the castle dominating the city, the correspondent had a splendid view of the vast field of the present operations. Immediately in front was Monte San Michel, held by the Italians, and to the left was Monte San Gabriele where the Italians are on one side, with the Austrians still clinging to the top of the other side. The dividing lines between the two forces were discernible clearly from the terrific crashing of guns on both fronts.

The artillery action could be seen dimly, extending over the coveted plateau of Bainsizza and northward to Monte Rosso, where it was later learned heavy infantry actions followed the artillery preparations.

The observations from the top of the castle were brought to a sudden halt in the midst of the explanations of the officer conducting the party. He had just led his companions past an observation post to a stone rampart fronting the castle wall. As he spoke there was a deafening roar of a heavy gun, followed by the whir of a big missile headed straight for the rampart. Instinctively every one recoiled, but it was too late. The big projectile struck not fifteen feet away, tearing through the stone walls and wrecking the observation post which the party had just left. All went over like a row of bricks and lay stunned under mountains of mortar, dirt and stone. The projectile had hurled a mass of small stone like bullets, and one of these made a slight gash in the face of a member of the party.

After the party had clambered over tons of debris thrown up by the shot, army surgeons dressed the face wound of the injured men and pronounced it merely superficial. Thus the observation of the first stage of the Austro-German offensive was brought to a sudden termination, which narrowly bordered on tragedy for several well-known British and Italian writers. The trip had shown, however, the desperate character of this initial artillery fire and the momentous nature of these culminating movements in which Germany comes to aid Austria in overcoming Italy's success of the year.

On returning to headquarters tonight, all the impressions gathered from the observation were confirmed as information reaching the high command shows this is the opening of the greatest offensive the Austrians and Germans have attempted against Italy.

Mr. Charles T. Thompson, correspondent of the Associated Press, who wrote the foregoing despatch, was one of a party of American newspaper men on the highest rampart of the castle at Gorizia, on the Isonzo front, during a violent cannonade, when a shell fell a few feet from them, burying the whole party under earth and mud. Mr. Thompson was hurt. He was wounded slightly in the right cheek and his injury was dressed immediately at a neighboring port.

WM. WALTON MILBURN.

William Walton Milburn, Lot 3, Concession 2, Smith, died yesterday. Deceased has been ailing for some years, but his death came suddenly after two-days' serious illness. He was 83 years of age. The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon from the family residence to the Little Lake cemetery.

Whale Meat As Food.

Whale meat adaptability for human food appears no longer in doubt. Wherever sold people have rapidly become accustomed to it. Many prefer it to the best beef. This means a great deal for every locality where whaling stations are in operation. The supply from one whaling station alone will save the consumer $600,000 a year. It will obviate the slaughter of 10,000 head of cattle of an average weight of 500 pound net on the block. If for the purpose of conserving the cattle supply it were necessary to stop slaughtering cattle for a year enough whale meat could be obtained from the whales caught in North American waters to provide a substitute. As a war measure, think about it.

MISS BESSIE THOMPSON WON THE AUTOMOBILE IN REVIEW CONTEST

Miss Thompson a Heroine.

Miss Thompson's success is to her friends doubly satisfactory, in consideration of her heroic action in risking her life and saving her father. It will be remembered that in November, 1916, Mr. William Thompson and Miss Bessie while returning from Young's Point during a terrific thunderstorm at midnight in a small launch, ran on a rock at the head of Clear Lake. Mr. Thompson lit a match to see the location and the gasoline in the engine exploded setting fire to the launch. They were compelled to swim for shore which was some hundred feet away and the lake in an unusually tempestuous condition, which added to the bitter coldness of the water made progress exceedingly difficult. When within about fifty feet from Mr. Robert Neil's cottage, Mr. Thompson became exhausted and told his daughter to go on and leave him. Miss Thompson, although in an exhausted condition, turned round and compelled her father to use her as a support, and with great difficulty made the shore and Mr. Neil's cottage where friends found them the following morning.

Saw the Blaze.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Strickland, who were camping at Point of Rocks near the wrecked launch, saw the blaze, but think it to be a barn at some distance burning, paid no attention, and did not hear of the heroic action for some days.

Miss Thompson's votes by which she won the car numbered 2,803,510.

Miss Melissa Alford, winner of the Columbia, 1,866,430.

Mr. Cecil McCliggot, winner of the kitchen cabinet, 1,404,250.

"THE PAINTED WOMAN"

By FREDERIC ARNOLD KUMMER

"What business?" the Portugee asked, in quick alarm. Since hearing that which confirmed his suspicions, he had already formed a plan. Ormiston and his companions would doubtless continue their carouse until the morning. This would give him two hours, at the least, before the dawn. What better opportunity, to put his plan into execution. He had but to threaten Ramona with exposure, and she would be obliged to do as he wished. It was essential to success, however, that Ormiston should not be apprised of the state of affairs, at least not until there had been time to carry out his intentions. Mistress Devereux, in her haste, seemed bent upon robbing him of his opportunity. "What business?" he repeated blandly.

"To see the Firebrand, of course, and tell him what has been going on, during his absence," the woman snarled. "Do you think I would miss so fair a chance for revenge? The jade has laughed at me once too often. Where is he, Portugee?"

"Aboard ship," the latter lied glibly. "He is weary, after the voyage, and would sleep. Go you to the quay and find a boat. The vessel lies five cable lengths on shore, to the south. He will waken quickly enough, by my soul, when you tell him the news."

The woman thanked him and hurried off through the darkness. Portugee, with a malicious grin, took himself off with all speed in the opposite direction. Within a few moments he was making rapid progress along the old Spanish Road.

Matters, however, turned out differently from what he had expected. Scarcely had he left the town, when Ormiston and his companion appeared from the Turk's Head amidst a crackle of laughter, and set off in a like direction. The Firebrand had wearied of the poor sport of the taverns. A woman, drinking with them, had by a chance remark aroused within him vague suspicions. "A pity, by my faith," she had laughed, "that the Mistress Ramona must sleep alone." The remark had been made in jest, but Ormiston fancied he detected beneath the woman's laughter a sneer. Nothing would do but that Tench and the others should accompany him to the house, there to drink a parting round before he betook himself to his bed. They agreed, unwillingly enough, but experience had taught them that it was not well to oppose their leader, when he was in his drunken humours.

Mistress Devereux, meanwhile, had made her way with all speed to the water front. It took her a long time to find a boat. At last she managed to arouse a sleepy negro boatman, and ordered him to take her out to Ormiston's ship.

They wasted much time searching for it. The night was overcast, and the surface of the water dark and covered with mist. When she at last returned to the shore with the information that Ormiston and his men were in the town, she cursed the Portugee roundly for having sent her on a fool's errand.

It was on the quay that she came across two shadowy figures in black. Some faint streaks of light in the east enabled her to discover who they were. A sardonic smile curled her heavy lips. She went up to the two men and addressed them.

"You are Puritans, are you not?" she asked.

The two looked at her askance.

"We be honest servants of the Lord," the foremost of the men replied, "nor have we inclination for traffic with harlots."

Mistress Devereux laughed quite mirthlessly.

"My own inclination is no more keen," she retorted, sourly. "I would speak with you concerning a different matter. Do you seek news of a young man who was with you when you came here before?"

"We do," the two men replied in a breath. "Know you aught of him? We fear greatly that he has been foully dealt with, yet we do not wish to return to our country without some sure knowledge of his fate. For that reason have we but now returned from The Havana."

Mistress Devereux regarded them with a hard smile.

"He is well enough, I'll warrant you," she said. "Making a soft nest for himself in the arms of a woman."

"A woman! God forbid."

"'Tis the truth, by our Lady! Ever since you sailed, has he lain at the house of one Ramona de Lara, the woman of him we call The Firebrand. Mayhap you know the place, two miles out, along the Old Spanish Road."

"Know it! Have we not been there? The lying wench swore to us that she knew nothing."

"Even so. Yet you will find him in her arms. I wish you a safe journey." With a smile of malice she turned away and made all haste to the Turk's Head.

Here she found Tench and his companions, who had by now returned from their unwilling expedition with Ormsiton. The Portugee, too, was with them, in a sour temper. Without doubt, he reasoned, both Ramona and her lover were dead, unless The Firebrand had decided to reserve them for a death more unkind than that of the sword. The thought that his dreams were over sent him muttering to his cups. Of Barton's presence in the house he said nothing. In truth he would not have been sorry, had the morning proved that the Puritan could also handle a sword.

When Mistress Devereux demanded Ormiston's whereabouts, Tench informed her, sourly enough, that they had but now returned from escorting him to his house. She was astonished beyond measure. If Barton was with Ramona, as she felt certain he must be, why had not his presence been discovered. Was it possible that he had concealed himself until Ormiston's companions had gone, so that he might dispose of the latter when he slept? She burst out all at once with her news.

"The Firebrand's woman has had a Puritan sailor beneath her roof these three weeks. He is there now."

Tench gave a grunt of disbelief.

"We saw no one," he muttered. "Is this some idle gossip of a jealous woman?"

"It is the truth," she protested hotly. "I saw the fellow myself, this very night. If you do not believe me, come and see for yourselves. You have left The Firebrand in grave danger. Even now, he may have been done to his death."

"I'll warrant Bull Ormiston is able to take care of himself," Tench retorted. He had no inclination to again make the long journey out the Old Spanish Road.

"In fair fight — yes," the woman cried, "but what could he do against treachery. Once asleep, they will murder him, of that be sure. I am going straightway to see what has occurred. Who values the life of his captain will come with me."

They staggered out after her, moved by her words. Portuguese Joe went with them. He scarcely shared Mistress Devereux's fears, but consoled himself with the thought that Ormiston's death would be, to him at least, by no means a matter for regret.

CHAPTER XIV.

A gray and desolate silence filled the great room. Ramona de Lara, crouching pitifully against the wall, was no longer conscious of the passage of time. Ages seemed to have elapsed, since Barton left her, although in truth he had scarcely passed beyond the threshold of the door.

In her heart desolaton reigned. She believed that love, which so short a time before had illuminated her whole being with its glory, had now departed forever. Ahead of her she saw but death, or the covetous arms of Portuguese Joe, thought of which made even death seem welcome.

Barton, his face like flint, turned from the woman he loved only to find that with each passing moment his footsteps faltered, as though some bond, invisible, intangible, yet stronger than material things, held him back, drew him once more toward that which had been the chief desire of his heart. As he descended the steps of the house and staggered toward the gateway in the wall, he seemed to be straining against some mighty force, that bade him turn and comfort the woman who had placed her soul in his keeping. At the gate he hesitated. The thought that he would never see her again, after this moment, became well-nigh unendurable, yet what could it avail either of them that he should turn back now.

She on her part, recognizing the inevitable, facing it with blind courage, still longed to see him once more, before he should become to her for all time only a memory. She groped her way toward the door, struggling to her feet with desperate energy. It seemed inevitable that she must be too late.

As she reached the stone steps that led down to the garden she caught sight of him, supporting himself by one of the posts of the gate, his haggard face turned toward her as though seeking some last message of farewell.

There was a pearly clearness to the sky, a soft yet vivid brilliance that presaged the quick coming of the dawn. In the garden the gray mists were gone, although they clung wisp-like to the low-growing foliage down the hillside, and lay heavy along the distant beach. It seemed to her that these mists of doubt, rolling dense through the valley below, no longer encompassed them. They stood almost in the sunshine, surrounded by the clear radiance of the dawn. A ray of light broke through the palm fronds to the left and struck full upon Barton's face. The agony she saw there hurt her more cruelly than even her own wounds.

"John!" she called, very slowly, and clutched the scarlet cloak about her breast. "John!"

He did not answer her at first, and his eyes, when they sought hers, seemed those of a man in a dream. Presently she heard his voice, very low, filled with a great longing.

"What do you want with me — now?" he asked.

She scarcely knew what to say to this. Words seemed so pitifully inadequate. She crept down the steps and went toward him.

"You—you are going away?" she whispered, then grew silent at the absurdity of her question.

"Is it not better so?" he said.

"You—you hate me?" The thought caused her the most poignant suffering. Even now, she could not feel that she deserved his hatred.

"What have I to do with hate—or love—or with you?" he demanded. In spite of the longing of his heart, the Puritan within him rose incessantly to the surface. In the scarlet cloak, she appeared to his outraged sensibilities a fallen woman, a wickedly crimson blot against the purity of the morning.

"Have you no pity?" she whispered, her arms trembling toward him.

"Ay; naught but pity. But we spoke of love." He turned from her, his face quivering. "Love!" there was a hideous note of mockery in his voice. "Such as you, to talk of love! A light woman, Mistress of a cutthroat—plaything of a drunken buccaneer. Love!" His voice rose hight in tremulous indignation. Of her past he knew nothing. She was but what he had seen her to be—a courtesan, who had attempted to palm herself off on him as an honest woman. That she had so lied to him hurt him most of all.

"John—John," she cried. "Judge me not."

"God forbid! Let Him do that." Once more he made as though to leave her, and still the bond between them held him faltering within the gate.

"Ah—stay but a little while, and hear me. There are things that you should know——"

"Do I not already know enough?"

"Do you then think me nothing more than the light-o'-love of that poor thing lying so silent in there?" She pointed toward the door of the house. "Do you think that, John?"

"Were you not his mistress?" His voice was very bitter, very stern.

"Ah—no—no. Betetr than that. His slave."

"What matters it? I thought you an honest woman. Have you not lied to me enough?" He turned from her with a gesture of impatience.

"Wait—wait—just a little while. See!" She came very close to him and touched his arm, then pointed to the eastern horizon. A great blaze of crimson and gold flashed toward the zenith. "The sun is barely risen, and the night was all I had—all—I—had. Her voice choked with sobs.

"What can it profit either of us that I should stay?"

"Ah—John—John—you do not understand."

"What is there to understand? You were his mistress." Suddenly a new thought came to him. How long have you lived with this man?" he asked.

"Two years." She told him the truth, her voice very dull with shame.

"Two years! Almighty God!"

"Two eternities, since he killed my father, and brought me here—a slave."

"He killed your father?" The thought filled him with sudden pity.

"Yes. Don Francisco de Lara, of Seville. He had been made governor of Porto Bello by the king. We sailed from Cadiz, on The Rio del Oro. I was so happy—ah—so happy——"

"Why tell me this?" he interrupted hoarsely, as though unwilling to admit the sympathy he found swelling in his heart.

Expert Testimony.

To speak distinctly and directly into the mouthpiece—

AN eminent telephone man of 30 years' experience says that this is the great need in telephoning. Over half the service difficulties would disappear if distinct and direct speaking were practised.

¶ To speak towards your telephone from a yard or so away, or to speak across it means bad transmission—often wrong numbers, misunderstanding and annoyance.

¶ You can help the service, avoid wrong numbers, misunderstanding and annoyance, by speaking distinctly, and directly into the mouthpiece, with the lips about half an inch from its rim.

"Good service * * * our true intent."

Country Children.

Alice Freeman Palmer, the far famed president of Wellesley college, grew up as a farmer's daughter. In after years it is said that she was always sorry for children who do not grow up with the sights and sounds of the country. "One is very near to all the simple, real things of life on a farm," she used to say. "There is a dewy freshness about the early out of door experiences and a warm wholesomeness about tasks that are a part of the common lot. A country child develops, too, a responsibility—a power to do and to contrive—that the city child, who sees everything come ready to hand from a nearby store, cannot possibly gain. However much some of my friends may deplore my own early struggle with poverty and hard work, I can heartily echo George Eliot's boast:

But were another childhood world my share,
I would be born a little sister there.

—St. Nicholas.

Origin of Chalk.

Deposits of chalk are found on some shores of the sea. A piece of chalk, such as the teacher uses to illustrate something on the blackboard at school, consists of the remains of thousands of tiny creatures that at one time lived in the sea. All of their bodies excepting the chalk—called carbonate of lime in scientific language—has disappeared, and the chalk that was left was piled up where it fell at the bottom of the ocean, each particle pressing against the other with the water pressing over it all, until it became almost solid. It took thousands of years to make these chalk deposits of the thickness in which they are found, says the "Book of Wonders." Later on, through changes in the earth's surface, the mountain of chalk was raised until it stood out of the water and thus became accessible to mankind, including schoolteachers.

Clique Rules Russia.

The executive government of Prussia is wholly in the hands of the king, whose council of ministers is appointed by royal decree. The Prussian law-making body has two chambers, the upper one of which is made up of royal princes, territorial nobility, and a number of magnates named by the king, with a few burgomasters of large cities. The lower house, which has 413 members, is elected by the great body of Prussian citizens above the age of twenty-five, on the now famous three-class system. Those who pay the highest taxes to the total extent of one-third of all the taxes paid constitute the first class and exercise one-third of the electoral power. Those whose taxes in the aggregate constitute a second amount equal to a third of the whole form the voters of the second class, and they in turn have a third of the voting power. All the rest of the citizens who pay taxes constitute the third class. The first and second classes, made up of the large taxpayers and constituting perhaps 15 per cent. of the entire number of voters, have twice as much political power as the remaining 85 per cent. of the voters. Thus, as we have previously stated, a voter of the first class in Berlin has fifty times as much political power as a voter of the third class. In the Essen district, where the Krupp works are located, it is within bounds to say that one voter of the first class has as much voting power as fifty thousand voters of the third class.—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Review of Reviews.

How to Make "Filet Fringe"

Fig. 1. Filet loops mounted on the linen thread.

THIS filet fringe is intended to trim the lower edge of window shades or draped curtains or for the covers of the backs of chairs or automobile cushions.

Fig. 2. Work half finished.

It is also employed to finish the lower edges of lampshades and edges of table covers.

There are a great variety of such fringes.

This is a very simple one that any one can make.

To start this fringe use a piece of stout linen thread corresponding to the length of the piece desired. Attach this to two nails this distance apart, so you can work on it without having to hold it. Work over this thread the number of loops to correspond to the length of the desired fringe. (See Fig. 1.)

When you have got to the end of the thread—the length of the fringe—you take out the mesh needle and go in the opposite direction, working in each of the loops of the first row. Then continue in the same manner for the other rows. (See Fig. 2.)

After having made four rows, you use for the fifth—which is the last row—a mesh needle which is a little larger, so that the loop will be larger to knot the fringe through. (See Fig. 3.)

When this row is terminated you prepare a cluster of six threads for the fringe for each loop. The length, of course, should be double the length desired.

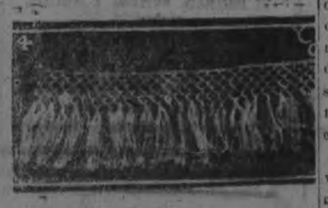

Fig. 4. Finished fringe.

Then you double over these threads and pass them through the loops from the exterior to the interior, until the two ends are of equal length, after you have made a knot. (See Fig. 3.)

As soon as the fringe is all placed run the mesh needle through the top row of loops, stretch the lace on a table, comb out the fringe and take a pair of scissors and even off the lower edges. (See Fig. 4, the finished fringe.)

Novel Notes.

The introduction of colored velveteen for coats as a substitute for the expensive silk sweater lowers the price of one open air garment when it is not made by an expensive tailor. Velveteen has suddenly leaped into the summer fashion along with the new autumn hats. It is frequently chosen in green, lapis lazuli, blue, burnt orange and black. Its summer use is not confined to sport coats; it is worn by smart women for sport skirts.

Fine Turkish towelling has recently been admitted into fashion. Ingenious women have found out that the bathroom can be robbed for the tennis court. Two extra large towels with a good looking colored border serve for a blouse with elbow sleeves and a colored cotton sash. This makes a more commendable sport garment than linen, voile or silk.

Scarfs and collarettes of tulle in maroon, beige and all colors are now worn with thin frocks. Purely decorative are most of these airy trifles, which are altogether transparent, forming a sort of cloudy frame for the face. Half ruche, half collar, with picturesque floating ends, these bits of tulle are more than worth their weight in gold. Very effective is a cache-nez of vivid red crepe heavily embroidered with gold thread. It is worn with a white frock.

Economics in Food Being Taught on Special Trains by Experts

No. 1—Studying the Use of the Drier.
No. 2—A Lecture on Food Values and Economics.
No. 3—Interior of Exhibition Car.

THESE "food trains" which bear the gospel of food economy and preservation to the people of the country are a familiar sight these days. The railroads of the United States are doing their "bit" in giving the use of special cars to aid in the good cause. The writer recently happened to come across one of these "food specials." She found the demonstrator and her assistant doing up their luncheon dishes and making various and sundry preparations for the afternoon. Both looked real homy, especially the head demonstrator, in her calico kitchen gown. The early comer beamed at her and tried conversation, but with scant success.

"Let's get the dishes washed," said the demonstrator to her assistant. The early comer liked her businesslike way and made a mental note that she was a good housekeeper. She had just the right snap, not exactly cross, but the domestic step-lively air without which no house can be well run. She sliced a beet deftly and the visitor, having copied a recipe about boiled salad dressing, let her eye rest on the admonitory motto, "Make economy fashionable."

"What are you going to demonstrate today?" she asked.

"Peas and huckleberries, one vegetable and one fruit."

"Is that all?"

"Yes, for the canning. I may give a few dishes besides."

"I think I'd better dress, some one else might be coming," said the assistant apprehensively. "I'll shell the peas afterward."

She disappeared to her boudoir somewhere at the end of the car and the demonstrator deftly peeled and piled and placed things on her little counter and in an ice box, keeping an eye meanwhile on the kettle boiling on the stove behind her. "You can look at the canned things in the next car," she said pointedly to the visitor, who met at the door the next contingent of ladies seeking light on the abstruse mysteries of putting up.

Don't Be a Drudge

HOUSEWORK, with its ceaseless, humdrum duties, often causes a woman to "go to seed," to become listless and indifferent to both her personal appearance and what is going on around her. She fails to make her work agreeable, to keep her mind freshened and alert. The successful girl or woman in the business world realizes the importance of keeping her mind brightened and of doing her work in such a way that it will come easier. The result is each day is met with the right thought, the work is done systematically and the worker herself becomes more capable—better fitted to meet the unexpected demands that every little while come up.

"We are not all fitted for housework," we say apologetically; "that is why so many of us are failures at it." There is, of course, some truth in this. Indeed, we are not all fitted for housework but every woman knows that when she assumes the management of a home she, and she alone, is responsible for the success or failure of the work in that home.

Drudgery of Housework.

We hear a lot about the "drudgery" of housework, but if women would only study up on it housework would not seem as distasteful as many women seem to think it is. In these days of labor saving devices it seems incredible that women will worry along in the old way of doing things. Tell a woman whose shoulders have become bent from broom sweeping that a carpet sweeper will do the work better and easier and you will not be thanked for your trouble. She will cling to the broom, meanwhile bemoaning the fact that her work is "never done." The old fashioned cook and her coal stove have been lauded sky high, but the delicious meals prepared these days in the fireless cooker have the oldtime cook and her coal fire beaten a dozen different ways.

The woman who has become a household drudge has only herself to blame. No man likes to see his wife in that rôle. Any woman who can read can make her housework easier and do it better. Take, for instance, the splendid household articles published each evening in the papers. Cooking, sewing, caring for babies, the general work of the house—all subjects that interest the average woman—are handled in such a way that every one of us can learn a lot from them.

The banker, lawyer in fact, every professional and business man reads up on his particular work. Why cannot women see the logic of reading up on their household needs? The wife, the mother in her home, has been intrusted with a greater work than the most successful lawyer or banker in the world.

APPRECIATE THE SMALL PLEASURES

"TAKE Joy home with you and cherish her," is the refrain from an old song, which might well be the text for living with some of us. For we must cherish Joy if we would keep her with us. She is quickly gone unless given a cordial welcome.

It is one of the hardest lessons life has for us, that of cultivating gladness. We are so prone to think that Joy comes only by way of the highroad and the gilded coach, when, on the contrary, ofttimes one may find her in some simple country lane, sweet with the fragrance of mown grass from the harvest, or behind a plodding steed, or even, it may be, in the crowded streets of a great city.

After all, what is joy if not the capacity for enjoyment? Without this one may find no pleasure in anything, however beautiful or wonderful it may be.

Real Happiness.

It is the little things that we must learn to enjoy if we would find real happiness in life. There are so few big moments. Life is so made up, in its very warp and woof, of the trivial that, unless we learn to find our happiness in the small doings of each day, we shall go beggars for the "oil of gladness."

It is just as impossible to do a task well and not to be conscious of a sense of achievement as it is to slight a job and not have a twinge of dissatisfaction.

We may call this conscience, or sense of duty, or whatever we choose, but when all is said and done it is nothing more than the inevitable reaction, which is pleasant or unpleasant, according to the accomplishment.

We all enjoy the wonders of travel, good music, good books, good food, good company, but unless we cultivate the habit of enjoying the little things, the daily trifles, we must inevitably miss much of the pleasure of life.

It has been said that no one enjoys life so much as the people who are neither rich nor poor, for the poor lack opportunity and the rich are satiated with what opportunity too frequently has offered them.

However that may be, it is certainly true that we who make up the class of neither very rich nor very poor are most fortunate in America to-day.

For us the theatres offer endless attraction at little cost an evening, pictures from the world's end, music by many of the best artists, travel scenes from every corner of the earth, history in making—all these for a merely nominal sum, with no expense of rich toilette or cab hire, no obligation except to enjoy the pleasures which have been provided.

For us, too, the great libraries of the world have been built, and here we may hold comradeship with men and women of all nations—the brightest minds of the world—meeting them without timidity from between the covers of a book.

Modern Advantages.

For us are the parks and the museums and the thousands of other things in which the city takes pride. The song and the sunshine and the glory of living are ours. There is no excuse for any one to be bereft of the joy of living.

But these are of little account unless we have the power of enjoyment. If you have not this, "take Joy home with you and cherish her."

You will find her a worthy companion, for she will strike hands with you in dark hours of the night and make days of sadness sweeter for her coming.

For joy is, after all, the appreciation of the wonderful world in which we live.

WINNING THE WAR WITH SUBSTITUTES

WHEAT BREAD has always been such a matter of course article on the family bill of fare that its familiarity has, perhaps, bred contempt for its value.

Never until recently have most of us realized how very important wheat is as a food, and how very precious.

Nothing is just as it was before the world conflict, and now the once humble wheat is taking on an exalted value because of its threatened scarcity.

Food for Our Soldiers.

Our soldiers and those of our allies must be well fed in order to fight well.

Not one of us who would not gladly give a quarter loaf of bread to any soldier who came to our door and asked for it.

And yet, although they may not be asking for it in such a manner, they need it badly just the same.

Every housewife among us can do her share to prevent the men who are fighting for us from going hungry.

You ask how?

Simply by reducing our national habit of using all wheat flour in bread making to a three-fourths quota and substituting for the other fourth some other kind of flour.

Thus we can release one-fourth of our wheat supply for shipment abroad and also treat our families to new and appetizing breads, which will be just as nutritious as our accustomed white loaves, or even more so.

The most sane way to go about this is for every woman to use as her substitute that which is the least expensive and the most plentiful in her locality. For instance, the Southern housewife would have at her command the sweet potato.

Corn is probably the most important of all substitutes. It is practically a universal crop and available in almost any part of the United States.

"For health's sake eat corn," was once the slogan, and now is added, "and for national economy."

Rice, a common and fairly cheap foodstuff, is another splendid wheat substitute. It may be used either ground into meal or boiled and added to the flour in bread making.

Some of our leftover potatoes we could use very advantageously as the one-fourth substitute. They make very delicious bread, as most farmers' wives can tell you.

The woman of the South has a treasure in the humble peanut, which is just becoming recognized as one of the most nutritive of foods.

Bread made entirely or partly of rye is extremely wholesome, although the all rye bread is black and not so attractive looking, perhaps.

Bran is healthful and a body regulator, and the bread most nourishing when used in correct quantities.

In Place of Wheat.

Perhaps because it is so common the white bean is shamefully neglected. But when ground it offers a splendid meal to combine with flour.

Buckwheat can be quite as successfully made into bread as into pancakes.

The soy bean is a Southern crop which is just coming into its own. The soy and the dasheen, another way down South product, can be used as is the potato in bread.

Chestnuts, dried peas and dried bananas have all been proved good bread ingredients.

Remember, every cupful of a wheat substitute sets free a cupful of wheat for our men "over there."

Successful Wives

IT is one of the oddest things in the world, if you stop to consider it, that if a woman is going to follow a profession or an artistic career she is given long years of careful study in preparation, and yet thousands of girls embark yearly on the greatest of all careers, wifehood and motherhood, without the slightest knowledge of the simplest rules of housekeeping.

The average girl marries and takes up housekeeping without ever having had any experience in cooking, in ordering for a home or in keeping household accounts.

In blissful ignorance of the problems before her, she takes up the rôle of housekeeper, totally unprepared and untrained in any one of the innumerable branches of domestic science.

Efficient Housekeeping.

After a month she begins to realize that there is more to the task she has undertaken than she had ever dreamed of.

The problem of ordering alone is an insoluble mystery to her, for, without knowing one cut from another, she finds herself paying good prices for the toughest meats. The butchers invariably take advantage of her ignorance and charge her porterhouse steak prices for the toughest of round steaks.

Then cooking each meal presents vast, unexplored regions to her dazed mind. A dinner means all sorts of complications to the uninitiated, and the young wife, inexperienced in the simplest forms of culinary art, finds that her knowledge of making "delicious fudge" does her very little good in preparing a broiled steak, a roast chicken or a breaded fried fish.

She serves such uneatable meals, as a rule, that the young husband must needs exert every atom of his patience to refrain from caustic remarks.

Even the deepest affection is not proof against indigestion, and the fresh bloom of their married love is soon worn off by the constant preparation of unappetizing and unnourishing meals.

When the young husband, driven to the point of exasperation, complains of some particularly unpalatable mess the young wife takes refuge in tears.

He, of course, lays the blame at her door when he cannot eat the meals she prepares, while she, on her side, does not know which way to turn, in search of the solutions to the many strange problems which confront her.

In reality the husband should not blame his wife for her ignorance. He must go further back if he wishes to find the real culprit.

What was her mother thinking of that she gave her daughter no training for the biggest career a woman can have?

You mothers who have growing daughters should see to it that your girls are as carefully prepared in the domestic sciences as they would be in medicine, law or music, if they should choose to follow any of these as a career.

You would certainly not expect your child to play the piano or violin if she had never been taught. You know perfectly well that she could not possibly practice law or medicine without the foundation of a good many years of serious study.

And yet you seem to think that your girl can go into her own home without training of any sort to fit her for the responsibilities of housekeeping.

You and her husband both expect that without any particular experience she shall maintain a beautifully managed home. And it is impossible, quite impossible.

Self-Reliance.

GIRLS who learn to think and act for themselves may at times find life hard and wearisome, but such young women always develop into strong, worthwhile characters.

Of course it must be delightful to be waited upon and to have our every wish anticipated and provided for, but there comes a time in every one's life when he or she must stand alone, when those who thought and acted for us are no longer at hand, and when friends—true friends—seem few and far away.

Dependents.

To be able to face such a trying situation coolly will in nine cases out of ten result in one's overcoming the trial or difficulty, whatever it may be. But the person who has never learned to stand alone, who has always been waited upon, will, unless some wonderful fairy godmother suddenly comes to his or her assistance, fail utterly in meeting the test.

Every growing boy and girl should be taught to help himself and herself. The youth whose mother is constantly waiting upon him never shows the least appreciation for all this solicitude, but, on the other hand, in the majority of cases, develops into a downright selfish, egotistical young person.

The business girl who doesn't learn to use her brain—to think and act for herself—will soon find out that those around her will not do this work for her. She must rely upon herself—she must swim or sink. The average person has all he or she can do to hoe his or her own row, and the dependent one will find anything but smooth sailing on the sea of life.

True, we are not all clever. We cannot see into this or that problem with the promptness and ease of man we know, but if some difficulty faces us common sense tells us that we should do our level best to learn something about it, to map out ways or means to overcome it.

Making an honest effort to play our part without the prompting of another will assuredly help us, even though we do not attain a brilliant victory. Others around us may, once in a while, try to help us in different ways, but we should learn to rely upon ourselves, especially in times of trial or difficulty.

The working girl or woman who accepts each day as it comes, taking its unpleasant and trying features with a good grace, usually feels, when business hours are over, better and stronger for the experience.

She doesn't boast about her accomplishments, for she, capable and efficient, knows there is still a lot to learn, but the knowledge that she tried her best to overcome the situation buoys her up, and she wouldn't be human if she didn't feel a wee bit glad.

If we could be spared the many trials that humanity is heir to probably there would be a golden sheen over things in general, but the person isn't living who, having mastered some setback or difficulty, ever regretted the experience.

Those of us who have struggled for hours trying to get a balance where our work wouldn't balance and then suddenly captured the elusive figure, felt for the wonderful, brief, victorious minute that all our efforts were indeed worth while.

Master of Your Fate.

So we must not give up. If things go wrong now and then, and they surely will—for as human beings we cannot hope to escape the cares and burdens of the day—we must not run away from them with a sigh, but, on the other hand, must bravely try to smile and strike right at the heart of our difficulty. Calling on some one to help us will only mean that we shall recede in ability and never have the right faith in ourselves.

French Dinner

WE have been accustomed to regard French dinners as extravagant. That is because we know them only as they are served by imported French chefs.

Try this one little French dinner:—
Consommé d'Herbes.
Boeuf Vinaigrette.
Soufflé au Chocolat.

Consommé d'Herbes.—Use the water in which the beef for the boeuf vinaigrette is boiled for the consommé, adding to it, if necessary, water enough to make five cupfuls of liquid. Put in a bunch of sweet herbs, pepper and salt, bring to a boil and allow to simmer for a few minutes. Just before serving add a tablespoonful of tomato catsup.

Boeuf Vinaigrette.—Boil about three pounds of beef and when done cut two thick slices from it, putting the remainder away for another meal. Place the slices in a saucepan with a bayleaf, three cloves, a tiny bit of mace, salt and pepper and a wineglassful of white wine. Simmer till the liquid is half absorbed, turning the meat frequently. Serve garnished with parsley and with a sauce made from the liquor remaining, strained and seasoned with a dash of vinegar. This dish is equally good cold.

Soufflé au Chocolat.—Make smooth in a saucepan a dessertspoonful of cornstarch with a gill of milk, then add two ounces of castor sugar and an ounce of butter. Stir till the mixture boils, then add a tablespoonful of made coffee and a tablespoonful of sherry. Allow to cool. When cool stir in an ounce of grated chocolate and the yolks of two eggs. When smooth mix in the whites of the eggs beaten to a froth. Pour into a buttered baking dish and bake thirty minutes in a medium oven.

NO HEAT WASTED

You get every bit of heat from every drop of fuel that you put into the Perfection Oil Heater.

The heat begins with the touch of a match. There's no waiting for a fire to get under way. No fuel wasted. Then, when you've had warmth enough, you turn the Perfection out. Again, no fuel wasted. It's heat concentrated, used only where and when needed. For best results use ROYALITE COAL OIL.

Cheaper than coal or wood even when these are cheap. At hardware, furniture and department stores.

IS YOUR HEALTH WORTH $5.00?

Woman Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health.

Lima, Ohio.—"I was all broken down in health from a displacement. One of my lady friends came to see me and she advised me to commence taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I began taking your remedies and took $5.00 worth and in two months was a well woman after three doctors said I never would stand up straight again. I was a midwife for seven years and I recommended the Vegetable Compound to every woman to take before birth and afterwards, and they all got along so nicely that it surely is a godsend to suffering women. If women wish to write to me I will be delighted to answer them." —Mrs. JENNIE MOYER, 342 E. North St., Lima, Ohio.

Women who suffer from displacements, weakness, irregularities, nervousness, backache or bearing-down pains, need the tonic-strengthening properties of the roots and herbs contained in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Making Pen-Nibs.

The steel for pen-nibs is cut into ribbons as wide as the length of one pen, and these are fed to machines which cut out the blanks, then shape them, split the points, and place the maker's name on the backs. The pens are then complete except for the annealing, which is a process of heating the metal almost to the melting point and then cooling it suddenly to render it tough. After being annealed the pens are counted and placed in boxes. A machine has been invented for performing both the latter operations.

Perforation of Stamps.

The perforation of stamps was first commenced in England in 1853, for receipt and draft stamps, and for postage-stamps in 1854. Prior to that period stamps were separated by means of scissors, or a knife, or similar means, and in some cases those who required many resorted to the use of a roulette, a kind of cog wheel furnished with small cutters making a series of cuts between the stamps.

Volhynia Has Large Population

THE retreat of the Russian armies out of Galicia and Bukowina opened up not only the gates to Podolia and Bessarabia, but, also exposed the southern part of Volhynia to invasion. Volhynia lies immediately east of Poland proper and Galicia. A broad, flat spur of the Carpathians sweeps across the Galician boundary and forms a plateau in the southern part, which reaches a maximum elevation of 1,200 feet and slopes gradually toward the marshes of Pinsk and the Pripet River. This part of the province is hilly and intersected by deep river valleys, the chief river being the western Bug.

Forests cover a considerable part of the area, and are exploited on a large scale, timber being extensively exported in normal times. The population of Volhynia is approximately 4,000,000. More than three-fourths of the inhabitants are Little Russians, the other elements being White and Great Russians, Poles, Jews and Germans. The conditions of peasant ownership of land are somewhat different from those obtained in other parts of Russia, the peasants owning approximately one-half. About 42 per cent. of the land is in the hands of private owners. Many Germans live on lands bought from the Russian Government.

In the northern portion of the province there is little farming land, more than 50 per cent. of the territory being occupied by virgin forests, but in the southern part there is a considerable agricultural industry. It is said that the productive capacity of the southern region is approximately 80,000,000 bushels of cereals alone. In the northern section timber and firewood are exported in large quantities, together with much pitch, tar, wooden wares, etc. Deposits of lignite and coal with some graphite and kaolin are to be found. The manufacturing industries of Volhynia include sugar works, distilleries, textile mills, and candle, tobacco, glass, cloth, and agricultural implement factories.

There are a number of railroads in Volhynia, one crossing it from Warsaw to Kiev, another from Lemberg to Petrograd, and a third from Konigsburg toward Odessa. The first glimpse that history reveals of the province shows Slavs dwelling there. From the 9th century, the towns of Volhynia-Vladimir, Ovruteh, Lutsk, and Duvno—were ruled by descendants of the great Scandinavian chief, Rurik the Red and Volhynia remained independent until the 14th century. Then it fell into the hands of Lithuania, only to be annexed to Poland in 1569, and finally to pass to Russia upon the last partition of the Polish empire.

Volhynia lies within what is known as West Russia as distinguished from Little Russia and South Russia lying to the south, and Great Russia which lies some hundred miles to the east. It would properly have to be entirely conquered before a line of communication into Bessarabia and Podolia would be free from the danger of being broken by an even partially rehabilitated Russian army. The conquest of Volhynia by Germany and a successful drive on Odessa would serve to shorten the eastern battle-front by several hundred miles, giving an almost straight line from the southern shore of the gulf of Riga to the northernmost waters of the Black Sea. At present the line zigzags its way from Riga to the lower Carpathians and then follows these mountains down the border of Moldavia, thence east, by way of Focshani and Galatz to the Danube and the Black sea. The air line distance of a battle front between Riga and Odessa would be 75 miles. The eastern front as of August 10th was approximately 950 miles long.

The effort of the Austro-Germans to take advantage of Russian inaction and thus to shorten their battle line, while at the same time trying to possess themselves of the rich agriculture provinces of south-western Russia will probably constitute one of the most thrilling and far-reaching campaigns of the war. With Russia rehabilitated the tenuous line of communications involved would probably insure the defeat of such a drive.

The Making of Walking-Sticks.

Heat is a very important element in the manipulations of a stick-maker, and produces very different effects on the several kinds of woods, the degree of heat necessary to straighten one kind of stick being often sufficient to completely spoil another kind. The same power which makes a crooked stick straight is applied to make a straight one crooked. The rigid stems of bamboos, partridge-canes, as well as all the various kinds of English sticks which are required to be curled or twisted, are by the application of heat made to assume almost any shape or form. Thus we sometimes see ladies' sunshade-handles especially those of bamboo or partridge-cane, twisted, and even tied into double knots.

Junkman's Paradise.

The Somme battlefield is described as "a veritable junkman's paradise." Mountains of wine bottles are piled high along the roads and in the billets formerly occupied by German officers. These bottles are worth 25 to 30 cents each. Old iron, steel, and lead are being permitted to rust, with no attempt to salvage it, because the advancing Allies can not spare the time and men. Thousands of miles of barbed wire are intact, not even rusted.

"One Meatless Meal a Day" is a good food slogan for war time, or any time—better make it two meatless meals a day—it would mean health and strength for the nation. But be sure and get the right substitute for meat in a digestible form. Shredded Wheat Biscuit is the ideal substitute for meat. It is 100 per cent. whole wheat prepared in a digestible form. Two or three of these little loaves of baked whole wheat make a nourishing, satisfying meal at a cost of only a few cents. Delicious with milk or cream or fruits of any kind.

Philippine Fruits.

There have been found in the Philippines two fruits entirely unknown to Europe and even to America. One of these is the durian, which grows on a lofty tree somewhat resembling an elm, is about as large as a cocoanut, has a shiny shell and contains a creamy pulp which combines some of the flavors of delicious custard with those of a fine cheese. American soldiers in the Philippines have dubbed the durian the "vegetable limburger." The other rare fruit is the mangosteen; but the exquisitely flavored liquid it contains has not yet been successfully preserved for shipping abroad.

The Dead Sea.

The name of "Dead Sea" occurs nowhere in the Bible. This name does not appear to have existed until the second century after Christ. In the Old Testament this body of water is called the Salt Sea and the Sea of the Plain.

AN OLD RECIPE TO DARKEN HAIR

Sage Tea and Sulphur Turns Gray, Faded Hair Dark and Glossy

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle of this old time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients at very little cost. Every body uses this preparation now, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

First Artesian Well.

The first artesian well to be bored in Europe of which data are available is the tube well at Grenelle in France, which was sunk by the French Government between 183 and 1841 in the hope of obtaining a sufficient supply of water for Paris The depth is one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight feet, at which level a prolific supply of water was reached, giving an overflow at the surface of six hundred gallons per minute.

RABBIT SKIN TRADE.

It is Greater Than That in All Other Furs.

Many Canadians will be interested to know that the demand for rabbit fur is such as to make it pay to save the pelts of domestic rabbits killed for food, but that raising rabbits for the fur alone would be unprofitable with any known breed. Some facts about the trade in rabbit skins will be of interest in this connection.

More skins of rabbits are collected and sold annually than of all other fur animals combined. Before the present war, Great Britain imported each year from 70,000,000 to 90,000,000 skins, while the home production added 30,000,000 more. The imported supply came from Australia and the nearer European countries. France, Belgium, Germany, the United States, and other countries also use large quantities of this fur. The bulk of it is sold in bales, bringing from 10 cents to 50 cents a pound, dependent on color and quality. The better class of skins sell by the dozen, bringing from 50 cents to $1, that is, less than 10 cents each.

Baled rabbit furs are bought largely for felting purposes, the fur being made into cloth or coarse hats, while the skins are utilized for manufacturing glue. Fine hats are made of nutria (the fur of the South American copyu). The fur of the common wild rabbits of America does not felt well and is in slight demand. Whole skins of these animals seldom sell for more than one or two cents each.

The better kinds of rabbit skins are used for making fur garments, which when made up are commonly sold as "cony," but often under other trade names. White skins are made up in imitation of Arctic fox, or, sheared, in imitation of ermine. Gray rabbits are dyed brown or black and become "Baltic black fox" or "Baltic brown fox"; seal-dyed, they become "inland seal," "electric seal," "coast seal" or "near-seal." Reputable furriers avoid such names, or, if they use them, frankly explain that the goods are cony or rabbit. These garments, while handsome and comfortable, have little durability and are therefore cheap.

Statements to the effect that certain breeds of rabbits produce pelts of high market value are unwarranted. The long-haired breeds, such as the Angora and the Siberian (both white animals) have poor pelts and the hairs are not well set in the skins. The short-haired varieties are much alike as to strength of pelts, but vary considerably in color. The English black and white has striking colors that might appeal to the fancy of individual wearers of fur garments, but they are not popular in the fur trade. Skins of piebald rabbits of any shade sell for less than those of solid colors. There is also a difference in quality of fur between hutch rabbits and those kept in the open, the latter having the better pelts.

Besides exaggerated statements as to value of fur, advertisements of fur rabbits contain totally false claims as to the origin of animals offered for sale. This practice is not a new one, for about 60 years ago, when the now well-known Himalayan rabbit was first bred in England, the statement that it originated in the Himalayan mountains was believed by a fellow of the zoological society of London, who described and figured the animal in the society's journal as a new species. Rabbits recently advertised as fur animals are said to have been imported directly from Siberia in one instance and from Mongolia in another. The further statement that the animals exist in these countries in a wild state is advanced. As a matter of fact well known to naturalists, no wild rabbits occur in either country, and the few species of hares found there are small gray animals that turn white in winter. The support of the fanciful testimony of an unknown naturalist who claims to have resided in Siberia and to have observed the animals in the wild state does not help the case.

So far as "the black Siberian hare" is concerned, any experienced breeder of rabbits can readily identify the animals at first sight. They are undoubtedly the common European rabbit of the Flemish giant breed. In this variety black is a constantly recurring color and sometimes appears among litters of the purest-bred strain. These black individuals are usually regarded by fanciers as undesirable and are discarded. However, if the black stock be chosen for reproduction, a black strain of Flemish giants is obtained in which bluish gray individuals recur from time to time, as several breeders in the United States have proved. Such a strain of Flemish giants is now offered as a new species imported directly from Siberia, a country without rabbits unless carried there as domestic animals.

It is not to be inferred, however, that black Flemish giant rabbits have no fur value. On the contrary, owing to their great size and solid color, the skins will probably sell for more than those of most other breeds. All known breeds of domestic rabbits belong to a single species, the European rabbit, whether they are known as Belgian hare, Flemish giant, Siberian, Himalayan, Dutch, Japanese, Kai-Gai, or any other name, and the attempt to palm any of them upon the public as a new species imported from a portion of the world not uninhabited by rabbits is wholly unwarranted and to be severely condemned.

SIGNS OF STONE AGE.

The Mammoth Cave Figures in Recent Investigation.

Europe may not much longer enjoy the distinction of being the sole seat of evidences of the stone age, in the opinion of N. C. Nelson, as the results of a survey of Mammoth Cave and other caverns and rock shelters of Kentucky, made by him.

Mammoth Cave has been chiefly utilized and known as a sight for tourists, the public paying little attention to textile specimens and other relics of an ancient race which scientific visitors have dug out of the district for a century or longer in a quiet fashion. Mr. Nelson's survey was intended to determine if results worth while could be obtained by thorough exploration. The visit lasted five weeks. It satisfied him that the investigation ought to go on, and that it will throw much light on the habits and history of the aborigines of the Mississippi Valley.

His report says the inquiry was spurred partly by the success of cave archæology in Europe and partly by the supposed failure of it in this country. It was not undertaken primarily to find America's paleolithic (stone age) man, but rather to ascertain if the caves can furnish any trace of a relatively primitive age of aboriginal development that might have given rise to mound-builder culture. The Kentucky region is similar to those in which the cave peoples of Europe lived.

Behind the survey was also the belief of many European archæologists that if Americans will apply themselves they will find proof of aboriginal existence as ancient and primitive as anything discovered in the Old World. Prof. Hugo Obermaier, of the Institut de Paleontologie Humaine of Paris, once offered to wager his head on the outcome, and at another time declared he would come to America and find the required data "inside three years." Mr. Nelson says that the professor's letters to himself since the war began usually end with the repeated enquiry: "Have you found the paleolithic man yet?"

"It is still doubtful," Mr. Nelson writes, "just how Europe's men of the old stone age managed to scramble about in their underground retreats, but here (in the Kentucky caves) are heaps of ashes where fires were built to light the way and torches of cane lie around in many places. It is no easy matter to move about in the ordinary cave, and the question is commonly asked, 'Why did the Indian attempt it?'

"Perhaps he liked to explore; perhaps he held secret councils and ceremonies in the far interior. All we know is that he did commonly bury his dead in the interior of caves," writes Mr. Nelson, "and to that fact we owe much of our knowledge concerning him. For a time it seemed merely a curious fact that immense quantities of flint were strewn for 100 yards or more about the entrances to several of the great caves. Just before our expedition left the Mammoth Cave it was ascertained positively that the Indians had quarried flint in some of the far-away passages where nodules of excellent quality of this substance projected from the limestone walls.

"Among the fragments which littered the floor we found two specimens showing unmistakable evidence of having been shaped by human hands. This explains why the Indian came into the caverns to explore. Flint was as necessary to him as saltpeter (a product used in making gunpowder) was to the white man.

"Another new discovery in Mammoth Cave," reports Mr. Nelson, "was that the Indian had lived for a long period directly inside the entrance, within reach of daylight. The camp refuse there had a depth of more than four feet in places, and was made up of ashes, animal bones, fresh water shells, and articles of bone, stone, and shell. Chief interest in these remains is that they point to a people who lived entirely by hunting."

Few People Know This

Large doses of pills for the liver are not as efficient as small doses.

The big dose purges its way through the system fast, but does not cleanse thoroughly.

The small dose (if right) acts gently on the liver, and gives it just the slight help it needs to do its own work, and do it well.

Take one pill regularly, until you know you are all right.

Women Fighting Foe.

One has heard a good deal about the Russian women warriors who have taken a share in battle. Sensational stories about them have appeared from time to time in the European press. Altogether, there is a flavor of romance about the Russian amazons which is lacking entirely in the totally unlooked-for defence recently put up by an English working woman.

A suit had been brought against her for having failed to pay the money due for the hire of her sewing machine. Asked what she had to say for herself, she replied:

"Nothing; I am unable to pay, as I was wounded a short time ago, fighting against the Austrians."

It quite disconcerted the court. Her papers were examined by the judge and found to be in order. Needless to say the charge against her was withdrawn.

Find Bones of St. George?

A fine mosaic of the early sixth century Christian Church has been discovered by British troops in Palestine, north-west of Beersheba, under works recently occupied by the Turks. It bears a Graeco-Syriac inscription referring in superlatives to a Saint George, whose bones were found beneath the mosaic.

The latter has been somewhat injured by Turkish trench digging, but is, nevertheless, a fine specimen. It is for the present stored at a depot in Cairo, where it will remain, pending a decision as to its ultimate disposal, says the Reuter agency.

STEPS ALREADY TAKEN TO ASSIST THE ITALIANS

It is Officially Announced That Fullest Possible Assistance Will Be Rendered--Italian Statement To-day Announces Plans of General Staff Are Being Carried Out Regularly--British and Belgian Troops Make Successful Raids

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, October 29.—Steps already have been taken for rendering the fullest possible assistance to the Italians, it is officially stated to-day.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

ROME, October 29.—All movements ordered by the general staff are being carried out quite regularly, and the troops which are opposing the enemy are fulfilling their duty by keeping in check his advance into the plains.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

BRITISH FRONT IN FRANCE AND BELGIUM, October 29.—In congratulating Lieut.-Gen. Sir Herbert Plumer, commander of the Second Army Corps, for the victory won on Friday on the Ypres front, Field Marshal Haig said the performance of the Canadians was remarkably fine.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, October 29.—Many tons of bombs were dropped yesterday on German military establishments in Belgium by British aviators.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, October 29. — In the House of Commons to-day Premier Lloyd George said that since the beginning of the war thirteen million men had been transported with the loss of only thirty-three hundred, and that of those only twenty-seven hundred had been lost through enemy actions.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, October 29.—We raided the enemy's trenches last night opposite Warnerton, says to-day's official statement. A hostile reconnoitring party was repulsed in the neighbourhood of Reutel. In the course of yesterday's operations north of Mercham a Belgian patrol captured a German post of twenty-one men. Early in the night Belgian troops carried out a successful raid north of Dixmude and brought back twenty-three prisoners and machine guns.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, October 29. — La Metropole, the Belgian newspaper published here, says that a recent German attempt to separate Belgium from the Allies has been defeated by Baron D. Broquville, the Belgian Foreign Minister.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS, October 29.—An attack was made by the Germans last night on the Verdun front near Chaume Wood. The War Office reports they gained a footing in advanced French positions, but that the greater part of the ground was regained in a counter-attack.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

WASHINGTON, October 29.—Another advance of $25,000,000 was made to-day by the United States Government to Great Britain, bringing the total loaned that country thus far up to $1,400,000,000.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, October 29.—The Germans have evacuated the Warder Peninsula on the Gulf of Riga, where they made a landing recently, the War Office announces.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS, October 29.—Police search for evidence concerning the supposed Royalist plot was continued to-day. Laon Daudet, editor of the Royalist organ, L'Action Francaise, whose offices were searched yesterday, was not permitted to leave his house this morning and a policeman was posted at the door to see that he did not receive reporters.

Cannot Answer For The Russian Army

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, October 29.—The officers of the Petrograd garrison met to-day to discuss the position of the Russian army and adopted a resolution declaring that any authority on the part of its chiefs is virtually non-existent. The resolution says in part: "The community as it is at present cannot defend Russia. On the contrary the approach of winter and the present subversive aspirations of the army and its lack of any sense of responsibility will complete the ruin of the country. We do not renounce our duty, but in answering for ourselves we do not answer for our men. The time has come to make the declaration openly so that nobody may be deceived or trust in vain delusions."

TO THE PEOPLE OF PETERBOROUGH

His Majesty the King, the British Parliament and People, have sent out an urgent call to Canada for assistance to the British Red Cross.

The need is greater, the demand more insistent, than ever before. Toronto has just given $850,000.00, and other cities in proportion. Our own City Council has wisely and generously granted $5,000.00 as a start. Last year a similar grant was supplemented by private subscription to nearly $9,000.00. This year I am asked to urge our good people to make it at least $10,000.00. Will we do it? We can if we will.

No personal canvas will be made, but private subscriptions are urgently asked and sorely needed. Please send them to Mr. Peter Campbell, Treasurer of the local fund, who will be pleased to acknowledge all such, large and small, both personally and through the local press.

THIS MORNING'S POLICE COURT

In this morning's Police Court the case against Frank Londo, charged with stealing a hound from Cyril Lech, in September, 1914, was dismissed, owing to lack of sufficient evidence. The accused claimed to have purchased the dog from Ira McMullen, now deceased, for the sum of fifty cents. It was subsequently recovered in Apsley. Magistrate Dumble declined to accept a statement submitted in evidence by Detective Newhall.

Placed in B Category	5
Placed in E Category	12

The percentage of "A" Category men was increased on Saturday when 36 men out of a total of 55 examined were pronounced fit for the firing line. The afternoon and evening sessions brought the total up, the morning results showing only 10 A men out of twenty-three examined.

In the afternoon, however, out of nineteen examined no fewer than fifteen were placed in A Category, and at night eleven were graded in A out of a total of thirteen. At the two sessions only five men were rejected out of thirty-two examined.

The fifth week of the Medical Board at the armouries opened this morning with no signs of any slackening in the rush of men to be examined. In fact the waiting list is filled up to Wednesday night and it is apparent that the Board will be kept busy until the date mentioned in the proclamation. The majority of those who were examined this morning were farmers, and the physique of the squad was above the average, fifteen out of twenty-one being placed in A category.

At the Post Office.

There was a decided increase in the number of registrations on Saturday, although reports for service show little gains. On Saturday no fewer than fifty-three applications for exemption were filed, with one solitary report for service. This morning there were seven applications for exemption and another report for service, bringing the figures up to noon to-day as follows:

GREAT WORK BY FRENCH

Marvellously Accurate Artillery Fire and Superhuman Feats of Infantry Featured Big Gains on Flanders Front

FOUGHT FOR HOMES

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.

With the French Fighting in Flanders, Oct. 29.—Three fifteen-inch shells fired from a distance of seven miles, struck accurately on their target of a German block house at Papegoad Wood and permitted the French Polius, fighting like mad for glimpses of their own homes slightly behind the German lines, to cut their way to victory in the latest Franco-British advance in Flanders.

It was this marvellously accurate shooting last Friday which opened the way for the French smash. A great, eight-chambered concrete block house in the centre of Papegoad Wood had long held up further French advance. Finally the French aviators ranged it. The huge French guns fired just three of their enormous shells at this range. The first missile was close to it, the second shattered the solid concrete, and the third passed inside. Practically all of the garrison in this formidable defence were killed. The few forlorn, crazed men who did survive of the sixty German soldiers of the 161st infantry, staggered into the French lines, deaf and dumb from shell shock. Their cothes had been stripped from them. Some were fearfully mangled. The stamp of an inexpressible horror was on their drawn faces.

The reduction of the blockhouse enabled the French engineers working neck deep in St. Janandeek and Coverbeek river to throw up bridges and trestles along which the French infantry later charged to a brilliant victory.

FOUGHT FOR THEIR HOMES.

These charging troops were borne with the irresistible force of men fighting like fiends to throw back the enemy and see their own homes, just beyond. Most of the French regiments now on this line are from Lille and other cities close to the present fighting lines. Many left their loved ones behind to answer mobilization calls and have not heard from them since.

These men performed superhuman fighting feats. Hand to hand in bloody fighting they beat back the Germans, half swam through morasses and held tenaciously to their gains despite every effort made by German counter attacks.

On Saturday just such an incident as this occurred. The French had cut their way for a deep gain. The whole eighth Bavarian reserve division was thrown into the fray to check them. It failed, the victorious Poilus literally cut it into slivers.

THE WETTEST OCTOBER FOR MANY YEARS

Up to To-day There Has Been a Total Rainfall of 5.49 Inches

While the month of October is not complete, it is nearing its end. It already has the record of being the wettest October for many years—since 1896, at least, for search has been made that far back. Up to to-day (the 29th) there has been rain on 19 days, giving a total of 5.49 inches, and the outlook to-day is for still more. The nearest approach to this month was October of 1911, with 4.08, and October of 1906, with 3.93. The other extremes were October of 1901, with .85; and October of 1908, with but .27 of an inch.—W.P.

Canadians Are Home From Hunland

Canadian Press Despatch:

HALIFAX, Oct. 29. — Fifty Canadians taken prisoner after the first German gas attack in the Ypres salient, have been repatriated and are now at this port awaiting orders to proceed to their homes.

ITALIANS SIMPLY SMOTHERED BY MASSED MEN AND GUNS

FINISH OF HUN FLYER.

The wreckage of a German air machine, which was shot down by the French on the Salonika front.

Out-numbered More Than Four to One Along the Whole of the Front Attack and Toppled Over by Sheer Weight of Assaulting Forces.

ALLIES MUST AID

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

LONDON, Oct. 29.—The Italian situation dominated the whole war viewpoint to-day. Engulfed by an overwhelmingly superior force in men and guns Italy's armies were fast being thrown back in a rout. The whole British press was unanimous to-day in insisting that the allies must grant immediate aid. Although all circles reiterated their confidence in Gen. Cadorna's strength and ability later to stem the tide, nevertheless many newspapers to-day pointed out that the enemy's power had been gravely miscalculated by the allies. Gen. Cadorna's admission of disaffection in his ranks was more disquieting than the losses, staggering as these have been reported by Berlin and Vienna. It was regarded as certain that Cadorna would be able to make a stand on the plains. Before that time it was expected that allied aid would be reaching Italy.

ITALIANS OUTNUMBERED.

The Italians were outnumbered in men more than four to one along practically the whole of the attacking front. The Germans massed their men behind the lines and smuggled guns into position at night. Their bombardment opened with a terrific fire from guns whose positions had not even previously been suspected by the Italians. So much artillery fire had been attained by the Germans since Verdun as that which was poured over the Italian positions. Outnumbered in guns and men, Cadorna's troops from that time on were victims of a great war machine, pursuing the same tactics which the Germans so successfully in Russian, and a war machine led by the master who conducted that Russian campaign, General Von Mackensen. How tremendous is the driving power of this great machine is indicated in the fact that several hundred square miles, won inch by inch in Cadorna's great offensives of last summer and during a general campaign that lasted three months, is now in the enemy's hands after a bare week's push. By the massing of men and guns the Germans simply smothered the Italians. They swarmed through the mountain passes, and their sheer weight toppled over the Italian defences.

BRITISH COMMENT.

Canadian Press Despatch:

That Great Britain and France must go promptly to Italy's help is the view expressed by several morning papers. The Times, which prints a statement implying the knowledge that such help is contemplated, says editorially:

"Our word to the people of Italy is to stand firm, for help will surely come. Italy must not and will not be deprived of the fruits of ultimate victory, for which she has battled so long and so arduously."

The Daily Chronicle, taking similar views, says it ought to be possible to have British or French divisions, or both, in Italy in a very short time. The Daily News on the other hand, while holding it incumbent on the allies to consider how best to succor Italy, thinks it is impossible to send direct relief on the scale the situation demands. While all newspapers recognize the gravity of Italy's peril, strong confidence is expressed in General Cadorna and the Italian army, with the conviction that they ultimately will emerge victorious.

THE CANADIANS ARE PRAISED BY SIR DOUGLAS HAIG

"While All Did Well the Canadians' Performance in Particular Was Remarkably Fine" Telegraphs the British Field Marshal

GOOD WEATHER NOW

(By William Phillip Simms.)

With the British Armies in Flanders, Oct. 29.—Glowing words of commendation for the Canadian troops in the recent Flanders drives were expressed by Field Marshall Haig to-day. He telegraphed their command officers congratulating them on the Maple Leafers' successes and expressing that they deserved the "highest praise." Haig's message concluded: "While all did well, the Canadians' performance in particular was remarkably fine. I congratulate them on their result."

Clear, sunshiny and pleasant weather began early Sunday morning, a great relief from the past few days of constant rain, and the fine weather is continuing to-day. All attempts of the Germans to force the British back, netted nothing during the usual night fighting.

Military Medal For Gunner Speer

Son of Rev. Dr. Speer Decorated for Gallantry On the Battlefield.

Rev. Dr. Robert Speer, Toronto, has received word that his son, Gunner Victor D. Speer, who enlisted with the 10th Battery, C.F.A., has been awarded the Military Medal for bravery on the battlefield.

Gnr. Speer has been on the Western battlefield since November 1st, 1916, and was wounded 10 days after he got to France. He rejoined his battery in less than a month.

He came through the Vimy Ridge "show" and crossed the "Pimple" with his battery after the munition dump had been already fired by the Germans, notwithstanding the barrage fire of the German artillery. At the top of the Ridge his horses leaped their traces, but righting the horses between shells he escaped, carry his battery clear, and posted it at the point of "order."

Previous to enlistment Gunner Speer was a dental student attending the Ontario Royal College of Dental Surgeons.

Gunner Speer is a cousin of Mr. Andrew Brown, of Peterborough. His father was in the city a few days ago. Gunner Speer was a frequent visitor to Chemong Park, where he was well known.

WIN-THE-WAR DELEGATES SEE PREMIER BORDEN

Urge Upon the Prime Minister the Necessity of Eliminating Party Conventions as Means of Selecting Union Candidate

THE OTTAWA SITUATION

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

OTTAWA, Oct. 29. — A deputation headed by J. M. Godfrey, K.C., and Arthur Hawkes, of Toronto, is at Ottawa to-day to urge upon the Premier in the interests of union, the necessity of eliminating party conventions for the nomination of union candidates. Some days ago the Prime Minister issued a warning against straight party nominations, intimating that only one Unionist candidate should be endorsed for the purposes of the Military Service Act, and advising union advocates of all parties to get together and select a candidate who could be suitable to all. The Prime Minister's advice was apparently disregarded in Ottawa, while it is apparent that in various other places the old party spirit still lingers. Right at the capital there is strong criticism of the attitude taken by the convention held on Friday last and of the tone of the speeches delivered by its nominated candidates, Messrs. Fripp and Chabot. The attendance at the convention was confined entirely to members of the old Liberal-Conservative association of Ottawa and invitations were not extended to Liberals to be present.

"The Conservative Association at Ottawa," says the Citizen this morning, "by its action in nominating Conservative partisans, has made a calculated move to maintain party politics in the capital of the Dominion. It has in effect put independent Liberal opinion and Liberal workers for union without the pale. It has not followed Sir Robert Borden's way of promoting union political action. An exclusively Conservative organization has undertaken to monopolize the Union Government's sentiments in this city.

SELECTING CANDIDATES.

Shakspere tells us that "the evil that men do lives after them," and this also applies to governments. The Union Government has no magic power to induce forgetfulness of the record and occurences for which responsibility remains in the largest moiety of the Union Government; nor can its appeal to surrender "to put aside, party feeling be effective in a moment. The selection of Unionist Government candidates proves that the past cannot all at once be made a closed book and that people will remember many things which they are asked to, and in a good many cases should, forget.

Personal ambition, party feeling, and personal and party interests cannot be entirely eliminated in the selection of candidates. The electors, too, may have individual opinions and preferences, and the selection of win-the-war candidates does not absolutely insure popular endorsation.

Neither the Union Government, nor the Win-the-War League can stampede, though they may urge and influence popular opinion and action; nor reckon with unfailing certainty as to how the great silent voice of the ballot will speak. Of course, in most minds a fight upon the old party lines is inconceivable. Premier Borden has intimated that he, as head of the Union Government, cannot recognize as government candidates any party candidates. The problem seems then to be to hit upon a candidate or candidates, that will represent the compromised opinion of the two great parties, as the Union Government is supposed to represent a similar compromise. Whether the Win-the-War League can do this is to be seen. Being presumably absolutely non-partizan, can it speak the mind of the two great patries in Peterborough and bring electoral opinion to heel in unopposed support of the Union candidate.

The denouement of the candidate situation will depend, perhaps, upon the action of the meeting called for Tuesday night. If the possible choice of a candidate represents the agreement of opinion of the two parties, the situation will be simplified.

The Kaiser has another nut to crack, a Brazil nut this time.

TREES AND ELECTRIC WIRES.

We have to pay for most of our advantages, and it seems the benefits of electricity have attendant disadvantages. Forestry authorities are discussing the question of whether deleterious effects upon street trees can be traced to electric wires strung through them. A scientific authority that has made investigation, concludes thus:

"The electrical resistance of trees is so high that it is doubtful whether injury ever occurs to them from contact with low or even high tension wires, except that produced by grounding when the bark is moist. Any escaping current that can be transmitted, even through the least resistant tissue, is likely to be insignificant.

The investigator is probably correct, and there seems to be reason for thinking that the damage done to trees by electric wires themselves is less than is popularly believed. If we see sickly trees—near electric wire lines, it is not always safe to say that their condition was caused by electricity.

A high authority regards the greatest enemy to tree healthiness, not the electric current nor the electric wire, but the wire stringer. He disfigures and injures tree by lopping off and mangling branches, without any regard to the probable effect on the tree, whereas if he brought a little knowledge of tree growth and a little knowledge of tree pruning to bear he might, in finding passage for his wires, preserve the integrity, and possibly, improve the shape and condition of the tree.

By chopping and haggling off tree branches, regardless of consequences to the tree, he invites danger of the ultimate destruction of the trees. Trees and branches beating against electric wires in winter storms, may wear off the insulation, establish short circuits and, under certain conditions, as in thunder storms, may cause destruction of a long cherished tree.

It is possible, however, while doing the work of stringing wire through trees to do the work in a workmanlike manner so as to prevent undesirable contacts and at the same time preserve the symmetry and character of the tree.

We must have both conditions. We cannot do without electricity, nor street trees. We can have both if due care and caution are exercised. The trees came first and their welfare comes first. The electric wire is an interloper and must be made to subject itself to the preservation and integrity of our trees. We can have both under good conditions of care and some eexrcise of good sense. The responsibility rests with the Utilities Commission chiefly. Its workmen have already achieved some popular distinction for ruthless and unnecessary disfigurement of trees in stringing wires. We hardy, judging by the past, expect much solicitude for our street trees from the city fathers. Their attitude to our trees seems to be of the "barren fig tree" variety —"cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground." But we expect more from the Utilities Commission, and it is hoped that they will, in doing their work, do it with reasonable regard for the beautiful tree growth of our cities and not allow repeated upon our street, results equivalent to the work of shells upon the trees and forests of France and Flanders.

We are uniting to win the war. The political lamb and lion are lying down together and if we thus cooperate to win the war we must not forget that we shall have to live in Canada when the war is over, and should keep all our interests in good shape even while we are intent on war-waging and war-winning.

It looks as if we would have to select candidates by conscription.

THEY SHOULD BE PROUD OF IT.

We cannot fully enter ino the feelings engendered in another man by the possession of a toothache; and likewise we cannot enter into the feelings of the United States soldiers who resent the title of "The Sammies." Of course this title is a very direct reference to the "Uncle Sam," who personifies the power, the institutions, the pride, the aspirations of the people of the United States. And "Uncle Sam" is a gentleman of merit and distinction. Though he entered into war for civilization and humanity with apparent reluctance and calculated deliberation—he entered it; and being in it he is meeting any possible imputation of tardiness by making up for lost time. He is heart and soul, purse and power, in the war, and we all know their will be "doin's" when Uncle Sam's soldiers, after adequate preparation, take an active hand in the "unpleasantness" in France or Flanders, or elsewhere. We out siders can't understand why the United States' soldiers should resent the application of a pet name that does honour to the avuncular personification of their nation. If the United States' soldiers in the field do their bit in the fight as thoroughly and creditably as Uncle Sam is doing his at home, they should be proud to be called "Sammies."

"But, "a rose by any other name, would smell as sweet."

THE TELEPHONE.

The disinction of erecting a monument to a living man is well deserved in the case of Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone, which is regarded as "the most beneficent application of science" to popular uses of the past century. True, the electric telegraph has had a longer course of usefulness, but it is not superior in usefulness or character to the telephone. The telephone, so to speak, is more human, more personal than the telegraph, for it bridges with the living, recognizable voice spaces of thousands of miles, and brings to homes and firesides, human communication of a tangible, living, intimate character. The telephone has an immense advantage over the telegraph in the universality of its application. It needs no technical skill to operate—"a child can use it."

Brantford is to be congratulated on its good fortune in being the birthplace of the telephone for there is as little doubt of that as of Mr. Bell being the real inventor of a mechanism or a system that dwarfs the homeric metaphor of "winged words" and gives them unreckonable speed, and makes the range of the human voice and the man joy and sorrow, and sympathy, as universal as the air of the earth.

Mr. Bell, at Brantford, declared that wireless telephony was beyond the experimental stage and was an accomplished fact. By the attachment of a telephone to a wireless apparatus scientists had exchanged speech across three thousand miles of ocean.

If the union government wants to do a graceful thing, and if title can reward achievement, it can find no more worthy Canadian to recommend for a decoration than Alexander Graham Bell.

"The Bird Of Paradise" To Visit Grand

Richard Walton Tully's Celebrated Hawaiian Romance Coming

That human hearts beat with the same love throb, whether they beat under skins of brown or white, is one of the primary lessons of Richard Walton Tully's celebrated Hawaiian romance, "The Bird of Paradise," which Oliver Morosco will present for the first time in Peterborough at "The Grand," Wednesday, Nov. 21.

The tragic episodes in this powerful play are shown just because of that great universal instinct. Luana, the beautiful Hawaiian girl, passionately loves Paul Wilson, the American, who in turn as fervently loves her. But from the moment of his devotion to this lovely but sadly primitive little creature, Wilson not only loses caste, but he loses that essence of force and distinction which is his by right of birth and race. He finally realizes this fact, and then comes the tragedy into his little sweetheart's life.

The lengthy cast is headed by Miss Celete Scudder, a recently discovered newcomer, in the part of Luana, the Hawaiian maiden, around whom the story centres, and who is claimed to be a revelation in the stellar part, by Oliver Morosco, the producer. Messrs. Tully and Morosco have personally supervised the casting of this production, which is said to be one of the strongest companies sent on tour in this never waning success.

THE WANTS WILL HELP

What do you want most? Would you be glad of the chance to rent a room or two to congenial people? Would you like to secure a more profitable position where the chances for advancement are more certain? Would you like to dispose of household property or realty at a fair price? Would you like to locate a business partner?

These are but a few of the score or more questions that may be asked and answered through the Want Columns of the Examiner.

Those who wish to rent rooms are put in touch with those who have rooms to rent. Business partners are located, realty is bought and sold, employes and employers are brought together, buyers and sellers meet each day as a result of the little Want Ads that have come to play such an important part in modern business.

Are you taking full advantage of the Wants in the Examiner?

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Skeleton In the Closet

Thereby Hangs a Tale.

By F. A. MITCHEL

The city of New York was founded on the southernmost point of Manhattan Island and first grew to the eastward. Later it started up Broadway, and the east side, as it is called, fell into decadence. But till after the beginning of the nineteenth century the handsomest residences were in the neighborhood of the East river.

Some years ago workmen engaged in tearing down an old dwelling near Franklin square—in which Washington lived when first inaugurated president—came upon a closet built in a wall in which was a skeleton. How it got there was a mystery, for there was no opening to the closet, it being inclosed within four thick walls. The find was referred to a historical society, which appointed Helleger Bogardus, an antiquarian, to investigate the whole matter and report. The following is extracted from the papers filed with the society:

"The fact that the skeleton was found within four solid walls is easily explained. The house was repaired and altered during the last decade of the eighteenth century, and the wall wherein was the door to the closet was made whole. The apartment inclosed was of such size that workmen would not necessarily have seen what it contained, especially since there were no windows to admit light in that part of the house.

"As to there being such a closet at all, the story connected with it is a sufficient explanation, for the opening, which was walled up, was closed by a sliding panel. What has not been satisfactorily explained is the use for which the closet was designed. At the time the house was built such secret chambers were not unusual, especially in the homes of those who were in constant danger from some enemy. But in America when the country was first settled avenues of escape were rather tunnels through which the settlers might save themselves from besieging Indians. It seems probable that the house in Franklin square was thus provided by its builder, Meinheer Van Vranken, simply because he had a similar closet in his residence in Rotterdam, for it appears that his ancestors were prominent officials in the Netherlands during that period when the bloodthirsty Duke of Alva held the country in his grip."

But to the story I have unearthed concerning the skeleton found in the closet. Meinheer Van Vranken came to America in 1658, bringing with him what was in those days a fortune. Soon after landing he sent to Holland for brick with which to build his residence and completed it in 1662, modeling it after his home in Rotterdam, even to the secret closet. When it was completed the house was the finest in the city, which was then a Dutch town and called New Amsterdam.

Now, it was in 1664 that the city was captured by the English, the Dutchmen refusing to make an effort to defend it despite the protestations of their governor, Peter Stuyvesant, who stamped with his wooden leg and swore by St. Nicholas that they were an arrant set of cowards, unworthy of the protection of their patron saint.

This change in the government was also a bitter pill for Meinheer Van Vranken to swallow. He was Dutch from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet, and his ancestors, who had been sailors, had fought the English when the Netherlands were a power on the sea. Now, meinheer had a very pretty daughter, Anneke by name, who much more readily adapted herself to the new country than her old father, who could be content in it only so long as it was Dutch. When the English landed many of the inhabitants of New Amsterdam went down to the Battery, where the aquarium now stands, to see them come ashore. Among them was Anneke Van Vranken, buxom and with eyes as blue as the heavens above and two ropes of flaxen hair hanging down her back.

One of the boats which brought supplies ashore was commanded by Ralph Eggleston, a midshipman, nineteen years old, three years Anneke's senior. Though six feet in his stockings, he wore the jacket of a middy, decorated with brass buttons, that shone resplendent in the sun and added to the attractions of his handsome person. His eye lighted upon Anneke, who stood among those looking , and Anneke's eye lighted on him. To her this young man giving orders to a dozen stalwart men, who obeyed his slightest command, was little less than a god. But the young man was on duty and, having unloaded his boat, set off for his ship, lying out in the Hudson river.

Busy as he was, however, young Eggleston found time to give Anneke Van Vranken an admiring glance, and in return there was a rapture in her eyes at what was to her a heavenly vision. It was but a few days after this that while walking under the guns of the fort, whereon the English had replaced the Dutch flag, Anneke met the midshipman, who was on shore leave strolling about with a brother officer.

This meeting seems to have resulted in an acquaintance between Ralph and Anneke, but how it was brought about is not known. First sight lovers are not apt to be kept apart through the want of an introduction. Be this as it may, the two went together down to the southernmost point of the island and passed the time there till sunset (when the midshipman's leave expired) sitting on a rock making love with that rapidity which can only be attained by persons in their teens.

Eggleston wished to visit Anneke in her home, but she told him that the sight of an Englishman was enough to throw her father into a fit, and if he knew that she had made the acquaintance of one of those who had taken the city and changed its name from New Amsterdam to New York he would sail back to Holland with her by the first vessel going there. Therefore, not being able to meet the girl who had charmed him in her own home, he made an appointment to meet her elsewhere.

The next meeting between the Englishman and the Dutch girl was in this wise: Anneke was standing on the shore of the East river just north of the wall that gave the present name to Wall street, not more than five or six minutes' walk from her home. A boat pulled by a single oarsman was coming round the southern end of the island and approaching the shore where Anneke stood. She went down to the water's edge, the boat's stern was swerved to the shore; she stepped in, and the boat continued its course in the direction of the islands lying to the eastward.

It is unnecessary to mention that the oarsman was Ralph Eggleston, who had pulled around from the Hudson river to meet his new found sweetheart to take her for a ride on the East river, where they could make love without being interrupted. Instead of pulling across the river and thence south on the opposite shore and returning by Governors island, they very foolishly went directly past Anneke's home. True, the house was some distance from the shore and perhaps she thought that she might not be seen from there. She did not reckon on the fact that the house was on a hill and that her father had brought to America the very spyglass with which his father, Captain Van Vranken, had discovered a British ship that he had attacked and sunk. Meinheer happened at the time of this boat ride to be strolling about his grounds. Unfortunately for the lovers the sunlight was reflected from the gold trimmings of the officer's uniform. Meinheer Van Vranken, wondering what one of these hated naval men was doing out on the water with a woman—who must be Dutch—went to the house, took down Captain Van Vranken's spyglass, brought it to bear on the occupants of the boat and, to his horror, discovered his daughter there in company with a British officer.

I know not what immediately followed the revelation. The next link in the chain of the story is that Meinheer Van Vranken determined to shake the dust of Manhattan Island off his shoes—since it had become English soil—and go back to Rotterdam with his family. By this move he intended to separate Anneke from the English midshipman who had crept into her affections while her father was drinking destruction to the English fleet in drafts of schnapps.

Anneke was put under a strict watch during the period in which the preparations were being made for the return to the Netherlands, for there was much to be accomplished. Even the heavy four post bedsteads reland to drag them to the landing and a lighter of extra size to take them to the ship. Anneke was in charge of Katrina Lemke, an old maid who had no sympathy for young lovers and hated the English. This woman was enjoined not to let her charge out of her sight for a single moment, and since the father feared the young midshipman might, under pretense of searching the house for arms, bring a party of men to take away his sweetheart a six pound cannon was mounted at the only gate in the high wall surrounding the place.

The day the family were to sail for Holland Katrina Lemke and Anneke were left in the house till the last minute, while Meinheer Van Vranken superintended the hauling of the last of the household goods to the landing. When he had finished his task and seen his family and goods put on board the ship he returned for his daughter and her duenna.

He found the house vacant.

From this point the story is vague. It does not appear that Katrina Lemke was ever found. The next heard of Anneke Van Vranken she was living in England, the wife of Captain Sir Ralph Eggleston of the British navy. The loss of the duenna and the escape of her charge are to be accounted for only by conjecture, though there is an unsubstantiated tradition that it was explained by Lady Eggleston. This explanation accords with the recent discovery of the skeleton in the closet.

The tradition is that while the two women were alone together in the Van Vranken home Anneke broke away from her jailer and hid in the closet. The duenna followed her and entered the closet, and Anneke slipped out and shut the door. Anneke, thinking only of flight, left the place and communicated with her lover, who came ashore, married her and took her to his ship.

Anneke did not know—what I now suppose to have been the case—that in closing the door of the closet it had been held by a spring lock. The panel closed automatically with the closing of the door. My theory is that Katrina Lemke was caught in the closet, could not release herself and perished. Doubtless the skeleton discovered there was hers. This theory is borne out by the fact that it is the skeleton of a woman.

Spinster Insurance.

It is reported that insurance against the misfortune of being old maids has been organized in Vienna in view of the terrible losses of young Austrians on the battlefields and the probability that many young women will not be able to find husbands. The prettiest girls will pay the lowest premiums.

Let this great truth burn itself into your soul---the Gift of Freedom cannot be bought with money, but money will help to preserve it.

From the four corners of the earth those who love Freedom have united to defend it, from enslavement by Germany.

Millions of free men have already sacrificed their lives on Freedom's altar.

Noble women have sent loved ones to Freedom's service with an anguish harder to bear than death.

Still other millions have yielded their entire resources in service or in money to the need of their countries.

And now, for their sakes, asks her citizens (men and women) to support with money Canada's part in the mighty efforts of the free peoples of the earth to save themselves from the ghastly crucible into which the Hun would pour and then remould mankind.

To prevent this, brave men are giving their lives. Will you hesitate to lend your money?

Canada must raise more money in order to continue to play her great part in the prosecution of the war.

This money must come from the people of Canada. Outside financial markets are closed and it is in the interests of Canada that as much as possible of our war indebtedness should be held within the Dominion and interest upon it paid to our own people.

The money is here. The only question is, will Canadians, now that they know the need, respond magnificently to this appeal? They will!

NOW IS THE TIME FOR BLANKETS AND COMFORTERS

To-morrow you will be asked to contribute to the Red Cross Society. Make up your mind before the collectors call that you are going to give every cent you can afford to this worthy cause.

At present there are fifty Peterborough boys prisoners of war in Germany, and hundreds of Peterborough boys that are sick and wounded in France and in England.

The Peterborough Branch of the Red Cross Society are looking after these men, and looking after them well.

But they must have funds to do it with.

To look after these men and many more this year, it will take $20,000.00.

Surely you will help.

While our sale offers special inducements. This is the opportune time to buy Blankets and Comforters. It is advisable to see to your future wants and buy NOW—if you wish to save money. Blankets and Comforters are going away up in price every day.

Our stock of Blankets and Comforters were bought many months ago and we are in a splendid position to sell you the best at last year's low prices.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

EXECUTIVE REPORT.

In presenting the third annual report of the Peterborough branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society, the executive again takes this opportunity of expressing its grateful appreciation of the loyalty and generous financial support rendered by the citizens of Peterborough. It is a matter of great satisfaction to the executive to be able to show through the different reports which will be presented this afternoon that their splendid contributions have done so much for the relief of the sick and wounded, and our Peterborough Prisoners of War, who have set such a standard of loyalty to our Empire in her hour of need.

While appreciating to the fullest extent all that has been accomplished up to the present time, it is a matter for regret that owing to the continuance of the war the need both for money and supplies is just as urgent as ever, but the members of the Peterborough Branch will go forward with the work already undertaken with the confident assurance that the generous financial support will be as efficient in the future as it has been in the past.

New Auxiliaries.

Since the annual meeting held in October, 1916, there have been few changes in the policy of the Society. Four new auxiliaries are heartily welcomed into our ranks—Ashburnham Patriotic League, St. Andrew's Church, George Street Church, and All Saints' Church. A better understanding of the work and aims of the Red Cross is spreading, and it is pleasing to note that wherever a properly organized centre for work has been established it has continued and generally increased its activities.

Twenty-two meetings for the transaction of business have been held—three open meetings, fifteen executive, and four joint meetings of the Advisory Board and the executive. These meetings have all been well attended, and the committees have worked conscientiously to further the work to the best of their ability.

143 Life Members.

There are at the present time 143 life members, 87 annual members, and 7 associate members, 350 members of the Peterborough Branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society.

An innovation in the form of an open meeting held recently proved interesting and helpful. It had been felt for some time that it would be a pleasure as well as an advantage to the members of the executive to meet the auxiliary workers and discuss the work of their societies. A much better understanding of conditions has been the result.

On 30th October, the local society was visited by Mrs. Plumptre. An interesting feature of the meeting was that any person present was permitted to ask questions relating to any branch of the work.

Early in December, in response to an urgent appeal for supplies from Major Blaylock, Canadian Red Cross Commissioner in France, it was decided to open the work room the first of January for six weeks. On the opening day of the sewing campaign the workers were addressed by the President, Mrs. Matthews, who, having returned from England, told of her visit to Canadian Headquarters, and to various Red Cross hospitals. The result of this special effort was that almost as many garments were shipped the first three months of 1917 as had been sent overseas during the year 1916.

A request from Major J. C. Davidson for blinds and quilts for No. 3 Canadian Stationary Hospital, France, met with a generous response. In acknowledging these gifts Major Davidson spoke of the joy and comfort they brought to the lonely and wounded in the hospital.

Field Comforts Provided.

During the year the executive felt that a regular legitimate outlet through the society should be available for the ever increasing number of field comforts being sent forward to our men in the trenches, and although, according to the terms of the Geneva Charter, this work is not strictly Red Cross, through the efforts of the Women's National Service Committee arrangements were made with the Canadian Red Cross Society for this work to be carried on through their channels, we have therefore taken advantage of this organization, so well known under the name of the Canadian War Contingent Association, who, working in conjuction with the Red Cross, have helped to distribute many cases of comforts and socks.

It was with deep regret that the executive parted with the services of Miss Marion Rush, but when circumstances arise that cannot be set aside, it becomes us to bow in submission and place on record deeds done. Miss Rush's place has been ably filled by Miss Effie Munro.

In April the society had the pleasure of meeting and hearing one of our Prisoners of War, Sergt. E. Edwards, speak of his experiences and escape from one of the German Prison camps.

Owing to the great increase in the cost of materials and providing for the Prisoners of War, large sums of money have been required to carry on the work.

The campaign for monthly subscribers so successfully carried on by the Advisory Board, the Motor Show, French Red Cross, and Peterborough Prisoners of War Tag Day added materially to our funds.

In connection with the work of the society, it would be invidious to mention names. However, the executive feel that special reference should be made to the work done by the different auxiliaries and societies, both in supplies and cash contributions.

To the Knitting and Packing Committees for their excellent work so faithfully done throughout the whole year. When you consider that not one complaint has been received about the condition of the supplies sent or the manner in which they have been packed, it speaks well for the ladies who have had this important work to do.

To the old friends who have helped us so faithfully since the beginning of the war, also to those of more recent date who have come forward as special needs arose to help bear their share in the support of this great cause which it is our duty and privilege to serve. Among the former we would especially mention the Advisory Board, the Board and Officers of the Public Library, the Press for their great kindness and generosity in inserting notices and all information dealing with the work of the society free of charge, to the Express Companies for free transportation, and to the Fanning Laundry for continued help.

To enumerate all those who by their services and gifts have helped the society during the year would be almost impossible, as it would practically mean mentioning almost every organization in the city and surrounding district. The thanks of the executive are especially due those who generously adopted Prisoners of War, thus lessening the strain on the society's finances.

Sympathy Extended.

The executive would extend to all its members who have been called upon to suffer the loss of loved ones at the Front their deepest sympathy. With hearts full of sympathy we also look upon the brave men who have returned from the battle front, many of them deprived of their former physical fitness, and we would ask that the greatest consideration and help in our power be shown them in their affliction.

The great call which has been responded to so nobly by our gallant troops at the Front should surely strike an answering chord in the hearts of all who stay at home. No sacrifice, no self-denial can be too great for us to offer that their suffering may be made more bearable, and their dark hours brightened by the thought that we who remain in safety in the home country that they are giving their lives and limbs to protect, are daily doing our utmost to stand behind them.

As the society enters upon the work of the new year, may each member get a clear vision of the great problems facing us, and each one find their place in the activities and responsibilities that are involved.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

L. J. Davidson, Hon. Secy.

Peterborough, 26th Oct., 1917.

Wool Committee.

Your Wool Committee reports that during the year ending 1st October, 1917, 5,638 pairs of socks passed through their hands, were duly examined, measured, tied into bundles—six pairs in each package—marked according to size, and taken to the basement ready for the packers. Of these, 3,411 pairs were knitted by hand, 1,912 pairs being made by individual knitters to whom wool was given out and socks received from them on Wednesday afternoons during the year. Right here I would like to say that we have plenty of wool for more knitters, and the need for socks is just as urgent as at any time during the war. One thousand four hundred and ninety-nine pairs of these hand-knit socks were donations, among the largest contributions being those coming from St. Paul's Auxiliary, the South-End Auxiliary, and Lakehurst. We have also had generous donations from Young's Point, Murray Street Auxiliary, Lily Lake Auxiliary, St. Andrew's Auxiliary, and others, as well as a few from individual knitters. Two thousand two hundred and twenty-two pairs of socks were made on the machines.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

I. R. Burnet,
Convener Wool Committee.

2,252 Pairs of Socks.

Mrs. Roland Denne's report showed 2,252 pairs of socks have been knitted by the knitting machine during the past year.

Closing Address.

Mrs. Matthews, the re-elected president, closed the meeting, saying, in part, that it is the individual that is indispensable to the society's success. The splendid reports could not have been compiled but for the individual. She said she was proud of the Peterborough workers and societies, and hoped for their co-operation in the coming year, for the individual is as important as the president. If the co-operation is assured, success is likewise so. All the officers have done splendid work in the society, whose work is different to any other organization. The president concluded with the hope that conditions would be such that the society's activities will be able to abate before long.

Decision Will Come On Western Front

Stewart Lyon Back From France Says First Contingent Should Get Furlough

Canadian Press Despatch:

TORONTO, Oct. 29.—Stewart Lyon, correspondent for the Canadian press on the western front for the past year, returned home this morning. In an interview he said that there were not more than one-twentieth left of the original strength of the first Canadian contingent, and in his opinion some way should be found to permit these men to come home on furlough. Commenting on the recent reverses on the Russian and Italian fronts, Mr. Lyons said that while these should not be minimized, it was his opinion that the final decision of the war would not be on these fronts, but on the western front. The war might take a year longer, but the combined strength of Britain and her overseas Dominion and the United States must prevail.

Prudential Employees Hear The Call To The Colours

One Hundred and Seventeen Men Have Left the Canadian Offices

Over five hundred employees of the Prudential Insurance Company have responded to the call to the colours, according to a report recently issued in connection with the Prudential Weekly Record. Of this number two hundred and thirty-two were fieldmen connected with the Company's offices across the line, and another one hundred and ninety-four men were on the staff of the Home Office. Included in the total are one hundred and seventeen Prudential men of Canada who have entered the service. The Peterborough office has contributed two volunteers, namely, J. Hayes and H. L. Wicks. This is a very creditable showing for one Company.

Mrs. Fairbairn, of Lakefield, has received word that her husband, Pte. Gordon Fairbairn, formerly of the 93rd Battalion, has arrived at Halifax.

The mid-week prayer meeting is cancelled for this week on account of the Sunday school convention.

The ladies of the Red Cross Society will meet Thursday afternoon in the school room from 2.30 to 5.30 for sewing, for giving and receiving work. Every lady of the congregation should be a working member of this important society.

The regular monthly meeting of the Ladies Aid Society will be held Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the ladies' parlour.

The following have been appointed ushers until May 1, 1918: Morning service— For north door, Messrs. R. Briggs, Gordon Stevens, George Green, George Gilman. South door—A. McWilliams, M. Saunders, R. Glover, W. I. Chisholm. Evening service—North door—E. Reid, W. Richardson, Gordon Henry, Wm. McCormack, South door—E. Walton, Geo. Henderson, Wm. Stevens, J. John.

The ushers are requested to be in attendance 15 minutes before the service commences.

The Sunday school and Bible classes are showing an increased attendance each Sunday. The officers and teachers are anxious that every member of the various classes be present each Sunday, and also endeavour to bring some friend who is not now attending any class. Mr. H. Treneer and Mr. F. E. Kerr, the leaders of the two Ladies' Bible Classes, extend a hearty invitation to any strangers to attend their class next Sunday at 3 o'clock.

The Calebites meet each Sunday at the close of the morning service. The men of the congregation are invited to these meetings. A young men's class has just been organized and meets at 3 p.m. each Sunday. Mr. Gall is the leader, and will be glad to have any young men not at present attending a class to meet with them next Sunday.

Reason Why The Ban Has Been Taken Off Oleomargarine

Food Controller Does Not Expect That There Will Be Any Reduction in the Price of Butter, But New Order Will Give People a Substitute

An Order-in-Council has been passed upon the recommendation of the Food Controller allowing, on and after November 1st, the manufacture and sale in Canada of oleomargarine and its importation free of duty. Suspension of the prohibition of its manufacture, import or sale is a war measure only, and will apply while the present abnormal conditions continue. The conclusion of such period is to be determined by the Governor-General in Council. Strict provisions are incorporated in the Ordinance to protect the public and the farmers against fraudulent sale of oleomargarine as butter.

The recommendation of the Food Controller was made because the high cost of production and the demand for export were putting the price of butter so high that many people were unable to purchase it. To reduce the price arbitrarily would have been unfair to the producer. The only alternative was to enable those who could not afford to buy butter to secure the necessary animal fats in some wholesome substitute form. The Food Controller states that the dairy interests will not suffer by reason of the sale of oleomargarine in Canada.

"Oleomargarine" is defined in the Ordinance as including "oleomargarine, margarine, butterine, or any other substitute for butter which is manufactured wholly or in part from any fat other than from milk and cream, which contains no foreign colouring matter and which does not contain more than sixteen per cent. of water."

Persons wishing to manufacture or to import oleomargarine must first obtain a license from the Food Controller, and such license may be cancelled in case of violation of any of the regulations.

Oleomargarine manufactured in Canada must be produced under the supervision of the Minister of Agriculture and no oleomargarine may be imported into the Dominion unless it has been manufactured under Government supervision in the country of production. No Customs duty is to be charged on the importation of oleomargarine complying with the regulations.

The Food Controller is given the power to regulate the price and quality of all oleomargarine sold in Canada.

Must Be Marked.

Every package containing oleomargarine must be clearly marked as such. Hotels, restaurants and public eating places where oleomargarine is served must display a card with the words "oleomargarine served here" in capital block letters not less than one and one-half inches long.

No label, mark or brand shall be used until it has been approved by the Food Controller.

The necessity of allowing the sale of oleomargarine in Canada under present conditions was explained by Hon. W. J. Hanna, Food Controller, in an interview to-day. Mr. Hanna said that it was well-known that people must have animal fats in sufficient quantity. Butter had advanced in price and was still advancing until many people were unable to buy it. Moreover, butter seemed likely to go still higher in price because the present price was not commensurate, on a butter fat basis, with the price being paid for whole milk.

Only Two Possible Courses.

"There were only two courses possible," said the Food Controller. "We could have fixed an arbitrary price, but the result would have been to reduce the production of butter, by diverting milk into other channels. It must be remembered that the price paid to the producer in Canada for milk is determined in very large measure by what the condensing plants are willing to pay for it. The high price offered by the condensing plants, in turn, is due to the price being paid for condensed milk by the Allies' buyers. The cost of producing milk has advanced greatly since the beginning of the war, and the farmer must receive a price which not only will cover his costs but also give him a reasonable profit.

"The other course was to allow the use of a substitute and this is the course which we adopted. I may say that I do not expect that our action in allowing the sale of oleomargarine in this country will result in any reduction in the price of butter. The overseas demand is practically unlimited, when compared with Canada's production. Moreover, the price of butter in the United States to-day is at least as high as the price in Canada. The average retail price of butter in the United States for September was 50 cents per pound. The regulated wholesale price in England was 53.76 cents per pound. At the beginning of the war, Canada was importing at the rate of more than seven million pounds of butter per year, chiefly from New Zealand and the United States. These imports have dwindled to a very small trade, principally at local points from the United States.

Exports Increased.

"Meanwhile our exports of butter have increased enormously. In the fiscal year ending March 31, 1914, our exports of Canadian butter totalled 1,228,733 pounds. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1917, they had been increased to 7,990,435 pounds. Since then the increase has continued. While our exports have been increasing prices of butter to the consumer have advanced from about 35 cents per pound to about 50 cents. We are only supplying a very small part of the Allies' requirements. In 1914 Great Britain alone imported 446,230,848 pounds of butter, and in 1916, despite shipping difficulties and necessarily reduced consumption, no less than 248,646,480 pounds. For years after the war Europe will require all the butter which Canada can produce for export and the prices are certain to be high. These facts show that the dairy interests of Canada have nothing to fear from the order allowing the sale of oleomargarine. The producer is in no danger of losing his market.

"The regulations, which will govern the manufacture, importation and sale of oleomargarine in Canada have been carefully prepared and will afford ample protection against fraudulent practices."

Makes Wrinkles Go "As If By Magic"

Want to banish every wrinkle — from face, neck, hands—easily, quickly, completely? Try the famous saxolite formula. Nothing else so nearly meets every requirement. Why? Because it is correct in principle and really, truly assists Nature. Possessing remarkable astringent and tonic properties, it both tightens the skin—thus naturally smoothing out the lines—and improves capillary circulation and nerve zone—tending to strengthen loose tissue and bring about a healthy condition. Yet, powerful as the saxolite lotion is, it won't harm your skin in the least. And it's so easy to get the inexpensive ingredients at your druggist's, and so easy to mix them.

Just dissolve one ounce powdered saxolite in one-half pint witch hazel—that's all. Bathe your face in this—immediately every wrinkle and crease are affected even the deepest. You are perfectly astonished, and delighted, with the result. You look like you've lost years from your age!

PETERBOROUGH BOY WRITES IN APPRECIATION OF THE Y.M.C.A. WORK

Following is a copy of an interesting letter from Pte. Norman Patterson, formerly of the 93rd Battalion, to Mr. Jack Laing, former boys' secretary of the local Y.M.C.A.:

France, Sept. 22, 1917.

"I received you very welcome letter this evening and decided to answer it at once, so here we are. It will not be much of a letter as I am very lazy about writing letters at all. We have no news to tell, as most of the interesting things would get us into trouble with the censor if they were told. I can at least tell you that we are winning. We are this evening anyway. It is quite easy to tell, too. If our rations are good then we are winning and if they are not we are losing. That is what the boys say, and it is easy to tell what the rations are like by the talk of the first fellows who see them.

"I am glad to hear that you are working for the Y.M.C.A. We certainly would miss the old 'Y' here. I see little articles in some Canadian papers at times running down the Y.M.C.A. and I do not like it at all. The whole trouble is that some fellows are fond of getting something for nothing and because they do not get about a dollar's worth of stuff for ten cents, they kick. We had brigade sports a short time ago and the 'Y' tent supplied all the running shoes and other things to help. At the same place there is a big field and they have footballs, baseball mits, bats and gloves, an out-door basketball outfit and two or three indoor baseballs and bats all free to the men. Most of the tents in different places have either hot coffee or lemonade, according to the weather. It is always free, too. I was at a place a short time ago that was quite close to the front line. They had hot coffee all the time for the boys coming out of the trenches and also Players cigarettes and biscuits in a box and they told you to just help yourself. Nearly every rest camp or place where the boys come to from the line has a 'Y' tent and you can always get lots of writing paper there and tables to write on. There are places where some of the fellows act as though they owned the outfit and were conferring a favour on you by selling you anything, but in every case I have seen it has been some fellow who has been sent out of a battalion to the job and perhaps had never had anything to do with the 'Y' in his life before. I have been in their big tents too and seen concert parties that were really good. Most of these tents have moving picture machines and so they have a show of some sort every night. I have seen about as many Charlie Chaplin pictures here as I have seen at home. I saw in one paper where some soldier said that he bought several francs worth of stuff and because he was a penny short of the right chance they would not sell him the goods. I wish they would ask him just what 'Y' it was. I have often bought things and they would come to a penny or so more than I had unless they could change another bill, but mostly they would not bother with it at all. I think if they would close every 'Y' tent or hut up for about two weeks the ones who kick so much would soon realize what they were getting and change their tune. Most of the boys though know how to appreciate the things they get and it is mostly the few kickers that write about it to the papers.

Why Roman Meal Is Superior To Other Foods

IT is a complete food. Every ingredient required by the body for perfect health must come from food. There is not one essential food element missing in Roman Meal; all are present in proper proportion. Roman Meal is thus a "balanced ration." This accounts for the sense of "wellness" following use of

Dr. Jackson's
Roman Meal

It is superior because:

First—It is the only balanced ration sold in package form being composed of wheat, rye, bran and flaxseed—the latter rendered odorless and tasteless by electricity.

Second—Our digestive canal was developed into a forty-foot tube of muscles because our ancestors lived upon food with more waste than nutrition, considered by bulk. This waste was largely grain waste. Without plenty of waste the digestive canal does not function properly, and constipation results. Roman Meal contains exactly the right amount of waste. Over-milled and over-refined foods contain none.

Third—Roman Meal contains 25% flaxseed. Flax is three times as nourishing as wheat, rye or oats. Therefore Roman Meal not only has the correct amount of waste, but it is very nourishing as well. Flax heals the irritation caused by bran, and prevents intestinal catarrh often resulting from bran used alone, or when mixed with white flour or refined cereals. Roman Meal relieves constipation or "money back."

Fourth—The excessive quantity of starch in white flour and refined cereals ferments and produces vegetable acids. These are absorbed into the blood, turning it acid. This acidity happens because the soluble alkalis which Nature provided in the dark parts of the grain to prevent this absorption are pulled out and thrown away. Roman Meal contains the necessary amount of soluble alkalis to keep the blood non-acid.

Acid blood produced by the refined cereals induces disease in the organs. The alkalis in Roman Meal keep the blood fluid and "cool."

Try Roman Meal. Get it at your grocer's. Do not stir Roman Meal porridge except when mixing meal and water.

DINNER

Baked Heart of Beef — Potatoes — Turnips
Tea Biscuits — Baked Apple

War Bread—
2 cups boiling water
1-3 cup molasses
1-2 tablespoon salt
1 tablespoon dripping
1-2 yeast cake dissolved in
1-2 cup luke-warm water
1 cup rolled oats or oatmeal
4 1-2 cups flour

Add boiling water to oats and let stand one hour. Add molasses, salt, butter, dissolved yeast cake and flour. Let rise, beat thoroughly, turn into buttered bread pans, let rise again and bake.

Baked Heart of Beef—

Wash a beef heart, remove veins, arteries, and clotted blood. Stuff with a dressing made as for fowl. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Put in covered baker with two cups boiling water and bake slowly two hours, basting every fifteen minutes. (Recipes by Domestic Science Experts of the Food Controller's Office).

A TIMELY WARNING

THE CAUSE of most ailments is due to Defective Kidneys. The sooner this is impressed upon the People, the better for the community. The function of the Kidneys is to extract and expel all inert and useless decayed matter from the system. If they are healthy they will do this, if they are not---poisonous gases will be absorbed into the system and undermine your health and lay the foundation of serious ailments such as:

Brights Disease, Diabetes, Dropsy & Rheumatic Ailments

It will sometimes help to drink plenty of pure water, as this will assist in expelling the Uric Acid which is often the cause of Rheumatism. Do this, and take one or two of DR. BANTA'S KIDNEY AND RHEUMATISM PILLS after each meal and you will prove for yourself the truth of this statement.

No Mystery About a Good Coat

Some men like to be in any business where you can hide poor stuff in a wrapper. A cheap cigar is an offense where there is joy and solace in the good leaf.

It's better to buy a Semi-ready Suit with a reputation for honesty than gamble on a garment which lacks the same record of good tailoring. From the wool to the workshops the worth of each garment is known. There is no mystery about tailoring good clothes—but cheap-jack work can be hidden from a buyer by the lining. So can cheap wool and shoddy.

Semi-ready Tailored Clothes are shape-stayed and inside-tailored so carefully and precisely that you will always look upon the label in the pocket with pride.

High Honours For Young Officer Of Local Family

Grandson of Col. J. W. Miller is Promoted to Q. M. G. With Rank of Lt.-Col. In Fifth Division

From subaltern to quartermaster-general, and assistant adjutant of the Fifth Canadian Division, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, is the brilliant record of Staff Captain Frederick William Miller, M.C., of Brantford, who is a grandson of Col. J. W. Miller, of this city. His latest honours are announced in a recent issue of the Brantford Expositor as follows:

"Staff Captain Frederick William Miller, M.C., assistant quarter-master-general of the Fifth Canadian Division, who left Brantford with the first Canadian contingent as a lieutenant, has received further promotion. Today news was received in the city that he had been appointed quartermaster-general and assistant adjutant of the Fifth Canadian Division, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

Lieut.-Col. Miller's rise has been one of the most rapid in Canadian records. Leaving here as a junior lieutenant with the first contingent of Dufferin Rifles recruits, at Valcartier he was attached to the 4th Battalion. With this he trained at Salisbury, later going to France, where, on the field, he won the Military Cross, mention in despatches for his efficient work on the division staff and promotion to staff captain. He was sent back to England after two years at the front, and there appointed assistant quartermaster-general. His worth was afterwards again recognized, as shown by the latest promotion."

Lieut.-Col. Miller is the son of Capt. Wm. Miller, an old Peterborough boy, who is serving as paymaster of the Fifth Divisional Signalling Corps, and both father and son are well known to many in this city.

Lieut.-Col. Miller is also a nephew of Mrs. J. L. Armstrong, wife of the organist of the Church of the Sacred Heart, whose son "Jack" enlisted with the 93rd Battalion and was transferred to the Fifth Division when the Peterborough unit was broken up.

GOLF.

The October number of the "Canadian Golfer" is of particular interest to members of the Peterborough Golf and Country Club and residents of the city generally, in that it contains an interesting article on the growth and progress of the Peterborough Golf Club, enlivened by several illustrations of various parts of the course.

The price of this publication is 25c and the Secretary, Mr. Dearle, has a limited number of copies for disposal, and will be pleased to supply these on application.

Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—There are some terms used in an article which appears in the Examiner and Review of the 27th inst., which you will kindly permit me to correct. The article I refer to, in giving the itinerary of Mr. Burnham for the coming week, describes him as "Mr. Burnham, M.P., the Federal member, etc." For the information of the Examiner and Review, I wish to point out that the House is now dissolved, and that there are no longer any M.P.'s or Federal members in this country.—Respectfully yours, Bourinot.

Peterborough, 29th Oct., 1917.

Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—It will be good news indeed to all those who put country before party, and who are in favour of putting Canada's full strength and resources into the winning of the war, to know that a public meeting is called for to-morrow night by the Peterborough Branch of the Win-the-War League, to take up the question of calling a convention to nominate a supporter of the Union Government; and it is to be hoped if such a convention is called, some man will be found acceptable to the great bulk of the electors and free from party affiliations. Otherwise, the only result can be the opening of the way for a straight party fight in this constituency, which would be deplorable indeed and nothing short of Kaiserism of the worst description at the present time.

Surely politics can be forgotten for once, and surely Grit and Tory alike can join and give the candidate of the Union Convention, whoever he may be, an overwhelming majority in West Peterborough.—Yours very truly, Canadian.

Peterborough, 29th Oct., 1917.

Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—I note that "Liberal" complains of "a few scribblers in the local press who are more concerned with keeping before the public than with the interest of the Union Government." It may be, too, that there are others much more concerned about their own personal interests than they are with the interests either of the Union Government or their native land.

For my own part I am not afraid of the criticism which may come from publicly declaring my position with regard to these critical problems which confront us. With respect to the Union Government, I may say that after a very great deal of consideration and some misgivings (for I am a Liberal to the core) I decided that I should support it until it has proved itself unworthy at any rate. I should have liked to see labour more strongly represented, but if another Labour leader is appointed as a colleague with Robertson, of Welland, labour interests should not suffer. I admit, too, that I have some uneasiness about any Government containing Sir Thomas White, whom I regard as primarily the servant of the 'big interests'; but it cannot be denied that the present Goverment is a representative national Government formed for the purpose of putting forth our fullest strength to beat the common enemy of the world. This is why I support it.

I have already stated that I believe the feeling in this constituency is that we should join hands here as has been done in Ottawa, so that we may have co-operative effort instead of party discord. Mr. Burnham suggests that this feeling should not prevent an election here, and intimates that any number of candidates may run, all pledged to support the present Government. I put it to Mr. Burnham straight: Is this the spirit which dominates the country at the present time? We cannot have an election without a divergence of forces which ought to be concentrated. We cannot have an election without recrimination and abuse, which would be better saved for our country's enemies. This can all be obviated if the executives of the two parties would call a joint convention to nominate a candidate who will, for the period of the war, represent a united community.

A good deal of unfriendly criticism is being directed against Messrs. R. B. Rogers and J. A. Aylmer in connection with the meeting of the Win-the-War League on Tuesday night. I myself am not connected with the League in any way, and have had nothing to do with the coming meeting, but I consider the attacks made upon these well-known citizens very unfair. We all know the investment which Mr. Rogers has made in this war, with two sons prisoners across the Rhine. We know, too, that ever since the war began Mr. Rogers has been indefatigable in every effort put forth to win the war. We know of Mr. Aylmer's work also. Perhaps no man in Peterborough has given as much time to patriotic work since the war began. During these last three years he has practically devoted all his time and money to work connected with winning the war. In the face of all this, is it not most unfair to impugn the motives of these men just now because of their efforts to unite the community at a time when the whole Empire calls for just such unity?

Judging from some statements in the papers, one would imagine that co-operation and concord should be avoided, and discord and strife sought after. To my mind, we are getting all the strife necessary in Flanders, and on this account we should have harmony and good-will here.

Yours truly, Joseph Wearing.

EDWARD EARLE HAS GAINED 14 POUNDS

Gets Complete Relief From Suffering of Five Years Standing

"When I tell you I have gotten complete relief from five years of suffering and have actually gained fourteen pounds in weight besides, you can readily see why I think so highly of Tanlac," said Edward Earle, of 17 McGregor Avenue, Toronto. Mr. Earle is a well known union carpenter employed in the Canadian Pacific Shops, and has lived in Toronto for the past eight years.

"My stomach was all upset," he continued, "and so out of order that I couldn't digest anything. I had no desire for food of any kind and what little I did eat would lay in my stomach like lead. I would bloat up terribly with gas and had sharp pains in my sides and all around my heart. My tongue was always coated, I had a bad taste in my mouth and would have dizzy spells when it seemed like a film or skin would form on my eyes and my vision would fail me. My sleep was poor, I was out of sorts all the time, felt tired and sluggish and had no energy. I really dreaded to eat anything because I know how I would suffer afterwards.

"This is just the condition I had been in for five years, and while I tried all kinds of medicines I kept getting gradually worse until I read about Tanlac and began taking it. It's the only medicine I have found in all these years that I could conscientiously recommend to my friends. My stomach trouble has disappeared entirely with all the gas, pain and other bad feelings and I'm feeling well and strong in every way. My appetite is fine and I know I am getting nourishment from my food or I could never have gained so much in weight. I sleep good every night now, all my weak dizzy feelings and bad taste are gone, and all this good has come from two bottles of Tanlac for I have just started on my third. Tanlac is my medicine from now on, and I believe anybody suffering like I did will do well to try it."

Will You Help To Distribute the Day's Business More Evenly?

The cost of retailing is larger than it should be by reason of the fact that relatively few women begin their shopping before the middle of the day.

The majority of the salespeople who must be on hand to carry the "peak load" of the afternoon are comparatively idle in the morning hours, and conservation of labour, so essential in these times, is hard to attain.

Shopping in person is also strongly recommended, instead of by the telephone, the calls in many instances being very trifling, after wasting a great deal of precious time during the pressure of business.

Your co-operation in this respect is confidently expected. Morning shopping will result in greater economy—and in the greater satisfaction which comes from making thoughtful, unhurried selections.

Coroner's Inquest Was Adjourned

LINDSAY, Oct. 29.—A coroner's inquest was held Saturday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock to enquire into the cause of the death of the late James Long, of West Ops, who was killed on the G.T.R. track near his farm on Friday afternoon.

The jury afterwards visited Anderson & Nugent's morgue to view the remains, which presented a horrible sight. The legs were terribly mangled and severed from the body while the head was badly bruised and crushed. An examination of his boots showed that they were torn and cut, which strengthens the supposition that the unfortunate man's foot was caught between the planking on the crossing and the rail, and that he was unable to extricate himself before the train bore down upon him.

It appears that the deceased was driving some young cattle from the McLean farm on which he resided, to the Willock farm, north. The cattle were in the ditch when the train was approaching, and it is thought that one or two of them threatened to stampede. In order to prevent them crossing the track Mr. Long stood on guard and in stepping aside to allow the train to pass his foot caught.

The inquest was adjourned until evidence can be produced bearing upon the man's death. Evidence will be given by the train crew.

Mrs. A. Allison, of Peterborough, is a sister of the deceased.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The Great War Veterans' Association, through President Staunton, has accepted the invitation of the Y.M.C.A. for the use of the baths and other privileges, the Association to honour the Great War Veterans badge as a ticket for the Y.M.C.A. Messrs. Turnand Sons have painted a very attractive sign calling the attention of the members of the G.W.V. Association to the fact that they are more than welcome to the privileges of the Y.M.C.A. building.

The Canadian National Y. M. C. A. convention will be held in Ottawa November 2nd to 5th, and will be the most important Y.M.C.A. convention ever held in Canada. The National Y. M. C. A. is now organizing a programme to be taken up immediately following the close of the war. One of the main features of this programme is a national evangelistic effort with the end in view of counteracting the spiritual depression caused by the war. It is hoped that Peterborough will be represented by several members of its Y.M.C.A. Board of Directors. The men who purpose to attend should hand their names in at the Association office by Monday evening at the very latest.

The Boys' Department programme is working out well. Billiard tournaments are now under way for each of the six boys' classes. The gymnasium programme is more attractive than ever and Bible study is being faithfully conducted by the young men who are acting as mentors. A system of game tickets has been instituted, systematizing the use of the various boys' games, so that every boy is now sure of his share of the time allotted for the social work. Charts have been posted on the bulletin boards showing the standing of each class as scored by the points marked for physical, social and religious. The boys are enthusiastic over their class percentages, as the class with the highest standing at Christmas time is to be given a sleigh ride and supper. A number of boys have already taken advantage of the Association offer of a free ticket to the boy who brings in five or more new members. A meeting will be held early next week of the class officers and team captains, when a real membership drive will be instituted between the six classes.

Plans are being perfected for a senior membership campaign to fill the places of the three hundred and thirty-five young men who have enlisted. It is thought that many men will be glad to take an Association ticket if for no other reason than to stand in the places of the fellows who have gone to the front.

Serious Hardship To Large Industries

The Markets at a Glance—Eggs Are Easier

The following comment on the market situation as regards food stuffs, appeared in the Canadian Grocer last week:

One of the most drastic regulations that has yet been issued at the instigation of the Food Controller was put forward during the week when the sale of package cereals by manufacturers and wholesalers was prohibited after December 1, and by retailers after January 1. This will undoubtedly work a serious hardship to large industries that have been specialising along this line, and cause a disarrangement of business without effecting much of a saving, in the one instance the manufacturer does the packaging whereas under the new regulation it must be done by the retailer. An item of more than usual interest was the announcement of prices on new pack corn and tomatoes. These prices are very high and canners state that only 15 per cent. delivery can be made on corn and 20 per cent. on tomatoes. Teas still develop interest in view of the fact our of the lifting of the embargo on shipment into the British market. Considerable buying of tea has resulted from the condition that now exists in anticipation that an active movement of tea may be started.

EGGS EASIER.

Eggs were in easier tone during the week as the result of report of heavy production in the United States. Butter is in a waiting condition, due to the intimation that margarine is likely to be allowed into the Canadian market. Lack of ocean space is holding up shipments and is giving cause for weaker feeling. Barrel pork is in good demand and prices were higher in some quarters. Honey is getting scarce and prices are firm. Advances have been recorded in canned pineapple, candles, sealing wax, cream cheese, blended jams, brooms, salt, canned coffe, lampwick.

Sugar is still in active demand with refiners and wholesalers endeavouring to stem the buying movement by letting sugar out carefully. Flour prices have not been fixed, but it is anticipated some announcement may made about November 1. Wholesalers report business from good to brisk.

IN MEMORIAM.

In Loving Memory of Pte. C. R. Weaver, late of the 93rd Battalion. Killed in action on Oct. 29, 1916.

Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep,
From which none ever wakes to weep;
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Unbroken by the last of foes.
Asleep in Jesus! far from thee,
Thy kindred and the graves may be,
But there is still a blessed sleep
From which none ever wakes to weep.

The following is a letter which appeared in the "Port Hope Guide" of Monday, October 26th. It is from a Canadian Soldier who was a Prisoner in Germany but had Escaped.

How Oshawa Man Escaped From German Prison

Spent Days in Bush, Travelling at Night—His Fourth Attempt to Get Away.

Mrs. Smith, Oshawa, received a letter from her son, Pte. Jack Evans, telling how he escaped from his German prison after four unsuccessful attempts. It is dated from Holland, September 26th.

He says:—I am a little tired, but otherwise O.K. I have succeeded in escaping from Grmany after four unsuccessful attempts. I am now in an internment camp in Holland, where I will have to remain for fourteen days, before returning to England. I expect to be home either for Christmas or New Years, as prisoners that escape are not allowed to return to the front. I really believe that I have aged five years during my sixteen months' stay in Germany. I was thinking all the time of how to get away. I had a few narrow escapes as the Germans have plenty of soldiers on the border. Let me see, now, I have been starved, more or less, for the last nine months, so we must have a big feed for Christmas dinner—about three turkeys, three geese and 20 puddings. I have not tasted an egg in sixteen months. I am certainly a lucky man to get away from that God-forsaken country. If it had not been for parcels I would have been dead at Christmas. The Russian prisoners there are dying every day from starvation. It took me six days and nights to get from my camp to the border. I had to stay in the bush through the day and travel by night.. Gosh but it was cold lying out there in the open, but I made up my mind to escape in 1917, so I just gritted my teeth until I got across. I will ring off for this time, hoping to see you soon. Love to all JACK.

SITUATION IMPROVES ON ITALIAN FRONT

The Allies Will Rush Men, Guns and Munitions To Italy

German Strategic Retreat Seems Imminent In West

Significant Operations Are in Progress on Every Fighting Front, Says War Secretary Baker in His Weekly Review of the War

WINTER WILL COME TO THE AID OF ITALY

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30.—Secretary of War Baker has issued the following review of last week's operations on the various fronts.

"Renewed activity prevails in all theatres of war. Important developments would appear to be impending. Along the western, eastern and Italian fronts, in Macedonia, Rumania, Mesopotamia and even in east Africa, significant operations are in progress.

"It is evident that the allied drives along the western front are broadening in scope and intensity. The whole front, from the Houthulst Wood, through the Passchendaele ridge, southward to Lens, and on to the Aisne, is becoming the scene of increasingly heavy allied pressure, which the enemy is withstanding with difficulty. Side by side the French and British are pushing on through the Flemish lowlands towards Roulers.

"The enemy believing he might find a rift in the otherwise impregnable allied line at the point of junction between the Franco-British forces, directed repeated heavy counter-attacks there. These were repulsed. While the British attacks during the past week have been carried out with imposing effectiveness, it is apparent that the British command is manoeuvring in order to gain important tactical advantages at a minimum cost.

ENEMY'S CASUALTIES RISING.

"The casualties to the enemy are rising steadily. Slowly the allies are enlarging their gains in Flanders, driving into the heart of German resistance in the west. The German armies fight on stubbornly.

If any further evidence of allied superiority be needed, it seems to be supplied by the decisive successes won by the French during the past week. This offensive was launched on a six-mile war front near the west end of the Chemin des Dames at dawn of October 23rd. General Petain so well masked his preparations that the enemy was taken by surprise as to the exact terrain chosen for the attack and was overwhelmed before being able to organize a concentrated resistance. The German lines were penetrated to a depth of well over two miles at one point.

"This fine attack was immediately followed by a second assault in this same sector, crowned with full success. In three days' fighting the Frech have taken 12,000 prisoners, 120 guns of large calibre, and a great quantity of other booty not yet enumerated. The possession of the captured Fort of Malmaison, the key to the entire ridge, and the villages beyond, now makes it possible for the French have taken 12,000 prisoners, tions along the Chemin des Dames, as well as to fire directly through the valley towards the fortress of Laon.

A PASTMASTER OF STRATEGY.

General Petain showed himself a pastmaster of strategy in being able to attain so decisive a victory in so brief a period. The time has apparently come for another "strategic retreat" of the enemy. It means that the Germans must again retire to a new entrenched and carefully prepared line if they intend to resist further in the west.

"The bad weather continues to be the enemy's best protection. He is relying upon this factor to impede the allied advance and by shrouding the battle area in slush, rain and fog, give him a respite until he can prepare himself to meet a fresh onslaught.

"News from the Italian front proves that the Austrians were able to bring sufficient pressure to bear in Berlin in order to secure German assistance. Italy is passing through a difficult moment.

"In the east, German operations in the vicinity of the islands at the mouth of the Finnish Gulf were not carried through without serious losses, both in men and material.

ACTIVITY IN THE BALKANS.

"Engagements of some magnitude are noted along the Rumanian and Macedonian fronts, where artillery duels and raids are increasing in frequency. These, however, are not of more than local importance.

In Mesopotamia, the British are completing and consolidating their advance, driving enemy detachments out of important tactical points on the flanks, thus strengthening their whole line of defence.

"Rumours of an important move by the Turks, reinforced by certain picked German and Austrian units under the command of General Falkenhayn, which have repeatedly been reported throughout the near east, have as yet failed to materialise.

"The training of our troops in France progresses steadily and favourably. Certain units have taken their places in the front line trenches under actual battle conditions."

All Italy Is Confident That Lines Will Hold

Troops, Guns and Munitions Will Be Rushed to Italy by the Allies

PROMISED TRIESTE

Special to Toronto Star and Peterborough Examiner.

ROME, Oct. 30.—(By John R. Hearley)—All Italy is confident that the military situation will clear in a satisfactory fashion within the next two or three days. Complete confidence was expressed to-day in Gen. Cadorna's plans for a stand which will halt the great Germanic invasion. Austria has been forced to promise Trieste to Germany—the price for the Prussian aid in the drive, according to well authenticated Swiss reports received here.

LONDON, Oct. 30.—Troops, guns, and munitions will be rushed to Italy by the Allies. The French and British War Councils confer on the subject.

SHOCK WARRIORS.

ROME, Oct. 30.—Italian newspapers say the defeat by the Teutons was the result of new troops facing Mackenzen's veteran shock warriors.

PROLONG THE WAR.

LONDON, Oct. 30.—General Smuts declared that the German rush on the Italian front would merely prolong the war, as the Allies' victory is no longer in doubt.

Italy Has Ample Man-Power But Needs Steel, Coal, Food

Italian Mission at Washington Confident That Relief Will Be Forthcoming Fast From the Allies - Comment on Reverse

ALLOTMENT OF SHIPPING

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30.—Members of the Italian Mission here are confident that relief and assistance will be forthcoming very soon from Italy's allies. Men are not wanted; Italy has an abundance of men. Munitions, steel, coal, cannon and last but not least, food, are what must be had at once.

The Italian front, which first failed under the enemy's terrific assault, it is said here, was composed of territorials, not seasoned in war.

The break made it necessary for the whole front to be withdrawn to avoid a flanking attack. The Italian General Staff knew that no less than 700,000 German and Austrian troops were facing Cadorna's army. Nevertheless, the attack could have been resisted successfully, Italians here say, had heed been given by the allies to Italy's calls for munitions and supplies.

Most of the 700 cannon lost were taken without having fired a shot for lack of ammunition.

That the allies will now make every effort to supply the Italian army is not doubted. Last week the Italian Embassy here learned that the American Shipping Board had allotted 25 ships of 100,000 tons to Italy, and these ships should be able to carry, not only ammunition, but supplies of food to the Italian people and thereby relieve the internal political strain.

In throwing her enormous forces against the Italians, the mission here believes Germany has played her greatest card. The Italians when turned back were within 35 miles of Lebach, which in the opinion of the Italian general staff, was the key to success and the capture of that place by the Italian forces would have meant the collapse of Austria, which in turn would cause the defeat for Germany.

BERLIN, Oct. 30.— The Bavarian Premier, Count Von Harting, has been offered the position of Chancellor, following Michaelis' resignation, and has asked time to consider

DEATH OF A WELL KNOWN KEENE RESIDENT

The death occurred last evening of William J. Miller, at his home in Keene. The deceased, who was seventy-four years of age, had been ailing for some time. Besides a sorrowing wife he leaves to mourn his loss five daughters, namely: Mrs. T. P. Armstrong, Otonabee; Mrs. F. Wood, Westwood; Mrs. D. Neish, Keene; Mrs. H. Burnham, Vancouver, Mrs. E. Manley, Weyburn, Saskatchewan.

The late Mr. Miller was born in Otonabee and was the son of the late John Miller. About twelve years ago he disposed of his farm, near Keene, and moved to Keene, where he has since resided. He was a member of the Presbyterian church and a Liberal in politics.

The funeral will take place on Wednesday, at 2 o'clock, to Keene cemetery.

Suffering in Germany.

Notwithstanding the efforts of the Germans to conceal the internal conditions of the country, their own newspapers occasionally reveal interesting bits of truth. The Cologne Gazette complains that only 600,000 marks of gold ornaments have been contributed to the Reichsbank, where it is calculated that the mount ought to have been 2,000,000. This shows, according to that aper, that the seriousness of the our is not yet fully realized, and it shorts the public to remember its uty to the hard-pressed Fatherland.

CATTTLE MARKETS.

Union Stock Yards, Oct. 29.—Receipts, 250 cars, with 5,086 cattle, 171 calves, 1,402 hogs, and 3,538 sheep and lambs.

The market was slow for good butcher cattle. One or two loads of choice quality sold from $10 to $10.50, but trade in this class was not at all active. The demand was more active for the cheaper beef grades. Good fat cows were very much in demand and firm at last week's best prices. Medium and light butcher were also in fair demand at prices about steady with last week. The general run of good butcher steers and heifers was in slow demand and weak around $9.25 to $9.75. Sheep steady. Lambs easy. Hogs weak, $16 to $16.25 bid for to-morrow's market. A few decks sold under last week's contracts at $16.75 fed and watered.

Hardware And Metal Markets

Again the trend of the market in hardware commodities has been upward. Price changes have been quite numerous and advances on such articles as bob and Hungarian nails, lamp wick, stove wick, cutting pliers, at nose pliers, raisin seeders, pipe cutters, cutlery, malleable screw clamps, brass rules, putty knives, radiator cement, soldering furnaces, gas pliers, revolving belt punches and glasses for oilers. There has been a weaker tendency in black sheets during the week, in the Toronto market in particular where quotations were made by a number of dealers. The linseed oil market gives evidence of firmness during the week due to advances in arseed. The market for future linseed oil seems fraught with a number of possibilities which may work out to ward a movement either upward or downward. Turpentine was higher during the week, following a firm condition in the primary market. Declines were recorded in lead pipe and lead waste pipe as a result of the lower quotations in the primary market on pig lead. There has been a decidedly weaker tone to the pig lead market and the sagging tendency seems not to have been arrested as yet. Other ingot metals held in a steady position. Old materials are in quiet market due to lack of demand from mills. Shipments of winter lines are now going forward and business in the wholesale hardware trade is reported good to brisk —"Hardware and Metal."

JOHN DILLON'S VIEW OF SINN FEIN PARTY

Says the New Association is Backed By Youth and Enthusiasm, But Not Sense

Mr. John Dillon addressed a great demonstration of Nationalists of North Meath, Monaghan, Louth, and Cavan at Bailieborough recently. He had a flattering reception, and was presented with numerous addresses of welcome and confidence in his party.

Mr. Dillon said he took it that the meeting proved that the Nationalists of Ulster were behind the Irish party, not, as De Valera claimed, behind the Sinn Feiners. The convention, which Sinn Feiners denounced as a sham and a fraud, was the most remarkable and representative body of Irishmen assembled for more than three hundred years, and its assembling and deliberations were, in his opinion, a clear gain, no matter what the result may be. The country was entitled to demand that within a reasonable time the convention should come to a decision one way or other. If the convention agree upon a settlement which is acceptable to the majority of the Irish people, they will have done the best work for Ireland that has been accomplished for many centuries. In the event of failure of the convention, they ought not to allow themselves to be taken by surprise, for events may develop very rapidly, if the convention breaks up without arriving at a settlement.

He was settled in the convention that the time had come when common sense and practical leadership should have fair play in Ireland. The truth was that at this moment Ireland was in a very unenviable position. All the common sense and political experience was on the side of the Irish party, and a large portion, possibly the majority of the youth and enthusiasm, was, for the moment, against them. But youth and enthusiasm, unless guided by experience, might lead a people to defeat and disaster. So far as he was concerned, he did not care how soon the election came. The Sinn Fein leaders would be called upon to define their policy, which up to this time they had obstinately refused to do, and it would be the duty of the Irish party to give the people full opportunity of choice.

Effect of Bad Teeth.

A paper by a dental surgeon in the Journal of the American Medical association, tells the story of bad teeth and the effects on the laboring man's efficiency. The dentist said he made 30,000 examinations in sixteen months of 17,000 Americans and 13,000 foreigners and found 90 per cent in need of dental service. "In 30,000 mouths," the dentist said, "we find 60,000 cavities and 18,000 extractions necessary 78,000 in all. If each one causes an average loss, through waste of time and cost to repair, of $2 it means a cost of $156,000. In New York city last year 67,000 children failed to be promoted to higher grades because of defective teeth, and it costs New York city $1,037,600 to duplicate a year's schooling to those who fail."

"THE PAINTED WOMAN"

"It is right that you should know, before you judge me. You see, John, all my life I had lived in a convent, for my mother was dead, and my father was away, serving the king. I was only a child, then. I knew nothing of love, or hate or of anything, except that I was young, and the world was full of innocence and peace. God!" she sobbed. "It seems so long ago."

For a space she was unable to continue. Barton came nearer to her. She seemed to him very frail, very full of suffering. He felt a great longing to take her in his arms, and comfort her with kisses.

"When my father was made governor," she went on, in a voice broken by sobs, "he said that I should come with him to this beautiful country of New Spain. I was happy—so happy, for I had never been anywhere. I was like a child. We sailed in the month of June, and I dreamed all day of the new and wonderful world in which I was to find peace, and happiness and —and love. Love! Madre de Dios!" She blanced at him very pitifully.

Barton came up to her and touched her arm.

"If you would rather not tell me," he began.

"No—no. You must hear it all." In a moment she had controlled herself.

"At last we came to the shores of Hispaniola. It seemed like Paradise itself, with the birds, the flowers, the sunshine. I was filled with peace. Peace! Dios! That very night, as we sailed through the golden moonlight, there came a hail from the darkness, and the buccaneers were upon us. I was sleeping. I knew nothing, until a great hairy man, with a face of blood, came and dragged me to the deck. My father knelt there in the moonlight, bound, helpless, begging them to spare me."

She paused for a moment, overcome by her memories. Then with a shudder she went on:

"One of the buccaneers—the very one who lies in there now—took me by the wrist.

"We'll spare her, old graybeard," he cried, his face leering into mine, and then he dragged me to him and kissed me.

"I almost fainted, by my father's cries revived me. He sprang to his feet, and with his bound hands he struck the fellow in the face. And then" — again she paused, scarcely able, in the shadow of that terrible memory, to continue—"this murderer, whom they called The Firebrand, cut my father across the face with his sword, and when he fell, ordered his men to fling him into the sea. His poor, bleeding body—into the sea. Madre de Dios!"

"All the other people on the ship they killed for they had no room for more captives. The decks were slippery with their blood. In less than an hour they were gone—all gone—like the spray.

"He brought me here — this man who had kissed me—and put me in this house, with slaves to wait on me —and guard me. He gave me clothes, and jewels, and made much of me, and I prayed to the blessed Virgin that I might die. But God would not let me die. After a time, I prayed for courage to kill him, but he was very strong, very cruel, and I — I was afraid."

She sank upon the edge of the fountain. The stones about its base were no more white than her quivering face.

"God!" said Bartan, very low. "God!"

"After a time I became resigned. I no longer wanted to dit. At twenty—it is hard, to die. Life seems so much —so very much. Then I began to pray that some time, somehow, love might come to me—even to me, wretched thing that I was. And then —you came, and I thought that my prayers had been answered. When you kissed me, it seemed as though, through love, my sins had been swept away, and I had been made clean. I believed that you loved me and would take me away from all this suffering. I knew that I was bad—bad—for he had robbed me of all that men count as good, and virtuous, but the innocence of my soul he could not take away from me—he could not take that. I thought that love would wash away all the horror of it, and give me peace, for I—my soul—had not sinned. You see, John, I was his slave. He did with me what he willed." She turned away in agony of shame. "God—how I fought! With all my strength. You will never know —but he was so strong—so very strong. What could I do against him?

"John—my dear love—I lied to you whom I love. I let you think that I was a good woman, for I loved you, and I could not bear that you should know the truth, and come to hate me. You were all I had—all that I had. I was afraid—afraid that when you come to know, you would turn from me, and hate me."

"And now, dear love," she said, "I have told you everything, and you can see how it has been with me. I do not ask you to marry me. I did not think of marriage, when I told you of my love. Just let me be near you." She clutched his hand with a look of longing. "Let me be near you—wait on you—be your slave. It is all I ask. For so long a time, John, I have been dead—dead—until you came, and made me live again. Don't leave me now. I'll not be much trouble to you. Don't leave me here with him." With a shudder she glanced toward the house. "Just love me — love me, and take me away with you —out into the sunshine—or—I shall —die." She fell sobbing at his feet, covering his hands with kisses.

"Ramona," he asked in confusion, "what is it that you would have me do?" His heart yearned for her. He longed to comfort her, to hold her safe against all harm.

"Just take me away with you — away from all this blackness and horror. I'm so tired—so tired—and I want you so much."

His Puritan austerity was all gone, now. With an exclamation of pity he swept her into his arms.

They stood thus for many moments surrounded by the glory of the dawn. Ramona scarcely breathed so utterly had her strength left her. Through the mists of happiness that enveloped her she presently became aware of a sound in the road without the gate. It was a quick crunching of the powdered shell road and it told her that some one was approaching the house. Her thoughts brought her quickly back to a realization of the danger that confronted Barton and herself.

"Madre de Dios!" she gasped. "The Portugee!" She believed that he had returned, but when she faced the gate and saw who it was that entered her eyes grew wide with wonder.

Two men stalked into the garden. The first was Samuel Willoughby, his face stern and menacing. After him came Uriah Cotton, his thin lips curled in an acid smile. Their somber Puritan garb struck a discordant note in the tropic beauty of the day.

The two occupants of the garden stood facing the newcomers still tightly clasped in each other's arms. For a moment, Barton unable to realize that his companions had returned, stood regarding them in silence.

"Samuel Willoughby! Praise God!" The young man his, face lighting with joy, put Ramona aside, and took a step towards his comrades. The look of anger, of bitter contempt, that he saw upon the face of Uriah Cotton, stopped him.

"Have we sought you these many days, John Barton, only to find you at last, consorting with this woman of Belial?" His voice bit like the lash of a whip.

Barton regarded him with angry astonishment.

"I have lain here many days, sorely wounded," he said. "I thought you had sailed."

"To the Havana only. We returned but last night. An hour ago we met one Ann Devereux, a woman of the town, who told us that you lay here with this daughter of Satan."

"Not so. She has nursed me——"

"A strange nurse," he replied, vehemently. "Does she not wear the scarlet trappings of the Evil One?" His bitter glance swept Ramona's velvet cloak.

"Come, lad," interposed Willoughby. "Get you ready. We sail with the morning's tide."

"But, Captain Willoughby," he said, "this woman has cared for me through great suffering. I cannot leave her now."

"Why not Is this not her place "

"Come away, my son," Cotton interjected. "Has the creature bewitched you "

"Good sirs," exclaimed Ramona, turning to the two Puritans with a gesture of entreaty. "I beg you not to take him away from me. I did but what any woman might do, for one sick unto death."

Cotton turned upon her with a snarl of anger.

"Hold your peace, you lying wench," he cried. "What tale did you tell us when we came here before?"

"I meant no harm. The man was sorely ill. He might have died had you taken him away."

"Brave talk, but it will not serve you. The woman that we met in the town has told us of your iniquities. Go back to him you call your master, and leave this young man in peace." He placed his hand almost commandingly upon Barton's arm. "Come, my son," he said. "We have no time to waste upon this scarlet woman."

Two Splendid Things

One is plenty of open-air exercise.

If you can't get all of that you should, it's all the more important that you should have the other tried-and-true remedy for a torpid liver and bowels that don't act freely and naturally.

Take one pill every night; more only when you're sure it's necessary.

It Seems a Pity to Let These Babies Starve!

TRUE, this is another Belgian appeal, and you are a little tired of Belgium's trouble. But, remember, while it is your problem how to plan variety in three meals a day, most of the Belgian population is standing in line hours every day for a bowl of soup and a slice of bread!

No child can thrive on this ration. Tens of thousands of Belgian children (under 12) are becoming victims of tuberculosis, rickets and other ailments due to the pitifully inadequate food.

The Belgian Children's Health Fund enables the Dutch authorities to take some of the starving little ones to Holland for care and treatment for six weeks. Then what? They must go back to Belgium to make way for other of the 15,000 odd in the waiting list. More could be done if you will listen to the appeal of these babies.

The Belgian Orphan's Fund takes care of fatherless, motherless, friendless waifs. Think how they lost their fathers. $3.70 of your money feeds, clothes and educates an orphan for a whole month. Can you hear the call?

Whatever you contribute goes entire to the Dutch authorities, through the Belgian Minister of the Interior (at Le Havre, France). Not a penny is deducted for administrative expenses, even for this advertising. It is absolutely guaranteed, too, that the Germans derive no benefit whatsoever.

QUIT MEAT WHEN KIDNEYS BOTHER

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder Troubles You

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys they become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood, then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kideys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

The Rise of Buenos Ayres.

The city of Buenos Ayres was founded originally by Pedro de Mendoza in 1535, but the little settlement, composed of about two thousand five hundred people, was nearly destroyed by a combination of hostile Indian tribes, the Querandis being the leaders of this effort to kill off the whites, and as the enmity of the natives seriously interfered with the settlers in their efforts to procure game and other food the colony was also threatened by famine. Mendoza himself succeeded in evading the Indians and reaching Asuncion, Paraguay, and subsequently set out for Spain, but died on the way. The remnant of the little colony left on the Rio de la Plata managed to continue its precarious existence until 1541, when the few houses remaining in the town were literally burned to the ground and the site was abandoned by official decree, the members of the original colony being taken to Asuncion. The second and what may be called the real foundation of the city was effected on June 11th, 1580, when Don Juan de Garay re-established the colony, bringing the settlers with him from Paraguay. The present population of the city is estimated at about one million and thirty thousand.

The Australian Aborigines.

As a hunter the native Australian is marvellously adjusted to his environments. His success lies in an intimate knowledge of the habits of animals on land, in the ground, in trees, and under water, and his wonderfully developed powers of observation. He decoys pelicans by imitating their cries, catches ducks by diving below them, locates an opossum in a tree by marks on the bark or by the flight of mosquitoes, finds snakes by observing the action of birds, and follows a bee to its store for honey. Any animal which leaves a track, however dim, in sand, on rock, or in grass falls an easy prey to the black fellow. Children are taught to track lizards and snakes over bare rocks and to find their absent mother by following tracks too indistinct to serve as a guide for a European.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

THE HONOR MAN

How He Made Good.

By VINGIE E. ROE

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

The great, pine shaggy shoulders of the Cascades reared against the turquoise summer sky. Far down below the turbulent white waters of the Rogue river foamed in their wild bed, and their murmur rose to the mountain crests.

Halfway between the two extremes a fine roadway climbed by steady grades along the giant hills.

Along this road for a matter of a mile were scattered little groups of men still at work upon it. They wore overalls and sateen shirts, and there was nothing in their appearance to differentiate them from other men, yet they were convicts.

Farther on the pine shanties and tents of the honor camp straggled along the road, hugging it close by reason of the steepness of the hills.

Here there was a cook shack where the life of the camp centered. There was no sign of authority anywhere, and McConnel, the superintendent, went about unarmed as far as any one knew.

He was about thirty, dark eyed and haired, though the short curls at his temples were dusted with gray. He was slim and agile, with the suggestion of football and the track meet in every line of his body.

He looked out of place as he labored, stopping from time to time to gaze off over the feathery, whispering slopes dropping so swiftly to the river below.

"Heavens," he said aloud—"the good green earth!"

Presently, as he worked, holding his eyes to the prosaic task under his hand with an effort, a girl came along around the bend on the road above him.

"Hello, impostor!" she called in a strong contralto voice that carried splendidly in the clear air.

"Not on your life!" he said. "Haven't I told you I'm where I belong?"

"Nix!" said the girl shortly, and, sitting down on the fill, she dropped her length to the sloping surface a little above him, where she sat down, drew up her knees, clasped them in her arms and smiled at him with clear, womanly gray eyes.

"You're an impostor. You're not one of the boys at heart."

"No?" he said courteously at this blunt opening of the tacitly shunned subject of the camp. "You're wide astray."

She shook her brown head.

"I know a man," she said simply, "from a criminal."

He smiled a trifle grimly.

"Not in this case," he said. "You don't know what's in my heart."

She did not speak, but under her breath she said to herself sharply:

"Pity I don't!"

She was McConnel's daughter, and her parole was more important than the governor's in the honor camp.

"I might be meditating escape right now," he said, flicking his eyes upward at her face as he bent to his interrupted work again.

"It's a mighty call—a mighty call—that of the open woods and the streams."

He stopped again and looked down over the whispering pine tops to the roaring river.

"To you more than to those others," she said, nodding her head toward the bend ahead which hid the scattered groups, "and a common man might answer it. You are of better fiber."

They both fell silent, while the river roared and the little winds played in the pine tops.

He did not look up again, and she watched his broad shoulders and lithe hips give and take with the motion of the pick for a long time.

Her gray eyes were speculative and very tender, while a tease line of anxiety drew in around her lips. Presently she shifted her position a trifle. As she did so a tiny stone under her foot became dislodged, starting to roll down the sharp decline. Watching, she saw it suddenly disappear in a narrow crack in the worn rock of the hillside.

A moment later there came a tiny thud as it struck bottom, a thud that reverberated with a strangely hollow sound.

The man did not seem to notice it and looked up as she rose after awhile to go on her way.

"Goodby," he said gently, but she did not speak.

At supper time the men came straggling in, some weary and hopeless, others singing, a pathetic file in the high blue shadow of the mountains, and crowded about the basins and the towels.

And she knew—long before her father stood at the cook shack door and checked them off by number as they filed in to the evening meal—she knew.

She did not need the sudden halt in the roll call, the repetition of his number, its iteration, the glances of inquiry, the questions, to tell her that it had happened.

There was sudden confusion. The supper sat untasted on the tables while a search was made of the shacks and tents.

Then there was order, and squads were made up and details given, and she saw a gun suddenly spring into sight on her father's hip.

In ten minutes the honor camp was out on the hillsides starting the first man hunt, for this was the first time a man had broken his parole.

The girl ran at her father's side, lithe and strong in her short skirt and trim mountain boots, silent, listening to the buzz of comment and speculation.

Like bloodhounds the squads went first to the wash below the high arched culvert which carried off the most threatening of the big mountain's rushing rivulets in the rains. Here lay his tools, but of himself or the way he had gone there was no sign.

"Skipped," said her father disdainfully, "and him a 'trusty'—the first man to play the infernal fool, for it'll mean a long addition to his term when he's caught. And he'll be caught. Now we'll spread out from here."

But here the girl pushed through and stood just over the long crack in the slanting rock. She leaned forward a bit, as if she wished her ringing young voice to carry downward.

"You're wrong, dad!" she cried strongly. "I tell you you're wrong! The man's been a hunter—a fisher. He's the putteed, gauntleted, tailored khaki kind, and the pull of the hills and woods has been too strong! He's gone for a time, but he'll come back. The freedom and the wild have waked the old longings in him, and he's flung out to the woods, but he'll come back. I know, for my rifle and my steel fly rod are gone."

"Rosie," said her father gravely, "you've never been a fool before. Go on back to your mother."

Obediently, having fallen contentedly silent, she went, and the squads spread up and down the great watershed in grim and orderly fashion.

When the midnight stars stood overhead there was a tiny, whispering sound at the culvert, and a man came crawling cautiously out of it, having merely raised the mat of drooping ferns that concealed the mouth of as fine a natural underground cavern that gave at the upper end as one might need for such a purpose as his.

Now he straightened cautiously and listened. Far up on the ridge he could hear occasional scattered shouts where his fellows searched for him. He smiled grimly.

His dark eyes were full of fire and grim determination, and the excitement of great hazard marked his clean lined face. He was starting for freedom. But the first careful step appalled him by its consequence. He put his foot on something that rolled and sent him rattling down the wash, while the object of the disaster slid with him.

With his heart stopped still he put out his hands and felt of it. It was a steel fishing rod, its joints tied together. Dangling from it he found, as his fingers slipped along it, a reel full of line and a fly book.

It had been placed directly across the culvert's mouth.

With his face a study in the darkness he crept slowly back, reaching with his sensitive hands along the rocky bed. They came upon the cold metal of a gun—a neat, light rifle.

"Lord!" he said under his breath. Then he sat back up on his heels, motionless in the darkness.

The men came straggling back at dawn for food, ate, talked, compared notes and went out again. All day they hunted the hills and the gorges, slept a bit by turns and returned to the search.

McConnel was grim and angry. He hated to send word to the authorities until he had satisfied himself that he could do nothing himself.

The girl watched slyly from her gray eyes and said nothing, though she was as tense as a drawn string.

The next morning they were a haggard bunch that clustered around the long tables in the cook shack, and McConnel stood at the telephone calling for the valley town. He was sending for help.

The voices of the men were hushed for his benefit, and there was only the clatter of knives against heavy plates.

Suddenly there was an exclamation, the rasp of a chair pushed back on the rough floor, and a man sprang up with a tragic finger pointed to a window that commanded the road.

"Heavens!" he cried shrilly. "There he comes!"

In one hand he carried the lengths of a steel rod and a string of trout fresh from the cool shadows of the spray dashed rocks. In the other he bore a light hunting rifle, while on his back, properly slung with the trick of the true hunter, its slender feet tied on his breast and its weight on his shoulders, there rode a young spike buck.

"Good morning!" he smiled. "By George, I'm hungry!"

McConnel walked up to him, and for a long moment the two men looked each other between the eyes with glances sharp as steel. Then:

"Wash up," said the former shortly. "You're just in time."

As he turned to obey his dark eyes traveled to where the girl stood at the far side of the tables with a dish in her hands, and they were full of a smiling light. Her lips were trembling and her lashes wet with tears.

He nodded ever so slightly.

Presently as he washed at the basins she passed him, and her hand rested for a moment on his muscled arm under its torn sleeve with an eloquent caressing touch.

"Man," she laughed tremulously, "oh, man!"

Shaw on War.

At the summer school of the Fabian Society at Godalming Mr. G. Bernard Shaw spoke on the war and the proposed conference at Stockholm. He said:

"I am very doubtful about going to Stockholm. I don't quite see what we are going there for. War is a thing which does not enter the Socialist scheme of society. When the Kaiser drew the sword he immediately staked every acre of territory and every penny he had got, and when we went in on the other side we did the same, and whoever loses will have to pay. The notion that any number of persons like Socialists or pacifists or anybody else can come in and say that their feelings must be considered is to me almost inconceivably silly. Who is going to listen to them?

"You may take it from me that if the Germans beat us in this war they will skin us alive, and if we beat the Germans we shall skin them alive, and we cannot help doing it. No amount of agitation of Socialists, pacifists or anyone else will prevent us taking the fullest measure of our victory. If we are not going to do so what are we fighting for? All you can honestly say if you go to Stockholm is that if Germany wins she will get the last ounce out of us, and that if we win we shall do the same. But is it worth while going to Stockholm just to say that?

"I want to have war thoroughly tried out on this occasion. If both sides do their utmost to win and it turns out that neither of them can win except at a price which is suicidal then we may come to the point at which the war may end by both sides saying: 'We are very sorry; it is all up with war.'"

Antiquity of Nursery Rhymes.

"Sing a Song of Sixpence" is as old as the sixteenth century. "Three Blind Mice" is found in a music-book dated 1609. "The Frog and the Mouse" was licensed in 1580. "Three Children Sliding on the Ice" dates from 1639. "London Bridge is Broken Down" is of "unfathomable" antiquity. "Boys and Girls Come Out to Play" is certainly as old as the reign of Charles the Second, as is also "Luck Locket Lost Her Pocket," to the tune of which the American song, "Yankee Doodle," was written. "Pussy Cat, Where Have You Been?" is one of the age of Queen Bess. "Little Jack Horner" is older than the seventeenth century. "The Old Woman Tossed in a Blanket" is of the reign of James the Second, to which monarch it is said to allude.

ACTORS OUT OF A JOB.

No Matter How Discouraged, They Must Smile and Look Prosperous.

In the American Magazine Walter Prichard Eaton says:

"Did you ever hunt for a job—any job? It isn't a form of indoor or outdoor sport that you would naturally choose, is it? It doesn't add greatly to your self esteem, your self confidence, the development of your powers, to come home tired and discouraged night after night. And player folk are peculiarly sensitive to such influences, or they would not be players. It is bad enough to rust in idleness, but it is worse to feel that you are not wanted or that you are forgotten or that you have to be judged by ignorant men, even by office boys, your chance even to earn a living depending on the fastes of those you often despise.

"Yet the actor or the actress must show none of this feeling. He or she must keep up a smiling front, must look prosperous and well dressed, youthful and charming, for the shabby actor has no chance at all. Walk along Broadway in July when the casts are being selected for the following season and observe the players on the sidewalks, conversing on the corners, coming out of the office buildings. The men are jaunty; they swing sticks; they look just a shade too 'fashionable.' The women wear their prettiest frocks and always silk stockings. But sometimes you catch a worried look on their faces, a look even of apprehension. Alone, and a mask seems to drop. Not all of them go to the Knickerbocker for luncheon—far from it. There are little cubbyhole lunchrooms where you will find these cane swinging and silk stockinged bearers of the banner of romance. They are hunting jobs, and some of them in vain."

The English Oak.

English oak, says a book called "Amateur Joinery in the Home," is the most beautiful and durable of all the varieties of oak suitable for joinery, but it is liable to warp unless thoroughly air-dried and seasoned by exposure. "We have known boards sawn from beams, taken out of houses more than 100 years old, to warp immediately to a considerable extent," the authors state. The finest quality of this wood is now by no means common, though at one time vast forests of oak covered the greater part of England.

HEAD STUFFED FROM CATARRH OR A COLD

Says Cream Applied in Nostrils Opens Air Passages Right Up.

Instant relief — no waiting. Your clogged nostrils open right up; the air passages of your head clear and you can breathe freely. No more hawking, swollen mucous membrane and relief snuffling, blowing, headache, dryness. No struggling for breath at night; your cold or catarrh disappears.

Get a small bottle of Elys Cream Balm from your druggist now. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic, healing cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothes the inflamed or comes instantly.

It's just fine. Don't stay stuffed-up with a cold or nasty catarrh.

ANCIENT MOLDAVIA

Has Become One of the Battlegrounds on Eastern Front.

With the Austro-German armies hammering the gates of its defense on the north and with Central Power forces attacking on the south, Moldavia, the northern wing of Rumania, which lies between the Carpathians on the west, and the Pruth River on the east, promises to become a theatre of unusual war interest.

Moldavia, the north wing of the butterfly-shaped kingdom of Roumania, has approximately one-fourth of the population and one-fourth of the area of that country, the population being a little less than 2,250,000, and the area a little less than 15,000 square miles. To the west of it lies Transylvania, and the Austrian crown land of Bukowina. To the east lies Bessarabia, with the river Pruth marking the boundary the entire distance. On the south is Wallachia, and the other wing of the Roumanian kingdom.

The Sereth River divided Moldavia into eastern and western sections, flowing the entire length of the principality along the foothills of the Carpathian Mountains. Eastern Moldavia, composed mainly of the high plateau lying between the Pruth and the Sereth, is approximately 275 miles long, and has an average width of about 50 miles. Western Moldavia is entirely mountainous, the crest of the Carpathians forming the boundary between it and Austria-Hungary. Generally speaking, the Central Powers' battle line on the south stretches from the intersection of the Pruth and the Sereth rivers with the Danube, through Focshani and to the mountains.

There are more railroads in Moldavia than are usually found in Southeastern Europe. One line enters along with the Sereth from Bukowina and parallels that river all the way to Focshani. Another line enters through the Carpathians from Transylvania by way of the Gyimes Pass and forms a junction with the Sereth River line some 30 miles above Focshani. A third line follows in a general way the River Pruth from the extreme northern end of Moldavia to its confluence with the Danube. In addition to these there are several branch lines, running at right angles to the main lines and providing excellent facilities for the movement of troops in any desired direction.

The history of the principality of Moldavia is of striking interest. It was founded about the middle of the fourteenth century by the Wallach Voivode Bogden. It soon grew to be a large state, embracing the present Moldavia, Bukowina, and Bessarabia. Poland and Hungary were both rivals for favor at the Moldavian court, with neither able permanently to assert its overlordship. Stephen the Great ruled Moldavia from 1457 to 1504 and defied the Turks, winning a signal victory over them at Rakova in 1475. Gradually growing stronger, however, the Moslems succeeded again, under Stephen the Great's successor, in establishing their mastery.

Although the Turks never settled the country, they proceeded to build fortresses, and thus managed to hold their ground.

Up to 1821 the country was governed by hospodars appointed by the Sultan from the families of Greek aristocrats. In that year native princes were once more made to head the Government, but in 1829, Russia, having gained a victory over Turkey, was accorded a protectorate over Moldavia under the Treaty of Adrianople. This treaty was terminated by the Crimean War and the Treaty of Paris. Thereafter the Powers agreed to set up the two principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia, which in their turn decided, in 1859-61, that they would unite under one head and become one country. They later called a German prince to their throne, which accounts for the Teutonic origin of the present dynasty ruling Roumania.

As a Peps tablet is dissolved in the mouth, powerful medicines are released in the form of fumes, which are inhaled with the breath and come into direct contact with the bronchial tubes and lungs in a way that medicine swallowed into the stomach could not possibly do.

By this direct action Peps not only strengthen and protect any weak spot in the chest but give immediate relief to the chronic bronchitis sufferer. Being germicidal, they also provide the throat and chest with a perfect defence against the germs which spread coughs, colds, sore throat, "la grippe," and even lung trouble.

Hertzog Is Trouble Maker

A NATAL statesman of standing and influence wrote a few months before the South African Union Act came into operation: "Over-anxiety on the part of the Boer population was responsible for the hurrying on of the negotiations and a desire on the part of the Liberal Government in power in Great Britain to claim the Kudos of consummating the union was the reason for the Act being rushed through the British Parliament. It is to be earnestly hoped that the future will not bring disaster." Major P. A. Silburn, D. S.O., who wrote these words in January, 1910, had, however, something more to say on the subject. It was, he admitted, quite natural that the British citizens of South Africa, and especially of Natal, should show impatience at the administration of a purely Boer Government, and that a large section of the loyal British of Natal should have bitterly opposed the methods of the political leaders and should have resented with indignation the attitude of their five delegates to the convention in consenting to Natal's absorption by the three neighboring states. At the same time he was glad to acknowledge that there were a good many educated and enlightened Boer gentlemen who thoroughly and justly enjoyed the confidence of the British population, and who might be expected to co-operate with the British colonists in making the Union Act a powerful instrument for the good government of South Africa. In spite of the measure of uncertainty that marked the change, the legislative union of South Africa has united the third set of British colonies. In Canada, Australia, and South Africa, eighteen administrations have been converted into three governments, and the tendency since then has been towards a closer union of the Imperial units.

It must, nevertheless, be admitted that this, the Jubilee year of the B.N.A. Act, which began a movement so resultful, has been a time of trial to Dominion, Commonwealth, and Union. When it was found that legislative union was sure to gain the day against federation and that the provincial councils would be of small importance compared with the assemblies which they succeeded, the will of the majority, nevertheless, strengthened the provincial administrations by placing under their control the important subjects of elementary and intermediate education. Virtually since the war ended, General Hertzog has made the school question his raison d'etre for agitation. Since the passage of the Union Act he has been the determined opponent of General Botha and his colleagues and followers. After the outbreak of the present war, his influence was on the side of disaffection and, although he had been one of the prominent Boers who consented to the Union, the propaganda which he has initiated for the Nationalist party is openly republican and, therefore, in antagonism to the constitution. In June last Mr. Merriman moved a resolution condemning General Hertzog's republican programme as directly at variance with the constitution of the Union and opposed to the best interests of the country, and said that it was owing to it that the relations between the two chief sections of the white races in South Africa were so threatening. Mr. Merriman had been known as the consistent friend and wise counsellor of the Dutch-speaking people in South Africa, and he warned General Hertzog that, in fostering dissension between them and their compatriots who spoke English, he was "playing with fire." General Botha, who is the special object of General Hertzog's dislike, also spoke gravely of his conduct in heading a party of malcontents against the constitution to which he had given his approval.

But appeals to his patriotism had no effect on General Hertzog save to make him redouble his efforts to add to the strength of his malcontent following in the three Boer provinces. Under his direction the elections for the Provincial Councils, which closed some weeks ago, were fought by the Nationalists against the Progressive and South African parties. It was evident that the weakening of General Botha's influence was an aim which General Hertzog sought no less eagerly than the deepening of the lines of division between Boer and Briton. In the Orange Free State Province lies the stronghold of his power. The recent provincial elections disclosed the fact that his influence had made considerable gains in the Cape Province, where he succeeded in wresting several council seats from the South African party, which is that of Gen. Botha. Hertzog's followers also won seats in the Transvaal, and, there, as well as in the Cape, the conflict was waged on a republican basis. In the Cape Province Council the Hertzogite Nationalists have now fifteen representatives, the Unionists having nineteen, while the South African party, which is the Premier's, has eleven. In the Orange Province Gen. Hertzog has long been supreme, and in the Transvaal, as already mentioned, where General Botha might reasonably expect to defy him, he has shaken his hold on the control of the Provincial Council.

Hitherto, notwithstanding Hertzog's use of the problems of education in the Orange Province, the loyal members of all names had been disposed to look upon council politics as something negligible. But this new agitation that General Hertzog has started and insisted on pushing forward for his own ends, has awakened them to the danger of such neglect where they have to deal with a man so prejudiced and so headstrong.

A Social Event.

"A marriage has been arranged between Lady Maud Cavendish, eldest daughter of his Excellency the Governor-General and the Duchess of Devonshire, and Captain Angus Mackintosh, A.D.C., Royal Horse Guards."

Captain Mackintosh has been at Rideau Hall for the past two years, having been with the Duke of Connaught for some time before the latter's departure. He is 32 years of age. Lady Maud is 21.

WHERE A DAY IS FOUR DAYS LONG

IN Alaska there is a time when a day is four days long. From the 19th to 22nd of June, inclusive, the sun does not set. It is because of this that the vast country on the northwest of the American continent is called "The Land of the Midnight Sun." It fills one with strange thrills to be in the midst of an open country at midnight and then see old Sol look at you with a sleepy eye that peeps just above the horizon.

The far famed loveliness of Alaska is an invitation to the tourist to visit it. Thousands go there annually. Transportation facilities are convenient. Some travel thousands of miles to see this region, but the invigorating atmosphere, the endless variety of mountain, river, lake, waterfall, forest and glacier scenery compensate well for the journey. On many of the plains and valleys the vegetation is rich, and excellent crops are raised.

The voyage along the Pacific coast from Vancouver to Skagway is delightful. The Canadian Pacific runs an excellent service of passenger vessels on this route. Last summer I took the trip. A White Pass and Yukon Route train brought me from Skagway to the town of White Horse on the Yukon River. There I boarded the steamer "Casca" and took a trip into the heart of the country. There were about fifty tourists on the boat. It was the 21st of June, and we were all anticipating the experience of gazing on the sun at midnight. Nearly everybody had a camera in readiness. At 11 o'clock p.m. we were near Fort Yukon, and Sol then appeared to be a little clouded, but it was plain daylight. At midnight the Lord of Light had brushed away the clouds and appeared more like the full moon than the sun we know in Canada. We took many photographs of him as he climbed higher on the stairs of heaven and arrayed himself in his brightest sheen.

As we sailed along the banks of the Yukon River we saw some bears and moose patrol the wilds, and the huskies—or big Alaskan dogs that draw the sleighs in the winter—kept the air busy in carrying the sounds of their baying to our ears. Each homesteader keeps a little herd of these dogs, and they are as useful to him as horses are to the residents of other countries. We continued our course until we were well inside the Arctic Circle, and while there we did not feel the necessity for heavy overcoats.

The population of Alaska embraces Eskimos and Indians, but it is by the large influx of white settlers that the country is being developed. Lumbering and mining are the principal industries, and they are carried on with profit. The United States paid $7,200,000 to the Russian Government for Alaska, and the bargain seems to have been a good one for the purchasers, for in recent years immense quantities of gold and other minerals, fish, furs and timber have been produced in the country.

The making of railways is proceeding. Alaska is likely to become a sphere of considerable business activity. For the hunter and tourist the place holds a thousand charms. It is enchanting to look on at all times, but it appears at its best in June when it has that wonderful day of 96 hours in length.

GREATEST OF ALL SUNS.

Star gazers of northern lands often overlook the fact that some of the most brilliant and beautiful stars and finest nebulae and star clusters in the heavens belong to the southern hemisphere and are not visible in our latitudes.

Magnificent blue Canopus, the second brightest star in the heavens, lies just below our southern horizon in the large and important southern constellation Argo Navis, named for the famous ship of the Argonauts. It is usually divided into three constellations—Puppis, Carina and Vela. Canopus was the chief pilot of the Argonauts, but the star was known and worshiped on the banks of the Nile long before it received its name from the Greeks and has been called the Star of Egypt. It has also been a guide to many tribes in Africa, South America and Australia in their journeys through pathless wilds.

Although Sirius appears nearly twice as brilliant as Canopus, this is due only to the fact that Sirius is comparatively near to us, not quite nine light years distant, while Canopus has been estimated to be at a distance of 400 light years. It is, as far as we know, the greatest of all the giant suns equal in light giving power to 55,000 suns such as our own. Sirius, with a brilliancy estimated at forty-eight times that of the sun, shrinks into a pygmy when contrasted with Canopus.

Travelling in Africa.

The one-wheeled rickshaw of Africa, like its two-wheeled ancestor, the jinricksha of Japan, was the invention of a missionary, the designer of the African vehicle being a Swede engaged in mission work on the Congo. An early form of the vehicle consists of a framework of bicycle tubing, supporting a cushioned chair-seat over a single, low rubber-tired wheel. The handles in front form a continuous loop and the rear handles resemble those of a wheelbarrow. Two native boys can easily transport a passenger in the rickshaw, and it is the only vehicle practicable for many of the narrow and crooked foot trails which are still the only roads in the greater part of Africa.

LEGENDS OF DELUGE.

Some Wild Tribes Believe Original Race Was Destroyed by Fire.

The greatest obstacle in the path of those cynical on the subject of the Deluge has always been the universality of the tradition. Egypt and Japan are perhaps the only countries where the story of a great flood has not been handed down from the murk of the ages. The form of the legend has varied in a hundred ways, but usually it has included the destruction of nearly all living creatures.

In two widely separated parts of the world there has been a deviation in the matter of the destroying element. The Mundari of East India and two tribes of South America believe that the flood was not of water, but of fire. That the Yuracares of Bolivia, an unusually tall, light colored and handsome tribe, held this belief has been known. Now we have the details of the legend that is accepted by the Apiacas, a dying race that inhabits part of Matto Grosso, the wild heart of South America, the most unfamiliar part of Brazil until 1914, when a distinguished American put Rio Teodoro on the map.

The fire deluge story appears in the Journal of the University of Pennsylvania Museum in William Curtis Farabee's narrative of three years' exploration:

"For some unknown reason, the people were all destroyed, not by a flood, as among the Wapisiana, but by fire, which came down from the sun and burnt up everything. Even the water evaporated. (Their traditional home was in this semi-desert region.) After five days, the Creator, who had previously gone up above, sent a vulture from the sky to see if the earth was cold, but he found the burnt bodies of men and remained to eat them. The Creator after waiting four days sent a blackbird, but he found the charred buds of the trees, and did not return. He then sent down the dove, who carried back some earth between his toes and thus the Creator knew that the fire was out. Then the Creator came down and made men and animals of white clay, the kind which is used in making pottery."

There you have the creation, from the Biblical clay, but following the Deluge. According to the Apiaca belief the Creator made the earth, but not the men who peopled it before the fire. If the Indians got the legend from the missionaries—a favorite explanation of the cynic—they (the Indians) mixed it sadly. Besides, the missionaries would have stuck to the flood of water, reserving fire for another and more personal chapter. But the priests early in South America probably spent little time on Old Testament matters. Their errand was to preach the salvation of Golgotha.

The Apiacas may have received the fire legend from the Yuracares, but the latter scarcely had it from Peru, where the traditional flood was of water. It is curious to note that the student must turn to India, not only to find the fire tradition duplicated but also to come upon the other distinguishing feature of the South American legend, the destruction and recreation of man; for that is the way the tale runs in Kashmir. Elsewhere in the world some one or something escaped, even if it be only the wolf of the Wappo Indians. It is a long way from the Himalayas to the headwaters of the Amazon, but men do move and their traditions follow as closely as their shadows.

In Genesis there was the raven and the dove. The Apiacan historian gives us the vulture, the blackbird, and the dove. Some peoples believe that the crow and the hummingbird were used as messengers, but the dove is almost as universal as the flood itself. Even to-day it is an overworked bird, sent on fool's errands by simpletons who believe that merely sending it will abate the modern flood of fire.

The Cat and Its Tail.

The question having arisen, "Why does the cat have a tail?" the scientists seem willing to answer it with another question, "How would the cat look without a tail?" No one can gainsay the fact that the tail is a valuable ornament. The cat without one is a sorry sight. But there are those who maintain that the tail serves the cat as a sort of gyroscope, balancing the body in leaping, says the Popular Science Monthly. This cannot be wholly true, for Manx cats get along very well without tails, and rabbits have no use for them at all. Yet both the Manx cats and rabbits do a lot of leaping. After all it looks as if the tail is only an ornament, unless it is a kind of safety valve for expression in exciting times.

Of course there are instances where the tail serves some purpose other than that of art. The monkey finds his useful as a sort of fifth leg; the horse uses his as a fly-swatter, as does the lion; the crocodile uses his for swimming, as do the seal and the turtle and other aquatic creatures; and the rattlesnake uses his for warning enemies. According to W. D. Matthews, of the American Museum of Natural History, the tail was a necessary organ for the aquatic and amphibious ancestors from which the higher animals are descended. When they took to terrestrial life and to walking on all fours, the tail became more or less superfluous.

That is the proportion of medicine contained in Zam-Buk, and that is why Zam-Buk's healing powers are so superior to those of ordinary ointments, which contain but 5 per cent. medicine and the balance animal fat.

Mr. Anges Josey of Spry Harbor, Halifax Co., N.S., writes: "For three year I suffered terribly with eczema on my hands. The itching was so intense that it kept me awake at nights. I used numerous 'so-called' eczema cures, but got no better until I commenced applying Zam-Buk. The use of this wonderful healer, however, has entirely rid me of this distressing disease."

Italian Soldiers Paint Faces.

The Italians holding down trenches in the Alps have two enemies to deal with, the Austrians and the snow. Of the two the Italians prefer to encounter the Austrians. As it is, they have to face both and get along as best they can, says the Popular Science Monthly. In order to do this they supply themselves with gunpowder and rifles for the Austrians and black grease and glasses for the sun.

Their faces and hands are besmeared with black grease to protect them from the burning rays of the sun, which are doubly strong when reflected from the snow. They prefer to use vaseline, but that is too expensive. The snow not only burns the faces of the troops, but it injures their eyes so that sun glasses have to be worn. Needless to say, the black grease and the sun glasses make the Italians excellent targets against a background of white snow.

However, the Alpine Italian troops do not always use grease and sun glasses. When there is hot fighting to be done in the Alps, they don snow-white suits and even paint their rifles white. In such a uniform they are practically invisible.

THE BRITISH FORCES AGAIN ATTACK

SATISFACTORY PROGRESS HAS BEEN MADE

Former Italian Headquarters Is Captured By The Enemy

Berlin Report Announces Udine Has Fallen to Austro-Germans---British Renew the Offensive This Morning, Attacking With Good Results North of the Ypres-Roulers Railway---German Attack on Aisne Front Is Repulsed.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

BERLIN, via London, October 30. — Udine, the former Italian headquarters, has been occupied by the Austro-German forces, army headquarters announced to-day.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS, October 30.—A German attack on the Aisne front near Cerny was repulsed last night by the French, the War Office announces.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

WASHINGTON, October 30.—Ten million dollars more was advanced to France to-day by the United States Government, bringing the credits to the Allies to a total of $2,466,400,000.

ROME, October 30.—The Italian retreat continued yesterday, the War Office announces. Italian cavalry is in contact with the vanguards of advancing enemy. The Italians destroyed the bridges over the Isonzo and fought a rear-ghard action, by which means they checked the Austro-German advance.

(Canadian Fress Despatch.)

AMSTERDAM, October 30. — The Austro-German offensive against Italy, according to the Vorwaerts of Berlin, was not undertaken in an aggressive spirit with the object of conquest, but solely to bring peace nearer.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, October 30.—The British attacked on the Flanders front early this morning. The announcement follows:

At 5:45 o'clock this morning we attacked north of the Ypres-Roulers railroad. Our troops are reported to be making good progress.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

NEW YORK, October 30.—The battle in Flanders was resumed by the infantry this morning when the British moved forward to attack north of the Ypres-Roulers railroad. Field Marshal Haig announced the renewal of the offensive in his usual laconic style, adding merely that the troops were reported to be making good progress. The line of attack takes in the Passchendaele region where the remainder of the ridge of that name and the town itself are nearby British objectives. The thrust here is also carrying the Entente forces on a direct line toward the railway junction point at Roulers, approximately five miles distant. On the Oisne front in Northern France, where the French in their recent advance southwest of Laon have jeopardized the safety of a considerable section of the German lines, the Germans delivered an attack last night in an effort to push back the French in the region of Cerny. The French easily repulsed this assault.

Artillery battle is continuing in the sector in which the French made their advance, where hostile forces are now lined up on opposite sides of the Oise-Aisne Canal. In the Verdun region General Petain's troops last night regained more of the small strip of ground lost in a recent German assault in Caurieres Wood sector east of the Meuse.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, October 30.—The Germans have been driven back in places to a depth of nearly 1,000 yards in to-day's British drive on the Ypres front, a Reuter's correspondent at British headquarters reports.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, October 30.—The defense of Petrograd against possible attack devolves upon the Joint Military Committee embracing the Soldiers' and Workmen's delegates, and all military and political elements. Each committee is in process of formation according to the War Minister. The Cossacks' Army Union at Nova Charkack, calls the attention of the Government to the graduate removal of Cossacks from the guard over General Korniloff, who is being held for trial on account of the movement to overthrow the Kerensky Government.

SEPARATE PEACE FOR RUSSIA IS DECLARED IMPOSSIBLE

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, Monday—Foreign Minister Terestchenko in addressing the preliminary parliament to-day said a separate peace was impossible, and that the defense of Russian territory was one of the fundamental needs.

The Foreign Minister said the absolute independence of Courland and perhaps of Poland and Lithuania was impossible as it would mean that Russia would return to the days before Peter. He also asserted the complete demobilization and disarmament and neutralization of canals and straits were impossible. Russia's foreign policy had not changed, the Minister continued, since the first statement enunciating the principles of no indemnities, no annexation and the right of nations to self-definition. M. Terestchenko declared that the offers for a separate peace and the settlement in favour of them were strengest last May when they were followed by the Russian offensive. "There is a rumour that the Allies wished to leave Russia to her fate," the Foreign Minister continued, "but I state officially that it is untrue. Germany's aim is to separate Russia from the Allies, and if possible to do this by peaceful means in order to use Russia economically afterward.

Special Services At Bethany Tabernacle

Special evangelistic services will be held in Bethany Tabernacle, beginning on Thursday, Nov. 1st, at 8 p.m.; Friday at 3 and 8 p.m.; Sunday, Nov. 4th, 11 a.m., 3 p.m., 7 p.m. Mrs. Dr. Walter Turnbull of Nyack Institute, New York, will speak at each of these meetings. Mrs. Turnbull has been for years the National Evangelist for the Young People of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, and is a thoroughly competent and very acceptable platform speaker. Do not fail to hear her while she is here.

WAR VETERANS TO BE REPRESENTED AT VICTORIA HALL

Big Delegation of Returned Soldiers Will Attend To-night's Meeting to Keep a Watchful Eye on the Political Developments That May Be Revealed

LAST NIGHT'S MEETING

The Peterborough branch of the Great War Veterans' Association will be well represented at the meeting called by the Win-the-War League in Victoria Hall to-night. The members of the G.W.V.A. intend to keep a watchful eye on the proceedings in order that they may familiarise themselves with possible developments in the political arena. The matter was discussed at the regular semi-monthly meeting of the Veterans in the Armouries last night, and it was decided to request as many members of the Association as possible to be on hand to-night.

President H. J. Staunton was in the chair at last night's meeting. Owing to the inclemency of the weather the attendance was not as large as usual, although the members of the executive were nearly all present

Four applications for membership were submitted to the meeting and were favourably received. All four applicants have seen service in France and have been wounded. Two of them, Ptes. McFadden and Hampton are residents of Lakefield.

A letter from Mr. C. M. Meserve, general secretary of the Y.M.C.A., offering members of the G.W.V.A. the use of the baths and other privileges at the "Y." free of charge was read, and on motion a vote of thanks was tendered the Y.M.C.A. for their kindness, which will be appreciated by all members of the Veterans' Association.

A Western Visitor.

The Veterans enjoyed the pleasure of a visit from an old Peterborough boy, Comrade Lieut. Armstrong, a member of the Saskatoon branch of the G.W.V.A., who was called upon to address the meeting.

Lieut. Armstrong gave an interesting account of the activities of the Saskatoon branch, which had secured subscriptions amounting to $10,000 for the work of the G.W.V.A. A club building had been opened, with bedroom accommodation for some twelve or fifteen men, and the building was in constant use, inasmuch

BIG DRIVE ON TO-DAY

Preliminary Canvass For Red Cross Yesterday Netted $4,500 With More to Come While the Main Campaign Got Under Way This Morning

PROSPECTS ARE ROSY

The big campaign for $20,000 for the Peterborough branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society is in full swing to-day, with a corps of enthusiastic canvassers and the brightest prospects of attaining the objective.

The importance of the Red Cross work is fully recognized by the citizens of Peterborough and the magnificent reports presented at the annual meeting on Friday have given the public an insight into just what is being accomplished by the local branch. The result is that the canvassers are being received in splendid fashion everywhere.

Yesterday, a committee consisting of Messrs. T. F. Matthews and W. G. Morrow waited upon a number of manufacturers and business firms and were most successful in their mission. Although they were unable to visit all the men on their list they were able to report last night that $4,500 had been subscribed, with excellent prospects of at least $1,200 or $1,500 more from this list. This expediton yesterday is only a curtain-raiser to the big drive which opened this morning.

Campaign headquarters are located on George street, two doors north of the Examiner office. The premises have been attractively decorated and a banner strung across the street calls attention to headquarters.

If you have been missed by the collectors you can leave your donation with one of the workers at headquarters. One working man dropped in yesterday while the premises were being decorated and left a dollar bill with one of the committee. A telephone has been installed and the number of the headquarters phone is 20,600.

MILITARY MEDAL FOR PETERBORO' SOLDIER

Bombardier Roy Harper Wins Coveted Trophy

Another Peterborough soldier to win the Military Medal is Bombardier Roy Harper, son of Mr. and Mrs. David Harper, 64 Charlotte street. Bombardier Harper was awarded the medal for bravry on the field on August the fifteenth last. Bombardier Harper was a member of the 33rd Battery and has been on the firing line for the past fifteen months. Before enlisting Bombardier Harper was employed by H. Le Brun & Co., and has a host of friends in Peterborough who will be glad to learn of the honour he has won.

ITALANS ARE CONFIDENT

Battle Which is Developing May Be Decisive For Whole Entente Says One Paper

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

By John P. Hearly.

ROME Oct. 29.—"Our enemies are probably playing their last card," comments the Tribunal to-day. "A battle which is developing, and which may occur on the Friuli Plain, may be decisive for the whole Entente."

"Even if the centre and Julian wing are compelled to withdraw, this will have no final consequence," said the Popolo d'Italia.

"We are steadfast and ready to reject with scorn any attitude creating difficulties with the directing powers," said the Osservatore Romano.

THE FIFTY-SECOND ANNUAL SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION OPENED TO-DAY

Presidential Address Was Delivered by the Rev. Geo. Stafford--Mayor Duffus Extends Freedom of the City to the Delegates.

OPENING MEETING

Section "B" of the fifty-second annual Sunday School Convention of the Ontario Sunday School Association opened this morning in George St. Methodist church with a prayer and song service led by Mr. J. H. Renwick. Pro. C. C. Laugher presided at the piano.

This afternoon Prof. E. O. Excell, of Chicago arrived in the city and will take charge of the musical features of the convention until the close. Prof. Excell will be assisted by Mr. J. H. Renwick and Miss Ida Sanderson, of this city. This feature of the convention has been adequately provided for and an enjoyable time is promised to those who attend the meetings.

Morning Session.

The morning session was attended by nearly three hundred delegates from all over Ontario. Many of those present were busy taking notes, which will ultimately form the basis of reports that will find their way back into the Sunday schools of the province. The aim of the Association is to so co-ordinate the methods and organize the activities of the various schools in its constituency that each school will have the benefit of the efficiency of the best.

Presidential Address.

The Presidential address was delivered by the Rev. George Stafford, who in a few words outlined the aims and objects of the convention. In referring to new ideas in the development of Sunday school activities, the speaker said it was one thing to adopt and another thing to adapt.

Key of the City.

Mayor Duffus extended a hearty welcome to the visiting delegates and incidentally presented the convention with a huge four foot key which the Mayor assured his auditors would open any door in the city you could get it into excepting the civic treasury, of which the speaker was the chief guardian. Mayor Duffus enumerated a number of advantages which the city possesses and in conclusion spoke of the good work that has been accomplished by the ladies not only in Sunday school work but in many other activities pertaining to the war.

"Our Mission."

Mr. Joseph Wearing, President of the Peterborough Sunday School Association, welcomed the delegates on behalf of the local Association. Mr. Wearing said that the preceding speaker had overlooked one local advantage and that is, this city has the best Mayor in the province. "Our Mission," said Mr. Wearing, "is to guide the juvenile element along paths of knowledge which will bring them to a proper recognition of God and His mercies.

Two Objects.

Dr. Elmer J. Lake, of Kingston, in reply said that the two principle objects in meeting together was to create a deeper enthusiasm in the work and secondly to inspire fresh courage. Dr. Lake said it was the first time he had known a key to be presented to a convention, but he was fully convinced that the hospitality of the citizens was fully in proportion to the size of the key.

The programme for this evening and to-morrow is as follows:

Tuesday Evening.

7.45—Song Service. Prof. Excell.
8.10—"The Spiritual Aim of the Graded Lessons," Mrs. Bryner.
8.40—Music and Offering.
9.00—"The Stronger Sunday School for the Greater Demands," R. A. Waite.

Wednesday Morning.

Departmental and Divisional Sessions.

WONDERFUL WORK OF FRENCH AVIATORS

Perfectly Co-ordinated Team Work Between Flyers and Artillery in Latest Advance—No German Battery Fired More Than Six Shots Before It Was Located.

(By Henry Wood.)

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES IN FLANDERS, October 30.—The most perfectly co-ordinated "team work" in the history of warfare brought France's veterans a victory in their latest bite forward in Flanders. So perfect was the co-ordination between the aviators and the French guns that throughout the day of this advance no German battery fired more than six shots before it was located by the French eagles of the air, accurately "ranged" the distance, wirelessed or signalled back, and the French guns put it out of commission.

This was on Sunday. The day dawned bright, crisp and clear. The air more clear than at any time in two months. The French had previously concentrated a remarkable number of plants and guns in this particular sector of Flanders. They got on the job at once. A French squadron took to the air. They got the jump on the enemy, assuming the initiative and attaining complete mastery. Not only that, but they kept this mastery throughout the day. French fighting planes in the "first aerial defense lines" drove back the Boche fighters, fast auxiliary "line" planes swooped down over the German trenches or roads just back of the enemy lines, spraying the troops with machine-gun bullets, and special "advance" planes ducked far behind the German lines to drop bombs on munition dumps and depots. Meantime observation plants hovering over the German positions and protected by other "lines of French planes," spying out all the enemy's secrets communicated them back to the French stations.

There were so many of these observation planes, and so alert were their occupants that they spotted the German guns on their first shot. Their range estimates were deadly in accuracy. French batteries put the German guns out of commission so often that at the close of day it was estimated the French fire had been twenty-five times greater than that of the Germans. During all this time, French planes, heavily armed and flying very close to the ground, preceded every French infantry unite as it leaped out of the trenches. The planes swung up and down the advancing line just behind the barrage, adding their quota of machine-gun fire to melt away the Boche resistance and signalling back every yard of ground over which advance was made. The perfect success of the creeping barrage was due mainly to their accurate reports of advances. There were several brilliant air duels in this day of wondrous aerial stunts. Adjutant Fenck brought down three German planes single handed during the course of the day, all of them beyond Toulthust Forest.

YESTERDAY WAS A FIELD DAY FOR CATEGORY A MEN

Out of a Total of Fifty Candidates Examined Thirty-seven Were Considered Fit For the Trenches —Local Soldier Gassed

Yesterday's Figures.

Candidates examined	50
Placed in A category	37
Placed in B category	2
Placed in C category	5
Placed in E category	6

Total Results So Far.

Number examined	1229
Fit for the trenches	741
Fit for non-combatant service overseas	75
Fit for duty in Canada	76
Unfit for any service	337

Only fourteen candidates were examined by the local Medical Board this morning and the percentage of A men took a decided drop, only seven men being pronounced fit for the trenches.

Yesterday's results of the local Medical Board set up a new record as regards the number of physically fit men examined. Out of 50 men 37 were placed in A category, 74 per cent. of the total being pronounced fit for the trenches. The rejections for the entire three sessions only numbered six, and five of these were registred at the morning session.

In the afternoon a new mark was established, when not a single man of the eighteen examined were categorized in "E," and at night there was only one rejection out of eleven.

The afternoon session showed the following results:

Category A	14
Category B	2
Category C	2

At night the figures were:

300 MEN HAVE ALREADY FILED EXEMPTION CLAIMS

Only Fourteen Have Reported For Service — Explicit Instructions to Men of Class One Are Issued by Col. John H. Moss

MUST ALL REGISTER

Up to noon to-day the registrations under the Military Service Act at the local post office numbered in all 314. An even 300 men had asked for exemption, the other fourteen reporting for service. Saturday's rush was not repeated yesterday, and with the time limit rapidly drawing to a close there will have to be an improvement shown within the next few days.

"All members of first class must report for service or claim exemption no matter what is the result of their medical examination.

"An impression seems to prevail in some quarters that a man who has been medically examined and placed in a medical category other than A need not put in a claim for exemption. This impression is erroneous, and should be corrected.

"All members of the first class called out by proclamation of the 13th October must report for service or claim exemption in the prescribed manner. Those who have been placed in a medical category other than A will be granted temporary exemption, but they must take the trouble to ask for it.

"The medical examination prior to report for service or claim for exemption is optional. Facilities for examination before compliance with the Act were provided to meet the convenience of the public, but no one is required by law to be medically examined until he has reported for service or his claim for exemption on other grounds has been refused, when medical examination, if not already had, is compulsory.

EVEN-HANDED JUSTICE.

The Toronto News, which was a creation of Sir Joseph Flavelle, now rubs pepper into the wound. It is supposed the purveyor Baronet didn't find the News a gold mine, and recollections of this fact won't sweeten its memories when it suggests that he turn over the big profits on the big turn-over in bacon contracts to the state. The News says:

Let the nation concede that the William Davies Company has made its large profits out of a small profit per pound on a huge turnover. Let it be granted that if the company had been content with no profits, the Canadian consumer would have got his bacon no cheaper. But if the public goes this far would it not be good business for the company and Sir Joseph Flavelle to transfer to the State all or most of their war profits after deducting their expenditures on war plant, the war taxes they have paid, and the contributions they have made to the Patriotic and other relief funds. The adoption of such a course, and the sworn statement showing the Flavelle donations to the various war funds might go far to allay popular feeling.

A great many war profiteers might be reminded by the Government that the advice of the News is good advice to follow, to the benefit of Red Cross funds and Patriotic funds. Those who have profited largely by the development of Red Cross and Patriotic fund conditions through the war, are naturally indicated for dividing good dividends in a good cause. If they don't wish to do it voluntarily, a little official conscription might be substituted. Big incomes, as well as are humble individuals, might with a good show of fairness, be included in the operations of the Military Service Act. To ignore the profiteers in this matter is not in keeping with the favours the government has been lavishing upon the "big interests."

UNION GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATION.

The Ottawa Journal, which seems to speak the mind of the Borden Government, says that it is probable that Hon. T. W. Crothers, the Minister of Labour in the late government, will be given the same portfolio in the new government. This is not keeping faith with the Labour interests. In a solemn declaration of policy, Sir Robert Borden explicitly promised the Labour interests adequate representation in the Union Cabinet. This meant something more than translating a left over of the late government to the same position in the new one.

Hon. Mr. Crothers has not been a conspicuous success in the Labour Department for the past six years, and besides he is not a Labour man—he is only a lawyer; and his salary fee of a $7,000 a year salary will not give him the knowledge of labour conditions and needs that a real representative of Labour in the win-the-war cabinet should have.

The win-the-war government calls upon everybody to give up cherished political preferences for the sake of presenting a united front and common cooperation in war winning. To secure this end there must be evidences of good faith and honourable dealing. Labour was promised representation in the Cabinet. Other interests were represented. The special government custodians of the big interests were retained in the government, but Labour interests were not thought of in compiling the Cabinet slate; and after every other interest was served in the matter of representation a promise is made that Labour would be represented in the Cabinet.

The putting of a nominal Labour man in cold storage in the Senate cannot be regarded as a fulfilment of the promise. If we are to give undivided fealty to the Union Government it must show itself worthy by honourable regard of solemn promises.

Sacrifice in the way of war-winning service is demanded from the people generally, and the people generally are more or less adequately represented in the Cabinet; but the interest that is called upon to serve most strenuously, to sacrifice most, is not represented in the win-the-war government; but, as far as the spirit of the promise of Labour representation is concerned, is misrepresented. The postmen asked the old government for bread; they got a stone. Labour was promised representation in the win-the-war Cabinet—it gets a lawyer, a man that does not represent Labour, and in his past official occupancy, has not represented efficient performance of duty. It seems that Sir Robert finds a shortage of fat places—not enough to go round. He cannot, it seems, reward Mr. Crothers as he rewarded other ministers of the old Cabinet, for their sacrifices on the altar of patriotism, by retiring to make room for good ministers in the win-the-war cabinet, and he is made Minister of Labour.

The United States "Liberty Loan" is touching the 5,000 million mark. This response would not have been made by people who did not have full confidence in the government keeping its promises.

UNION ALL ROUND.

While all the people, all classes of the community, are intent and earnest in united political and other effort to help win the war, it is evident that to secure the best results there should be unity of feeling, and harmony of citizenship. Any attempt to alienate any class of the community or disturb the harmony of the community, is only defeating local contribution of cooperation in the great national effort of united action. United action cannot be humanly expected of a community, part of which have their sensibilities outraged and their sentiments beset with assault.

We want union of political interests, union of party interests, union of citizenship and unity all round.

Anything that militates against this is equivalent to treason in the camp—playing into the hands of the enemy—in effect playing the favourite game of Germany, sowing dissension among the allies, thereby weakening their forces by preventing solid unity of effort and community of action.

While disturbing elements, controversial propaganda inimical to the peace of the community are at all times doubtful evidences of good citizenship, at a time like the present they become very close to criminality.

Thousands of loyal Canadians, thousands of loyal adherents of the respective political parties, are laying aside their party and political sentiments in order that a united front may be presented in a united effort to help Canada do her duty to the full. Under such circumstances any attempt to inject animosities and disturbing and disintegrating influences hostile to the harmony and obstructive of the eminently desirable cooperation of all the elements of the city, whatever its object, can have only bad results.

The Preacher tells us there is a time for every purpose under the sun—"a time to rend," "a time to keep silence and a time to speak," and the present is not the time to speak when the voices become voices of discord. Now is not the time, when we are seeking universal unity of sentiment and action to disturb public harmony and intrude an element of defeat or inefficiency into the national effort.

Lord Northcliffe says the war is just begun. What will it be when they get really at it?

EDUCATION NEEDED.

A contemporary tells of a Sunday School teacher ascertaining how much money was spent by pupils of his class. He found that they spent ten cents each, on an average, from Friday till Monday morning. The children were those of working parents. The contemporary says that the children might spend money to better advantage in these times, and "all they require is counsel from their elders."

They require something more than that. They require to be helped to form habits of saving and thrift. If we had the Penny Bank in the schools, had had it for years past, the children would have been practically taught the value of saving, and have learned the lessons of the wise use of money. Even adults do not know the value of money, or the wickedness of waste, though many are learning in the dear school of unfortunate experience.

Training school children to Red Cross giving is hard work, unless the foundation has been laid. We can't get our grown-ups to all appreciate the privilege and duty of helping the Red Cross.

If for years our school children had been trained through the Penny Bank to save, and taught the proper use of money, they would know how and would have money to spend for good purposes. The latest return of the Penny Banks states that the comparatively few of these banks — fifty-five out of thousands that might be in operation —have to the credit of child depositors a total of $395,578.03—deposited with the government—loaned to the government, helping win the war. With universal Penny Banks—thousands instead of half a hundred—the total deposits—loans to the government—would amount to millions. Besides that we should be training a generation in habits of thrift to offset the great national waste that now obtains.

One would not find in a Sunday School class composed of Penny Bank pupils a waste of an average of ten cents per week. They would know better, because they would have been taught; saving would become a habit, and thrift a principle of character.

Food Controller Hanna "knocks" the busy bee. He advises us not to hoard sugar.

WAR VETERANS TO BE REPRESENTED

as many of the soldiers returning from overseas lived many miles outside of the city, and they appreciated the hospitality of the Veterans.

On speaking of the importance of the work of the Great War Veterans' Association, Lieut. Armstrong emphasized the need of the Veterans paying close attention to the question of immigration after the war, so that the conditions now existing in Saskatchewan, where alien enemies have enough power to seriously impede the war efforts of the province, may not be repeated. So bad was the situation in some parts of the province that returned soldiers were being turned down in favour of alien enemies when applying for positions.

The Patriotic Fund.

At the next meeting of the Association, the members of the Peterborough branch will have an opportunity of expressing their views in regard to the Patriotic Fund.

Comrade R. H. Muir gave notice last night that at the next regular meeting of the club he would move the following resolution:

"That the Peterborough Branch of the Great War Veterans' Association of Canada resolve to petition Premier Borden to have the administration of the Canadian Patriotic Fund taken over by the Government, and that the funds needed be raised by taxation."

There was no discussion on this motion last night, but it will be brought before the next general meeting. Similar resolutions have been passed by other branches of the G.W.V.A.

The Investigation Committee reported its findings in connection with the case of a returned soldier who was forcibly ejected from a store after an argument with the proprietor. The action of the latter had been complained of at a previous meeting of the club, but after hearing the report of the Investigation Committee, the meeting decided to take no action in the matter.

Oatcakes with Date Filling:

Make Oatmeal Cookies with the following:

3 cups flour.
3 cups oatmeal.
1 cup beef dripping.
1 cup sugar.
1 cup sweet milk.
1 teaspoon salt.
1 level teaspoon soda.
2 level teaspoons cream of tartar.

Roll thin and bake. Make the following date filling:

1 lb. dates.
1-2 cup sugar.
Juice of a lemon.

Boil until thick and spread between oatmeal cookies.

Pumpkin Pie—

2-3 cups brown sugar.
1 teaspoon cinnamon.
1 teaspoon ginger.
1-2 teaspoon salt.
1 cup milk.
1 egg.

WHIP NEGROES WHO BUY AUTOMOBILES.

SAVANNAH, Va., Oct. 27.—With cotton selling at the highest price in history, the small negro farmers of Houston and Crawford counties are beginning to acquire automobiles. That fact has aroused a certain element among the whites in those counties, and recently "night riders" have been terrorising the thrifty and progressive negro farmers.

Three negroes who recently purchased automobiles with the proceeds of their cotton crops were called from their homes by "night riders" and savagely whipped. They were ordered to dispose of their cars. Only one of them did so. "Jack" Ong, Minus Harrison, and M. Lewis Harrison, of Houston county, have been arrested in connection with these assaults, and Judge Mathews, acting upon the instruction of Governor Dorsey, has directed a Grand Jury to investigate and check the disturbances.

"It is improbable that there will be any considerable number of men who will fail to comply with the law. The fact that the great majority of the members of Class I. are submitting themselves to it cheerfully makes it incumbent that those who fail to do so should be strictly dealt with, and the consequence of disobedience are so disastrous for the individual concerned that the folly of such a course must be apparent to all. Not only does a man who fails to report or claim exemption within the time specified incur a very severe civil penalty, but he also loses all right to claim exemption, and will be liable to be placed immediately upon military service in whatever capacity his physical condition may make appropriate."

Says Rowell's Demands Have Caused Trouble

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

MONTREAL, Oct. 29.— Under the heading, "Rowell's Demand Causes Trouble in the Union Ranks," the Gazette this morning publishes the following in an Ottawa despatch: "There are still many difficulties in the path of the Unionists in Ontario. The greatest obstacle to unanimity is the determination of Hon. N. W. Rowell that Liberal members in the late parliament be recognized as Union candidates without regard to their attitude toward union or conscription. A case in point is in Kent, where B. McCoig voted for a referendum, refused to be a union candidate and strongly criticised his fellow Liberals who supported a union of the two parties. Mr. Rowell insists that Mr. McCoig be the Union candidate, although there is a Union candidate in the field, nominated by a joint convention of win-the-war Liberals and Conservatives. If Mr. Rowell persists in protecting party friends who are anti-Unionists and anti-conscriptionists, there is a stormy passage ahead of the new party in the premier province. So far Mr. Rowell has not been offered a constituency and this is another problem confronting the party managers at Ottawa.

WINNIPEG, Man., Oct. 29.—It is learned here on apparently good authority this afternoon that Premier Brewster of British Columbia, is to enter the Union Cabinet.

100,000 Men Have So Far Registered

Of These 93,613 Have Claimed Exemption

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

OTTAWA, Oct. 29.— Approximately 100,000 men of the first class under the Military Service Act have reported to date. Of the total number only 9,505 have waived exemption claim and reported for service, while 93,613 have made application for exemption. The total number which has so far reported either for exemption or service represents 17.79 per cent. of the total estimated number of men in Canada who come within the first class, namely, unmarried men or widowers without children between the ages of 20 and 34 inclusive.

REV. H. A. FISH AT VICTORIA HALL

Speaker Approved of the Protestant Federation—A Short Programme

The Rev. H. A. Fish, of Owen Sound, was the speaker at a meeting held last evening in Victoria Hall, under the auspices of the Peterborough Protestant Federation. Mr. Hughson Johnston, President of the organization, presided. A short programme, consisting of a couple of excellent recitations by Master Johnston and two selections by the Band of the Salvation Army, preceded the address of Mr. Fish. The latter attributed his absence on Friday evening last to a mix-up in the dates and the miscarriage of two letters in the mail.

In his peroration the speaker said that he was not only glad he was born in Ireland, but he was also glad he came to Canada thirty years ago. The longer he lived in Canada the better he liked the great Dominion. He approved of the Protestant Federation and conceded the Protestants the right to federate as any other organization with similar interests. Rev. Mr. Fish regarded such a move as a magnificent idea and congratulated the people of Peterborough for being pioneers in the formation of such an organization as the Protestant Federation. "This," the speaker said, was an age in which people are combining. There is a combination of all forces and resources. The nations have now to combine in order to defend their rights and freedom.

Reason For Union.

The speaker defined the word protestant as meaning a protest against certain conditions and a declaration of faith. One of the greatest heartbreaks that the speaker ever experienced was the failure of the churches to adopt church union. If there was ever a time when it was necessary to get together it was now. One reason for organization was to maintain equal rights for all and special privileges for none. This, the speaker contended, was a principle that no church should take offence at.

"We have no quarrel with our Roman Catholic friends," said Mr. Fish. "They have as much right to worship in their church as we have in ours. If any attempt were made to curtail the freedom of the Roman Catholic population of this country we would be the first to go to the Government and say 'hands off.' They have as much right as we have. In Toronto we have a Turkish mosque where people of that faith worship. That is the glory of our flag. The speaker enumerated a number of things which he used to justify his statement that Protestants as a body should organize. Chief among these was freedom of speech.

Fire Fighters Had To Walk

Two of the local Fire Department staff had yesterday as fair a chance of testing out the strength and durability of shoe leather versus a car as is likely to be their lot in many a year. It seems the men had obtained permission from Chief Grange to take a joy ride to Cobourg yesterday morning. All went smoothly until a particularly rugged piece of road was reached three miles out on the home journey, when the car stopped. Nobody volunteered to walk back for assistance, so they went together, and returned with a chauffeur. The car fixed, they started home again. When a mile and a half farther on, the radius rod broke, and a second pilgrimage went back for further assistance. This time the car was towed back to Port Hope and properly fixed up, and the return to the hall, though some hours deferred, was made in safety. The owner of the car claims to be willing to part with it for fifty cents.

REPORT OF THE RED CROSS SUPPLY COMMITTEE

The cost of all supplies bought, from October 19th, 1916, to October 19th, 1917, amounted to $12,013.59. There has been a decided advance in the cost of all materials during the past year, and we are told that the prices will be still higher during the coming year. Our Buying Committee has, however, endeavoured, by purchasing in advance, to keep the cost at the lowest possible figure, and we wish to thank the merchants, who have given us the best prices possible. We feel, too, that this money is indeed well spent, for it increases in value by about 50 per cent. by the time the materials are made up.

The supplies have been distributed among our Auxiliaries and other societies, and have, by them, been made into the dressing-gowns, flannel shirts, pyjamas, and all the other articles required. It is the very greatest pleasure to be able to tell of the splendid work done by each and every one of these societies, and we are indeed proud of the beautifully-made garments, which come in week by week, and which will contribute so much to the comfort of our wounded soldiers. We would like to especially mention the work done by the Auxiliaries during the summer months. The contributions are usually very small in June, July and August, but last summer, the societies nobly responded to our appeal to keep up the work, and the result was a particularly large shipment. We wish to thank all the societies which have helped us in the past year, and to tell them how well done and satisfactory their work is.

Our work room in the Public Library, was opened for a six-weeks' campaign last January, and at that time materials valued at about $4,000, were made up into garments. The work room has again been opened for the coming year, under the supervision of Mrs. Breyfogle, and the work will be carried on every Wednesday afternoon.

There is no need to tell of the continued and urgent need for all our Red Cross supplies. We know that as long as the war lasts, and for some time afterwards, hospital supplies will be required in unlimited quantities. Information from both France and England, points to a tremendous demand during the coming winter for all the staple articles, such as socks, pyjamas, dressing-gowns, flannel shirts, towels, sheets and pillow-cases, as well as for kit bags, personal property bags, stretcher caps, bed-socks, etc., and we know that the women of Peterborough will, as they have in the past, do their share in meeting this demand. — Effie M. Munro, Supervisor of Supplies.

SAYS HE SAW ACRES OF IDLE MACHINERY

Lack of Organization in Shell Making, Says Ralph Connor.

VANCOUVER, B.C., Oct. 29.—Major C. W. Gordon (Ralph Connor) says in an interview that in Eastern Canada he had seen acres of machinery, some of the finest munitions making machinery it was possible to obtain, lying idle, simply because there was no proper scheme of organization to utilize it to the best advantage.

LAST DAY TO USE THE TRAIL

Everyone is travelling on and for the balance of this month it leads straight to Sukloff's. It won't take any coaxing to get economical buyers to travel the trail when they read over this list of bargain prices. All we ask is that you read the offers, every one of which is the genuine thing, and every article just as advertised, and unless you are remarkably shortsighted you will be on that well worn trail first thing to-morrow morning.

U. S. SOLDIERS DRAW BLOOD

Sammies Figure in Excursion Over No-Man's Land

(By J. W. Pegler.)

American Field Headquarters, France, Oct. 30.— The first verified death from an American bullet, fired by a Sammy in trench war, was that of a nineteen year old German Landsturmer. He was the first prisoner taken by the American soldiers in their first excursion over No Man's Land, and he died in an American field hospital just behind the lines. Two Sammies were out "over the top" under cover of darkness and rain one recent night, when they sighted two moving figures. The shadowy forms fled. Both Sammies fired. One Boche escaped, but the other fell. In two jumps the Americans were on him, finding the surprised Teuton nursing a badly shattered arm. He was escorted back to the trenches and later to the hospital. For a time he seemed to be progressing nicely, but the wound had been infected and gangrene developed. American surgeons did their utmost to save his life, but in vain. The prisoner said he was delivering mail to his comrades and got mixed up in taking a short cut across No Man's Land.

Vote of Credit Is Introduced In The House

400,000,000 Pounds Asked For Sufficient to the End of the Year

Canadian Press Despatch:

LONDON, Oct. 29.— The House of Commons had before it at to-day's session the introduction by Andrew Bonar Law, Chancellor of the Exchequer, of the vote of credit for four hundred million pounds, and one of the Chancellor's periodical statements regarding the finances of the war. The amount which the House is asked to vote is expected to be sufficient to last until the end of the year, when another vote will have to be brought forward. The vote to-day will bring the total loans for the year to one billion nine hundred million pounds, and the total since the commencement of the war to five billion six hundred million pounds. The debate through the various stages of the vote is expected to extend over four days, and a variety of subjects will be discussed. On Thursday Sir Eric Campbell Geddes, the First Lord of the Admiralty, will make his first announcement on the naval policy.

The Chancellor said the expenditures of army and navy exceeded the budget estimated by 590,000 pounds daily. The average daily expenditure since the beginning of the financial year has been 6,648,000 pounds, or 1,237,000 pounds above the budget estimate.

THE INFLUENCE OF GOOD FURNITURE

Good furniture in a home does not always indicate wealth—but it does indicate taste and the capacity for genteel living. If you are furnishing a house for the first time—if you expect to do so within six months—if you want to replace anything in the house, or if you want to add some new pieces in keeping with what you already have—now is the time to do it. You will find practically all the Furniture you want at Clegg's Furniture Reduction Sale now in full swing. You can buy genuinely good Furniture at this sale at prices which the wholesale makers would refuse. As this stock must be reduced and the goods sold at clearing prices to realize cash, householders should take advantage of the economy they can now practice in the furniture decoration of their homes.

Canadians Again Had The Post of Honour

Maple Leaf Troops Figure Prominently in To-day's Successful Drive

(By Wm. Philip Simms.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN FLANDERS, Oct. 30.—The British forces to-day are on the outskirts of Passchendaele. A new drive started this morning by Field Marshal Haig brought them closer to the Ridge City. The Canadians again had the post of honour storming strong positions.

The Canadian troops swarmed up over Meecheele spur and advanced to the crest of Passchendaele Ridge crowned by the town of Westroosebeke. Holding fast to their new lines the Maple Leaf boys threw back a vigorous Bavarian counter attack. The enemy was vigorously enfiladed by a machine-gun fire from captured Prussian machine guns and what remnants reached the British lines were thrown back in disorder.

Westrooseebeke is the town at the outermost end of the Passchendaele Ridge, approximately three miles northeast of Poelcappelle and about the same distance due north of Passchendaele. From Westrooseebeke the ridge drops off into the level flats of Flanders.

AIR RAID A FAILURE

No Damage or Casualties Caused in Enemy Attack

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, Oct. 30.—Lord French, commander of the British Home Forces to-day announced that the German airplanes which last night attempted to carry out a raid on the southeast counties of England, did no damage, and caused no casualties. All British machines which went up to engage the raiders landed safely.

A SOUVENIR OF THE LUSITANIA

Mr. William Turnbull, 564 Aylmer Street, showed the Examiner an interesting war souvenir to-day in the shape of one of the medals struck off by the Germans to commemorate the sinking of the Lusitania. One side of the medal shows the ill-fated liner sinking beneath the waves, while the other shows passengers purchasing their tickets at the Cunard Line office, with the figure of Death acting as ticket seller. The medal was sent to Mr. Turnbull by his son, Gunner James Turnbull, who went overseas with the Cobourg Heavy Battery.

Claims Evidence Not Admissable

In connection with the case of Frank Londo which was dismissed yesterday morning by Police Magistrate Dumble, it was stated that the Magistrate had declined to accept a statement submitted in evidence by Detective Newhall. This statement in question was one that was volunteered by the prisoner when he reached the police station following his apprehension in Blackstock. The Magistrate contended that the prisoner's statement made to the detective was not admissable as evidence, and a ruling on that particular point was deferred, the case being eventually dismissed the point in question was not again taken up.

The action of the court did not in any way reflect upon the police officer.

Keynote Address Delivered By Rev. Mr. Halpenny

At this afternoon's session of the Sunday school convention, Rev. T. Anson Halpenny, General Secretary of the Association, gave a most inspiring keynote address to the Sunday school teachers entitled, "Deep Calling Unto Deep."

In his address Mr. Halpenny said that to call out the deeper in those we teach, a deeper personality must be cultivated in the teachers. In Jesus, the Master Teacher, the depth of his personality called out the depth of nature. It called out the depth in the men he met everywhere, it seemed to reach out and touch the real worth in everything He saw. Anything opposed to God's will seemed to revolt Him.

A shallow nature is one which becomes angry at little things. A nature which will fly into a passion over a late car will be the one to see humanity suffer from ill treatment. The real worth of things should be sought so that real worth will be recognized and the beholder not be led away by appearances.

Only a person who is deep can really recognize and feel the depth of other things. The shallow nature on beholding a rich man is led away by material appearances and does not seek the real worth that lies behind him. A deep nature is called to the deep and seeks the heart.

The depth of Jesus saw the depth and possibilities of Simon, Peter and even of Nicodemus.

When we come in contact with a stranger an impression of one's depth should be carried away by him. The need of every Sunday school intrusted with precious souls is to cultivate so strong a personality that the depth of the child's soul is seen and brought out.

Montreal Exchange Is Closed

Unofficially Stated Reason Is That a Number of Brokers Are In Danger of Ruin

Canadian Press Despatch:

MONTREAL, Oct. 29.—The Montreal Stock Exchange was not opened as usual this morning. Unofficially it was explained that the Exchange was closed down because a number of brokers are in danger of ruin on account of their heavy holdings and inability to dispose of them in the bad markets of recent days.

The Toronto Stock Exchange also discontinued for half an hour while a meeting was held. Finally trading resumed, both in Toronto and Montreal, when Exchanges had fixed minimum prices similar to those after similar conditions prevailed in 1915.

THE WAR IS NEWS TO HER.

Husband Works Too Hard to Talk, So Wife Isn't Up on Current Events.

BALTIMORE, Md., Oct. 27.—The Women's Liberty Loan Committee of Maryland announced to-day that it had found a woman in Howard County, about twenty-five miles from this city, who had not heard of the Liberty Loan and did not know that the United States was at war with Germany.

The committee reported that the woman was intelligent and was the mother of several small children. She said her husband went to work daily at four o'clock in the morning and was too tired to talk when he came in from the field at six o'clock in the evening. She added that she had not been out of her home except to go to church in five years.

OBITUARY

WM. MAXWELL.

William Maxwell, 708 Concession street, died last night from pneumonia, after an illness of one week's duration. He was born in Fermanagh County, Ireland, 55 years ago, and came to Canada when a young man, settling in East City, in 1889. In religion he was a member of the Church of England, and was an active member of the Orange Society practically all his life, having joined the Order in Ireland.

He is survived by three daughters, Mrs. H. Starr, Mrs. Oliver Green, and Miss Lizzie, all of this city, and one son, Noble Maxwell, at home.

The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon to the Little Lake Cemetery, at 2.30, Rev. Mr. White officiating.

JOHN WILLIAM HOBSON.

John William Hobson, Lot 3, Concession 4, Smith, died suddenly this morning, aged forty-six. He had been ailing for some time, but his death was quite unexpected. He leaves his wife and one son, Jack, at home.

The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon to the Little Lake Cemetery at 1.30.

NORMAN WILSON.

The news of the sudden death of Mr. Norman Wilson, of Burleigh, Ont., on Thursday, 11th October, was heard with sorrow by a large community that has known him for years, and great sympathy for his family will be felt throughout the country, of which he was a popular citizen. He was forty-six years of age, and leaves to mourn his loss his wife and five children.

The funeral took place on the following Sunday from his home in Burleigh to the Anglican Cemetery at Apsley. Rev. Mr. Robbins, of Young's Point, officiated. The pallbearers were three brothers, namely, Messrs. Bert and Thomas, of London, and Edward, of Buffalo; three brothers-in-law, Messrs. Neil, Archie, and Dan. Whitmore, of Chandos. Two of his uncles, Mr. George Bedford, of Sarnia, and Mr. Alfred Bedford, from London, were present.

JOHN PRITCHARD.

A well known and highly respected resident of Cavan Township passed away last evening in the person of John Pritchard. The deceased, who was seventy-seven years of age, has been seriously ill for upwards of two months and his death was not unexpected. One son, William, and two grandchildren, survive, also two brothers, Joseph of Kinmount, and Stewart of Toronto. His wife predeceased him some years ago. The late Mr. Pritchard was born in Cavan Township, and together with his father, helped to cut the present homestead out of the forest. In his youthful days he was associated with the early pioneers, and on one occasion fought a hand-to-hand battle with a bear on the front of the present Pritchard homestead. His demise removes another link with the past history of the township.

The funeral will take place to-morrow, Wednesday, from the family residence, 10th Concession of Cavan Township to the Presbyterian cemetery. The late Mr. Pritchard was an elder of the Presbyterian Church for a number of years.

DENTAL.

Dr. McKenty, Dentist, 370 George street, on the ground floor, first door north of Peterborough Hardware Co. Nitrous oxide and oxygen administered for painless operations.

Win-the-War League Meeting This Evening

Three Well Known Speakers Will Deliver Addresses

The attention of the public is again called to the meeting under the auspices of the Win-the-War League in Victoria Hall to-night, called to consider the political crisis. The speakers will be Col. McCulough, of Hamilton, Mr. Ben Gould, of Toronto, and Mrs. Hamilton, president of the Equal Suffrage League, who will announce the results of yesterday's audience with Premier Borden. The meeting will commence at 8 o'clock.

Fall Assizes Opened To-day

Mr. Justice Latchford is Presiding —True Bill Against Les Phalen

The Fall Assizes opened this afternoon with Mr. Justice Latchford presiding. The only criminal case on the docket is that of rape charged against Leo. Phalen. Mr. G. N. Gordon is appearing for the accused, and Mr. W. J. McWhinney, K.C., of Toronto, for the Crown. The case of the King versus Alice Douglas, of Westwood, was dismissed when Crown Attorney Hatton reported a lack of evidence. One civil case, which was to have been heard was adjourned at the request of counsel appearing for the litigants. The action was instituted by the Bank of Ottawa against G. L. Hay and W. S. Davidson to recover a loan made to the Rapid Tool Company.

Canadians Only 400 Yards From Passchendaele

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

BRITISH FRONT IN BELGIUM, Oct. 30.—At an early hour to-day the Canadians had taken a stand in the neighbourhood of the famous Crest Farm only four hundred yards from the heart of the town of Passchendaele.

Troops from overseas fought their way along Bellevue Spur for several hundred yards and repulsed heavy counter attacks from Mosselmarkt. German machine guns which had just been captured at Crest Farm were used in repulsing the counter attack. North of Passechendaele the attackers are close to the town of Goeberg.

Normalites Entertained

On Friday evening last St. Peter's Sodality entertained the Normalites at a Progressive Euchre, in the card room of St. Alphonsus Lyceum. Miss Margaret Boland won the prize. About seventy young ladies were present, and a very pleasant evening was spent, after which refreshments were served. During the evening a well rendered musical programme was furnished by the Misses Doris, Hurley, Delaire, Carveth and Leahy.

New Skin Peeler In Great Demand

Since the discovery that mercolized wax posseses remarkable absorbant powers when applied to the skin, the demand for it as a complexion renewer has been tremendous. Druggists in every section report sales as far exceeding those of anything similar they have had on their shelves.

Ordinary mercerized wax gently peels off the devitalized cuticle, in minute particles, so that the user gradually loses her old worn-out complexion, the more youthful under-skin taking its place. Cutaneous eruptions, blotches, moth patches, liver spots and freckles are of course removed at the same time. As the wax is entirely harmless, and easy to use, women all over the country are purchasing it in original packages and using it to quickly rejuvenate their complexions. The wax is applied the same as cold cream, allowed to remain on over night, then washed off with warm water.

TO RAISE PATRIOTIC FUND FOR NEXT YEAR BY TAXATION METHOD

Deputation Will Wait Upon the City Council Shortly and Suggest That Means of Providing the Sum Required.

G. W. V. A. MEMBERS

A deputation from the Peterborough branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund will shortly wait upon the City Council and suggest to that body the consideration of the question of providing the money required to carry on the work of the Fund for next year by taxation.

The matter was thoroughly discussed at the adjourned quarterly meeting of the Fund last evening. Advices from the head office of the Patriotic Fund were to the effect that the same methods of raising the necessary money as used last year, i.e., voluntary contributions or municipal taxation were being generally adopted.

It was the unanimous opinion of the members present that in view of the calls for the British Red Cross, the Canadian Red Cross, and other objects it would not be feasible to attempt to raise the $60,000 required from Peterborough by voluntary subscriptions. As citizens, the members of the Fund Committee were equally convinced that the raising of the required funds by the issuing of debentures, as was done for this year, was an expensive method that should not be repeated. It was felt that all things considered, the most satisfactory way would be to have the amount required provided for by next year's taxation, and the City Council will be asked to consider the advisability of adopting that course.

War Veteran Members.

Last night's meeting decided to elect two representatives of the Peterborough branch of the Great War Veterans' Association as members of the Relief Committee, and the Great War Veterans' Association will be asked to select the two men they desire to act in that capacity. It was the opinion of the members of the Fund that it would be advantageous to have the Veterans directly represented on the committee.

$4,000,000 For Clean Amusement For The Sammies

Special to the Toronto Star:

(By George Martin.)

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30.—The sum of four million dollars is needed to drive the devil away from American soldiers in training and keep him away. To get a war camp community service the War and Navy Commission on Training Camp Activities, will go before the people of the United States next week and ask for it. The idea is to spend this money putting up a "no admittance" sign for his satanic majesty in all towns surrounding ninety training camps in this country. The old boy has already been discovered to have declared war on the side of the Kaiser. The Government, seeing signs of the cloven hoof in certain quarters, is determined to stamp them out.

"We must," said Secretary of War Baker, commending the plan, "send our boys home with no more scares than these received in honourable warfare. This can be done only by offering wholesome inducements for the successful competition of good with evil. It is to this end that the community will spend the four million dollars establishing places of clean amusement and sports in cities near camps, and in educating the public to take soldiers into their clubs and homes and make them welcome."

STOMACH MEDICINES ARE DANGEROUS

DOCTORS NOW ADVISE MAGNESIA

Just how dangerous it is to indiscriminately dose the stomach with drugs and medicines is often not realized until too late. It seems so simple to swallow a dose of some special mixture or take tablets of soda, pepsin, bismuth, etc., after meals, and the folly of this drugging is not apparent until, perhaps years afterward, when it is found that gastric ulcers have almost eaten their way through the stomach walls. Regrets are then unavailing; it is in the early stages when indigestion, dyspepsia, heartburn, flatulence, etc., indicates excessive acidity of the stomach and fermentation of food contents that precaution should be taken. Drugs and medicines are unsuitable and often dangerous—they have little or no influence upon the harmful acid, and that is why doctors are discarding them and advising sufferers from indigestion and stomach trouble to get rid of the dangerous acid and keep the food contents bland and sweet by taking a little pure bisurated magnesia instead. Bisurated Magnesia is an absolutely pure anti-acid which can be readily obtained from any drug store. It is absolutely harmless, is practically tasteless and a teaspoonful taken in a little warm or cold water after meals, will usually be found quite sufficient to instantly neutralize excessive acidity of the stomach, and prevent all possibility of the food fermenting.

Advocates The Appointment Of A Controller

Sir Adam Beck Brings This Question to Attention of Dominion Government

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

OTTAWA, Oct. 30. — That a controller be appointed by the Dominion Government under the War Measures Act to regulate and govern the whole question of production and expert of power in Ontario, was urged by Sir Adam Beck on behalf of the Ontario Government, the Hydro-Electric and the various municipalities interested to-day. The Government members present were Hon. Messrs. Rowell, Reid, Foster, Mewburn and Robertson. Representatives of the power companies were also present. The matter will be further discussed this afternoon. But Sir Adam Beck expressed the hope at noon to-day, that the request would be acceded to. Sir Henry Drayton, who has gone into the whole question was present at the discussion, and gave his views to the gathering. Sir Adam strongly advocated egective government control of the power situation, giving primary consideration to the needs of the munition business, so that the Hydro could meet its obligations. The attitude of the Government was generally that the largest possible production of power could be secured from existing plans, and that industries supplying essential war supplies should have adequate power for the operation of their plants. It was the desire that necessary public utilities should not be interfered with in any manner.

DENMARK SENDS GERMANY MORE MEAT THAN EVER

SLAUGHTER OF CATTLE AND SWINE DUE TO FODDER SHORTAGE SWELLS EXPORTS.

COPENHAGEN, Oct. 30.— Danish officials are reticient concerning the recent American statement in regard to embargo policies. Responsible authorities decline to discuss the subject, while negotiations in Washington are pending, but express the hope that the Danish commercial delegates may succeed in making some arrangements with the United States.

The newspapers published the American statement more or less fully, but have shown more or less restraint in discussing the subject, manifesting their opinion for the most part only by occasional headlines over Washington despatches.

In the business world, however, the opinion is expressed freely that Denmark must and will maintain its export trade so long as possible. The pressure of the agrarian classes to continue the export trade of farm products, of course, is also strong. The urban population, which is beginning to feel the pinch in obtaining pork, butter and lard, is steadily growing more insistent upon some restrictions which will insure for them an adequate supply of such food products at prices within ther reach.

The government has just effected an arrangement with the butter producers and dealers, reserving approximately 1,000,000 pounds of butter for sale to the population weekly at a price of two crowns a pound. The government will pay the difference between this and the market price, which is twenty to twenty-five per cent. higher. This arrangement, however, is recognized as being merely temporary until a rationing system for butter, lard and pork is put into effect, probably December 1.

The slaughter of cattle and pigs owing to the lack of fodder, is proceeding at an increased rate. It has resulted not only in maintaining the former export of such meat to Germany, but even in augmenting it somewhat.

As regards the cattle and meat exports to her Scandinavian neighbours particularly Norway, they also have increased owing to the surplus cattle thrown upon the market by the fodder situation, but this increase, as regards both Germany and Scandinavia, will be only temporary, and will disappear automatically when the reduction of the stock of cattle is accomplished.

A despatch from Odense, the centre of the meat industry, says that the number of swine being slaughtered weekly is more than double that of a few weeks ago. The meat exporters expect that the total of exports will be maintained.

TO THE ELEGIBLE
YOUNG MEN OF PETERBORO

If you are a Category "A" man you can enlist in the ROYAL FLYING CORPS, and have your name dropped from the draft.

THE FLYING CORPS

Is one of the highest branches of the Service, and young men between the ages of 18 and 30 of good habits, with a high school education, and physically fit, should make immediate application.

RECRUITS will be given a SIX-WEEKS' COURSE in TORONTO before leaving for Texas to complete course.

For all particulars apply to the following SUB-COMMITTEE of the ROYAL FLYING CORPS, upon whose recommendation you will be accepted if you pass the physical test:

G. H. LOGIE, Chairman, at Bank of Nova Scotia.
C. G. GRAHAM, Secretary, at the Empress Hotel.
ROLAND DENNE and JAMES LYNCH, Druggist.

BUNCH OF PETERBORO' HOCKEY PLAYERS ARE NOW WITH SARNIA

The Toronto Star has the following interesting hockey gossip in which the names of a number of Peterborough players are mentioned. Joe Dwyer, Grover Halpin, Lornie Rose and Frank Montgomery, all of whose homes are here, are now residing in Sarnia. The Star says:

Sarnia has an abundance of material for a good intermediate O.H.A. team this season. Joe Dwyer, the last year goal-tender, will be in the Sarnia nets again, while William McCart will very likely hold down a position on the defence. Halpin, who played on the team when Sarnia won the championship in the intermediate, is back again from Peterborough, also Rose, who played in 1916. Schumaker, the former London and Toronto player, will be out with the blue and white. Jack Adams, the Peterborough man of last year, is now in Sarnia. Jim Granary and "T." Hilman will also be on hand. Jack Adams was the star of the post-season senior series here with St. Patricks last winter.

Armstrong, the crack centre player of last year's 247th team of Peterborough, is still in khaki, but is now located at Ottawa. The Peterborough team is well broken up.

The Whitby intermediate O. H. A. team will be greatly crippled this season through the los sof Charlie and Arthur Blanchard, who are now living at Oshawa. According to Sheriff Paxton, Bunting, the Pickering boy who figured on the Whitby team last season, will not be available. He enlisted some time ago. "Dinner" Smith, the veteran, and Ald. Watson are about all of the old guard remaining.

Hamilton's Prospects.

Hamilton, Oct. 25.—Manager Harry Brown of the Detroit Hockey Club is sending out information to the effect that Hamilton Rowing Club will open the season in the City of Straits in a series of games. It is extremely doubtful if there will be an intermediate O.H.A. team here at all this winter. Billy Coir and Harry Reid, two of the mainstays of last year's intermediate champions, are now overseas. Billy Boyd and Alex. Murray will leave shortly to undergo training in the Royal Aviation Corps, and Grant McEwen says he has played his last hockey game. That leaves only Goalkeeper Frank Sloan, Leo Reise, and Harold Parker, and there is not sufficient material available to plug up the gaps. It certainly dosn't look like a rosy hockey season, as far as Hamilton is concerned. It would not be so bad, if the hockey stars who are enlisting remained in Hamilton during the winter, but Boyd and Murray will probably go to Texas for training.

The majority of the candidates examined were farmers although a number of city men managed to obtain an appearance before the doctors by reason of having registered towards the end of last week.

An analysis of the figures up to and including last night's session show that 1215 men had been examined 734 being placed in A category. That is to say 60 per cent. of the candidates examined here have been marked fit for the firing line. The total rejections formed 27 per cent. of the candidates examined.

Mrs. W. T. Hawthorne, 485 Aylmer Street, has received a letter from her husband, Bombardier W. T. Hawthorne, of the 33rd Battery, stating that he has been gassed and invalided to England. Bombardier Hawthorne received a dose of the new German gas, and as a result his body is badly blistered. He is now in the Military Hospital, Barry Road, Hampton. Bombardier Hawthorne has been at the Front for a long time, and was on the casualty list before being wounded in the leg.

"No man in Class I. is to be enlisted or attested as a volunteer, inasmuch as by Proclamation issued by the Minister of Justice under the Military Service Act, on the 12th of October, 1917, men of that class are soldiers in virtue of the Act."

Any Combatant Unit.

Any man in Class I. who is willing to report for duty, before being ordered to do so by the registrar or deputy registrar under the Act, may be allowed to join any combatant (but not a non-combatant) unit, which is not up to is authorized establishment, and is still authorized to recruit under the following conditions:

(a) That he has been examined by the Medical Board, and been categorised as "A."

(b) That he produce a counterfoil of his report for service as proof that he has complied with the law.

(c) That he produce a certificate from his employer, if any, stating that the latter has not lodged, and does not intend to lodge, a claim for the man's exemption on the ground of national interest.

Inasmuch as no man in Class I. is to be accepted unless he is categorised as "A," necessary reinforcements for non-combatant units must be obtained by voluntary enlistment of men not coming within that class.

Voluntary enlistment of men not in Class I., as specified in the Military Service Act, 1917, may be continued in any unit of any combatant or non-combatant branch of the service under conditions heretofore obtaining, provided the unit be not up to its establishment, and be still authorised to recruit. Such men will be attested in the usual way.

The complete list of military representatives for Peterborough County to assist in the administration of the Military Service Act have been announced from Kingston. Some of these have already been published. Here is the whole list:

Apsley—Capt. G. R. Browning.

MARKS BROTHERS.

Marks Brothers' Dramatic Company, with the favourite May Bell Marks and a well-balanced company, opened a week's engagement at the Grand Opera House last night with an effective stage presentation of the melo-drama, "Was She to Blame?"

The well-known stock company has a host of friends in Peterborough, and the probabilities are for a big week's business. Clever specialities are introduced between acts, and there are no dull waits.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir,—I noticed in Saturday's Examiner a statement by Mr. Hughson Johnston, President Protestan Federation, that there are 18,000 Protestants in this city. Well, if so, hats off to the minority of 4,000 Catholics for what they have accomplished in this city, which is easily discernable. My advice to Mr. Johnston is to study statistics; and cobbler, stick to your last.

FAIR PLAY.

Editor of the Examiner.

25 Alfred Street,
St. Leonards,
Hastings, England.

Sir,—I can always hear, and see in your paper, about us coming home. None would be more pleased than I. Can you or some of thore people who talk so much about it tell us how to get there? We cannot live, let alone save a passage. Tea at 4s. a pound, bacon at 3s., butter ditto., and I my add, when we get it. You bet we would be glad of the chance. What seems most unfair to me is, two women in this street, whose husbands joined the third contingent, and no children, get as much as I do, with four children, whose ages run from eight to thirteen. Of course, they are having a good time, whilst we are just hanging on. We are not living. A relish for a meal is out of the question. If we get enough to eat, which we do not, we are lucky. I was in a bad raid, and I and two of my children were pretty bad after. I wrote to the paymaster for help, but could get none, and so had to apply to the church here. They had a woman living with them who had over £2 10s. a week, with no children. So I with four must be getting at least £3. They would scarcely believe that I only get the same as she. They take a lot of convincing. Now, don't you think it humiliating to have to ask help when one's husband has been up since 1914? I have never bothered anyone much, and I have been here nearly three years, but one cannot help air raids and sickness, and I think it only natural I should want to be near my husband, who is here in England disabled. I don't see him very often, still I see him sometimes, which I could not do if I were home. And three years is a long time, you know. I really do think something might be done for us here. We have never had patriotic money. I have been here since November, 1914. Hoping the Government will hurry up and raise our money, then perhaps Canada may come in sight. —Yours respectfully, 1st Contingent's Wife.

Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—Now that Conscription and H. C. of L. are the most discussed topics of the day, I would like to butt in with a few remarks. Now, I have it on good authority that some bank managers and railway superintendents are going to ask for exemption for some of their staff—and they have passed A2. The working man has no plea to put up, and consequently will have still to do the fighting for these slackers—for they are nothing else, and yellow as a lemon. They are not at all necessary in their positions, for if it had to be done, a manager could act as his own accountant and thus do his bit, and a railway clerk's job is not hard to fill; and if either of them would come across with the wages, they can get the men and women, who are not eligible for service, to perform the duties; and there will be great dissatisfaction among the workers, who know that the men in authority favour the big interests. Another point is the unreasonable rents that landlords are asking for cold storage dwellings; and if the Government puts the Patriotic Fund on the tax basis, then the rent goes up again, and the worker pays it, and the landlord does not. Some of our real estate men are going to owners and telling them they can get them more rent for the houses people are living in now than they are getting. Is not this a species of graft on the part of landlords and real estate men? The late Government never thought about the working man in any way, only for his vote, or they would do as the British Government did—prohibit them from raising the rent during war time. Some men are getting rents for houses thrown together that will pay them their full value in about six years. Trusting you can allow space for these few lines, as your paper is always open to the public.—Yours truly,

A Working Man.

OUR PUBLIC LIBRARY

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—The recent appeal of Mr. DelaFosse for our Public Library is worthy of extended consideration. There is probably no greater asset than a first-class Free Public Library and administrative staff for building up an intelligent and vigorous citizenship. There is no better way of educating a people than by giving opportunities for extending the knowledge its individual units possess.

If it can be truly said that opportunity makes the thief, the drunkard, the youthful pool room and cigarette habitue, the social and political moral degenerates and their necessarily attendant associated evils, then it is equally true to say that opportunities for extended education make for better citizens and the reduction of those evils.

Readers of our Public Library cannot have failed to notice the marked improvement in the class of literature and books on general subjects which have been added to the library shelves of late, and our thanks are due to those responsible for this; the demand for inferior works will diminish as the opportunities for seeing, reading and understanding better material arises.

The writer would personally make an appeal to our City Fathers for a grant, or a portion of the annual grant, on behalf of our musical students and citizens, and takes this occasion to make the suggestion that musical scores be added to our Library, both in the lending and reference departments. We possess a rich heritage of musical compositions—the accumulated legacies of centuries, and beyond the dreams of those devotees who have in the past literally given their lives in the service of the art of song and musical writings, generally, and which we do not sufficiently appreciate when building up the stores of our Public Libraries. There must be many in our midst who can reap pleasure and intellectual profit from the perusal of the musical scores of favourite themes. Thomas Carlyle's advice that the "university of to-day is a library of books," applies equally to music and its kindred arts.

Yours very truly,
W. H. PRETTY.

141 Hunter Street, East,
Peterborough, Oct. 29, 1917.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—One of the blessings of democratic government rule is the right it gives to men and women to be as foolish as they wish, when they wish, how they wish. When we were under the rule of autocratic government we had to do as we were told, and ask no questions. If we asked any impertinent questions they had a very effectual way of answering them; they cut off the head of the enquirer for truth, and so disposed of both question and questioner at one fell swoop. Now, all is changed, and we can do most as we please; our heads still remain on our shoulders. We can behave as foolish as we please, that is our right as reasonable creatures in a free country to be as ridiculous as we wish. This is the explanation of this so-called Win-the-War Committee in Peterborough. They have taken advantage of their right to be ridiculous, and have certainly given the limit in that line. Why else have they butted in to teach the people of Peterborough and the two political parties here, how they ought to behave over a candidate for the Union Government. They do not think the two great parties here can be trusted to manage their own affairs properly, so they set out to show them what to do. The members of the Liberal party here are just as loyal, just as patriotic and just as anxious to win the war as the so-called Win-the-war committee, and the same is true of the Conservative party. Why then, does the Win-the-war committee bother itself in the matter at all? The members of the two parties here are in earnest to support the Union Government, and they are earnest enough to do their duty, with a single eye to the winning of the war. Neither party has asked the help of the so-called Win-the-war committee, and neither have the citizens of Peterborough. They have just fancied that, unless they butt in things will be all wrong, and as a result of such overwhelming conceit they are the laughing stock of the city.

What will they do next? Form themselves into a Peace Committee, and expect and advise the Allies how to proceed with their terms of peace.

Yours,
DISGUSTED.

FAIRBANKS' AND SUNDAY'S BALL TEAMS PLAY BALL FOR SOLDIERS—Right to left:—Douglas Fairbanks, the celebrated movie Star; and Billy Sunday, the famous evangelist, had their nine out for a ball game in Los Angeles, the proceeds to buy sporting goods for the soldiers and other fighters in Uncle Sam's service. Doug's team had the edge on the Sunday nine, and the game went to them by the very close score of 1 to 0.

OUT OF THE TRENCHES.

French Display the True Democratic Spirit.

One of the most remarkable characteristics of the French soldier, the poilu, is the way in which he casts aside his uniform, puts on the working clothes of civil life, and returns to the occupation of pre-war days when on leave, says a writer in The New York Evening Post. I had taken my shoes to the cobbler round the corner. I found a vigorous-looking man in the prime of life hard at work amid a pile of injured footgear.

"Not mobilized?" I asked.

"Permissionnaire" (a leave man), was his laconic reply. And now I am walking about Paris in shoes soled and heeled by one of the most gallant defenders of Verdun. The man was at home seven days. He who had been in the front lines of the great battle spent six of those brief seven days at his cobbler's bench, never referring to the war except when closely questioned, looking as if he had never left that bench or put aside his cobbler's apron.

I entered the pork butcher's shop.

"Are your pates fresh and good?" I asked the charcutiere (pork butcheress).

"All freshly made—by the master."

"But the master's at the front!"

And during that week, while "the master" made his way back to the trenches, we ate better pates, more delicious sausages, than usual, made by the hand that amid the wielding of sword and bayonet had not lost its culinary cunning. A fortnight later the "master" charcutiere was carried from the battlefield, his thigh shattered. "Never mind," he said to the stretcher-bearers. "I'll go back to my trade." But he died that night.

Then it was the active little charwoman who met me looking brighter than her wont. "You've got your husband home?" "Yes; he came last night. He's at work." In the army the man was a daring young aviator. In the little restaurant where he was "at work" few guessed that the attentive, white-aproned waiter had for months past been soaring in the upper air, and would again be flying a week or two hence.

MINISTER'S DOWNFALL.

Harry Gardiner Calls the Ministry the First Step on the Downward Way.

WINNIPEG, Oct. 30.—Ministering to a Methodist congregation in Ottawa, was the first step in the downfall of Harry G. Gardiner, of Toronto, according to a statement he made to Magistrate McDonald in Police Court in explaining how he was led to pass worthless checks in buying licenses and rings appurtenant to his police interrupted marriage to Elsie Wilson, a member of the California Belles Company of the Columbia Theatre.

Gardiner pleaded guilty.

DANES TO SLAY THEIR SWINE

Butter Cards Allow Weekly Ration of Half a Pound, at 50 Cents a Pound.

COPENHAGEN, Oct. 30.—The Danish Government Food Council, after considering the growing difficulties of supplying the home population with anadequate ration of fats, has rejected the proposed prohibition upon the export of swine, and, instead, 300,000 swine will be slaughtered and reserved for the population of the towns. Farmers will be permitted to kill swine for their own use, and the balance will be available for export. It is stated that both Germany and England have expressed themselves as satisfied with this arrangement.

Butter cards allowing a weekly ration of a half-pound at half a dollar a pound will be introduced. The Government will assume the financial burden of nearly 50,000,000 crowns involved and will reserve enough butter from export to provide this ration. Milk and cream cards are also proposed.

It is recommended that all lard be reserved for the poor and distributed which are subject to Government which are subbject to Government war relief measures.

The Food Council's report embodying these provisions will be presented to the Rigsdag for action.

Mother Alone Is Left Of This Alsace Family

CHICAGO, Ill., Oct. 31. — Ernest Egert, private, who was drowned aboard the Antilles, enlisted in the American army soon after the outbreak of the war to avenge the death of his two brothers in the Belgian army and the death of his father, who was brutally murdered on the doorstep of his home in Alsace-Lorraine.

When he enlisted Mr. Egert gave the name of Miss Edna Burnett as his next of kin to be notified in case of death. It was understood that the two were to be engaged when he came marching home at the end of the war.

His aged mother, alone in that war stricken country, and with her husband and two sons dead, was driven into Holland for her own safety. His sister met a less merciful fate.

The honeymoon is at an end when the husband begins to laugh at his wife's attempts to sharpen a lead pencil.

Renfrew County For Good Roads

Embarks on County Scheme for 215 Miles of Highway.

The County of Renfrew has joined the list of "good roads" counties operating under the Highways Act. Renfrew is embarking upon a county scheme calling for the construction of 215 miles of roads. The addition of the eastern county makes 32 now constructing under the Act, embracing over 9,000 miles of highway, of which about 2,500 miles is finished work.

Two more cities have taken action to create suburban road areas. Hamilton has been authorized to join Wentworth County in securing the appointment of a suburban roads commission, and Guelph has made application for similar approval. In addition to these two, seven Ontario cities now have suburban areas in which they are co-operating with county authorities in road construction. These are Toronto, London, Kingston, St. Catharines, Windsor, Galt and Kitchener. Under the Highways Act the cities pay 30 per cent. of the cost of designated roads, the surrounding counties 30 per cent. and the province the balance.

GORIZIA, RECAPTURED BY THE TEUTON FORCES—Gorizia, which has again been occupied by the Teutons, was captured by the Italians on August 9, 1916. The Italians took about 20,000 prisoners in the city. The capture of Gorizia was one of the most important successes of Italy's campaign against Austria. It is a town of 31,000 inhabitants, on the Isonzo, half way down the present Austro-German front of attack between Tolmino and the sea. It is strongly situated among hills of great defensive value.

Nation Is Spending At Rate Of $30,000 A Minute; Total In October $1,000,000,000

WASHINGTON, D.C., Oct. 31.—Government expenditures of $1,000,000,000 is the record which the month of October has established at the Treasury Department. The totals, which include loans to the Allies, may exceed even this huge sum, possibly by $100,000,000.

Thus far, it stands at $935,342,387, with yesterday's spending not included. For the twenty-three working days thus far counted, it shows average expenditures of approximately $42,600,000 daily, or almost $30,000 every minute of the day and night. Expenditures for last Friday, the latest record published, were $68,975,948, but this was an unusual day, considerably higher than the average, though not by any means a record.

The increase in the daily expenditures is greater now than it was a month ago, and is growing steadily. It is thought that it will continue to grow. A two billion dollar month, officials assert, is not far off. It may be reached, with the retirement of short time Treasury certificates—to be met out of the Liberty bond receipts by mid-winter.

Expenditures for the fiscal year thus far have reached the total of $3,446,659,764, of which $1,770,700,000 more than half, is represented by loans to the Allies. These loans and the interest upon them are to be repaid to the government by the borrowers, and, therefore, do not represent actual expense to the American people.

Food Outlook For Belligerents Not Very Satisfactory

LONDON, Oct. 31.—The close of the harvest season finds all the Governments and people taking stock of their winter supplies. Not a single European nation, neutral or belligerent, views the outlook with confidence or satisfaction.

Though the world famine, which economists have been forecasting for at least a year will not arrive this winter. Europe is going to have the shortest rations in her history.

After midwinter many countries will suffer real privations, and perhaps starvation. From this angle it is natural to exaggerate the economic weakness of the enemy and minimize the hardships of the Entente, but even making allowance for this tendency, it is difficult to make out an optimistic story.

The French food controllers have just given figures showing that France's grain harvest for 1917 will be the smallest in fifty years, and that to meet the deficit some 140,000,000 bushels of cereals must be imported. In ordinary times France has 8,000,000 men to till her soil, but since August, 1914, 3,000,000 of her best workers have been under arms. Recently 250,000 men were restored to the land, but France must depend largely upon her imports from America during the coming winter.

New Restrictions Are Decreed By The German Government

COPENHAGEN, Oct. 30. — Some of the prospects which the German people are called upon to face the coming winter are officially announced in German newspapers as follows:

There is only enough shoe leather for the use of miners, fishermen, canal workers and a few allied trades. The manufacture of leather footwear for the rest of the population will soon be suspended. They will have to get along with wooden soles and cloth uppers.

There is a big shortage in vegetables and no hope of any material improvement in the fresh vegetable supply. The turnip must again be one of the mainstays of German diet this winter, although to a less degree than last year.

The fuel problem has not been solved, despite all the efforts made for its solution, and the city populations may expect to notice the results of this fact keenly from time to time. The Coal Commissioner prophesies that the pinch will be felt here and there within the next few days.

The railway administration of Saxony announced that railway travel will not be allowed without special permission. Soldiers in the home camps are limited in their week-end furloughs, and Saturday and Sunday trips of mothers and sweethearts to see the boys in camp are stopped in order to cut down railway travel. The Prussian railways will probably follow suit.

Finally, after the fashion plates for winter are out, the Government has decreed that women's skirts must be made with a reduced amount of material, which will necessitate their being made both shorter and tighter.

POTATO HARVESTING IS WELL UNDER WAY.

Yield an Average One with Little Damage from Rot.

An average potato crop with only an unimportant amount of rot is indicated by the reports of the district representatives of the Department of Agriculture for the past week. Harvesting has been carried on vigorously in all parts of the province but there is still a good proportion of the crop to be taken up—in some sections as much as 25 per cent. Potatoes are selling all the way from $1 to $1.50 per bag at local points.

Fall sowing is practically over, although some late rye is still going in. Reports agree that the fall wheat sown some weeks ago is coming along well and the prospects are that both wheat and clover will be in good shape for the winter. Ploughing, however, is backward owing to the late harvest and the difficulty of getting help.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Union Stock Yards—Receipts, 47 cars, with 861 cattle, 112 calves, 290 hogs, and 442 sheep and lambs.

There was a little better tone to the cattle market yesterday, prices holding good and steady to firm, and with the very light run of fresh stuff in, everything, including Monday's holdovers, was pretty well cleaned up by noon hour.

In the sheep and lamb market the feeling was not quite so firm, but lambs averaged about 25c lower, and the quality perhaps was not good.

Hogs were firmer than expected, due to the small run. Prices settled at $16.50 fed and watered.

SIGN OF EARLY WINTER.

Newmarket, Ont. — Large flocks of wild geese, numbering it is estimated, between 4,000 and 5,000, have been seen going south during the last few days. This is looked upon by the older folks here as a sign of an early winter.

Don't Eat Less—But Eat Better. There is no need of anyone going hungry. Canadians should eat foods that supply the greatest amount of nutriment at the lowest cost. The whole wheat grain is the most perfect food given to man. Shredded Wheat Biscuit is the whole wheat grain prepared in a digestible form. Every particle of the whole wheat berry is used—nothing wasted, nothing thrown away. Two or three of these biscuits with milk, sliced peaches or other fruits make a nourishing, satisfying meal at a cost of only a few cents.

COR. GEORGE & CHARLOTTE

NO FOOLING IN IOWA WITH PRO-GERMANS

MANILLIA, Iowa, Oct. 30. — John Brus, a wealthy resident of Aspinwall, who was arrested yesterday because of his refusal to permit the use of an assembly hall, owned by him, for a Liberty Loan campaign, to-day is pleading with his German friends to buy Liberty bonds. Aspinwall is chiefly populated by Germans.

After Brus was released pending good behaviour, he was told that if Iowa Township, in which he resides, bought $25,000 worth of bonds, citizens would attempt to have the charges against him dropped. Brus then purchased $500 worth of bonds and immediately began a selling campaign among his German friends.

State agents began a drive against pro-Germanism. Wealth Germans who do not subscribe to the loan will be taken before the Federal Commissioner at Council Bluffs.

Use of Barley Saves Wheat!

Barley has always been used in making the famous food

Grape-Nuts

There's a Reason—Barley is richer in protein (meat value) than wheat.

Barley has an element that changes its own starch and wheat starch into sugar.

Barley has a rich individual flavor—you've heard of barley-sugar?

If you haven't tried this world-famed food, now is the time.

"THE PAINTED WOMAN"

By FREDERIC ARNOLD KUMMER

"Ah—no—no—you shall not take him away from me!" Ramona approached the angry Puritan with a look of entreaty. The latter waved her aside.

cried. "As a God-fearing man, I denounce you."

Willoughby, less intolerant than his companion, and sensible of something appealing in the girl's manner, hastened to interpose himself between them.

"Peace, friend Cotton," he said. "We have no quarrel with this poor sinner. Come, lad." He laid his hand on Barton's shoulder. "You must go with us."

John Barton had been too greatly bewildered by the sudden and unexpected appearance of his companions to at first take umbrage at Cotton's virulent remarks. A feeling of anger and resentment, however, quickly rose in his breast. He turned to the older man, his eyes blazing.

"When I go," he cried, "this woman goes with me!"

"This shameless wanton?" Cotton exclaimed.

"The woman is no wanton."

"Silence, John Barton. It ill becomes you to defend the light-o'-love of a godless pirate. Turn from her, lest you imperil your immortal soul. As for you, daughter of Babylon," he cried, wheeling in his wrath upon Ramona, "give heed to me. Cease your spells upon this foolish youth. Witchcraft have you in your eyes. Had I the handling of you, I'd give you a taste of the whipping post."

She cowered in fright before him. He represented a new type to her, bigoted, cruel, pitiless.

"John," she cried, holding out her arms to her lover. "You will not leave me."

Barton came between her and the two men.

"Uriah Cotton," he said, his voice very stern, "your heart is hard with righteousness. Listen to the woman's story as I have done."

"No. The shameless woman has tempted you with her abominations, and you have fallen. You have forsaken the ways of the Lord. Consider your immortal soul, and turn from her with loathing."

"The woman has done no wrong. I tell you," cried Burton, angrily. "When I go she goes with me."

"Are you mad, boy?" Willoughby exclaimed. "Think of your mother, who placed you in my care. Would you bring shame and dishonour upon her head? Return to the ways of the Lord."

Once more Ramona attempted to appeal to them.

"Oh, listen to me, I pray you," she cried, and falling at Cotton's feet attempted to take his hand in hers. He snatched it away and drew back, as though from something loathsome.

"Make your prayers to God, you harlot!" eh muttered.

Barton sprang towards him, a dangerous light flaring in his eyes. Ramona, however, stopped him. Rising to her feet, she turned upon them with cold disdain. Her pleadings, her self-abasement, had gone unheeded. Now pride asserted itself—pride, and a cold anger. With flaming eyes she regarded Willoughby and his companion.

"Who are you, to judge me?" she cried, embracing them in a glance of contempt. "Go—all of you"—in her anger she included even Barton. "Back to your frozen north. I'll take no pity from any of you. If I have sinned, let Heaven judge me. Away, you worshippers of a merciless God." Her anger was scathing, disdainful, superb. The two men cringed for a moment beneath her withering scorn.

"Peace, woman," Willoughby began. "This young man—"

She did not permit him to proceed, but swept her arm towards the gate.

"Go," she cried. "I ask nothing of you. I love this man"—she allowed her gaze to rest for a moment upon Barton's face—"and I'm not ashamed of it, but the love I ask in return must be great enough to wipe out all my sins, no matter what they be, and make me whole again. Leave me, all of you, before you turn my love to hate. Leave me, you things with hearts of stone, that call yourselves men. Go! Go! Go!" With an imperious sweep of her hand she indicated the gate.

Cotton turned on his heel.

"So be it," he growled. "Come, my son. The woman renounces you."

"No," replied Barton, his voice very stern. "I stay here."

"With this painted woman?"

"With the woman I love. Ramona!" He held out his arms, and she, her anger past, crept into them.

"John—oh—my love—my love!"—she whispered, her head against his breast.

"Then may the Lord in his anger destroy you both," he cried. "I wash my hands of you. Come friend Willoughby. Let us go."

The latter made one final appeal.

"Not so, Captain Willoughby. Tell her that I have taken to wife the fairest and sweetest woman in all the Indies." He held Ramona very close. Against his breast he could hear the fluttering of her heart.

Cotton drew his companion toward the gate.

"Come," he said. "Leave them in their wickedness." He was about to pass from the garden, when a sudden noise without caused him to pause.

There was a clattering of feet, a chorus of cries and oaths while high above all else sounded the shill voice of Ann Devereux.

"Hurry, you drunken dogs," it cried. "Hurry, lest you be too late."

CHAPTER XV.

The emotions experienced by Ramona de Lara during the past twenty-four hours, had been so varied, so bitter that she had not believed it possible for her heart to be still further wrung. She had thought the limit of suffering reached. And yet, when she turned with frightened eyes towards the garden gate, and saw Ormiston's companions, led by Mistress Devereux, come raging through the entrance, she gave a cry of terror.

Yet it was not for herself that she feared, but for Barton. Within the house lay the silent figure of him who had so lately been the leader of these men. They found her now in Barton's arms. For the Firebrand's death, say what she might, Barton would inevitably be held responsible. She threw her arms about him, as though to protect him, moaning the while incoherent words of love, of entreaty, that he might be spared.

The buccaneers swept into the garden with drawn swords. Their faces were red with passion, doubly inflamed because of the wine they had drunk. Little mercy could she expect from these men of blood. She waited breathless, for the blow to fall.

Tench, who by virtue of his age and experience, had assumed temporary leadership, realized at a glance at least something of what had happened. It was inconceivable that Ormiston could still be alive, with such matters going forward in the very garden of his house. He rushed up to Barton, seized him by the shoulder, and whirled him from the girl's embraces. Ready hands at once made the Puritan a prisoner. Then Tench, with a wave of his cutlass, indicated Willoughby and Cotton.

They stood in silence, their hands upon the hilts of their swords. The surprise that the entrance of the buccaneers had caused them had been so overwhelming that they had made no attempt to defend themselves.

"Tie up the psalm-singing rascals," Tench shouted, his voice husky from liquor and the dust of the road.

"We'll hang the knaves," growled Long Rodgers, as he and Graves executed Tench's orders. In a moment the three Puritans had been bound, and ranged in a row along the wall of the garden.

Ramona, seeing Barton thus rudely torn from her arms, sank to her knees and began to pray. It was her last, indeed, her only resort now. Mistress Devereux, her face red with anger, came up to her and grasped her viciously by the arm.

"So—I find you in your lover's arms, you jade," she sneered. "Where is the Firebrand?"

The girl made no reply. Only the motion of her lips showed that she still prayed. Her strength was so nearly gone that it was with difficulty that she kept herself from utter collapse. Some vague hope that she might still be of service to the man she loved, nerved her to fight on, although to what end she could not see.

Barton, with a mighty desire to go to the girl's assistance, attempted to swing towards her, but Long Rodgers swept him back with herculean strength.

"Answer me!" Mistress Devereux screamed in a fury, shaking the helpless girl to and fro as though she had been a child.

"There's some devil's work a foot here," cried Tench. "The Firebrand is not the man to sit idly by while another runs off with his woman. Into the house! We'll see what these rascals have been up to." He ran up the steps, waving his cutlass, followed by De Rocheville and Graves. In a moment they had disappeared through the doorway.

Portugese Joe, who until now had remained somewhat in the background came up to the kneeling girl and addressed her with a curious and significant smile.

"A good day, to you, sweet mistress," he said. "What have you done to the master?"

Ramona groped her way to her feet. The presence of the Portugee filled her with nameless terrors.

"Why have you come here?" she gasped, scarcely knowing what she said.

"Carramba! Why not? Had you but listened to me, when I came before——"

He was interrupted by a shout from the doorway. Tench, his leathery face convulsed by rage, stood upon the steps.

"Devil's work, in truth!" he roared. "The Firebrand is dead!"

Mistress Devereux uttered a despairing scream, and fled past him into the house. In spite of Ormiston's treatment of her, she had loved him, in some tiger-like way. She stumbled into the room and flung herself weeping upon his body.

At Tench's word, both Long Rodgers and the Portugee made a movement towards him, their hands seeking the hilts of their swords.

"Dead!" the former cried as though even now he could not believe what he had heard.

"Ay, foul'y murdered beside his very bed." Tench strode over to where Ramona stood, her eyes wide with fear. "Is this some of your work?" he cried.

"No—no," she moaned, shuddering with pain as the buccaneer crushed her tender shoulder between his horny fingers. "Let me be."

Tench released her and turned to the three Puritans with a glare of anger.

"They've done for him, between them," he said. "As there is a devil in Hell they shall pay for it."

Barton raised his head. There was no fear in his eyes as he faced the men before him.

"Let the woman be," he said. "She is guiltless in this matter, as we are."

"Easy to say. You're here. The captain's dead. That's enough."

"It was the negro boy—the hunchback, that killed him," Barton went on, steadily.

"Hold your tongue, your sour-faced rogue!" growled Tench. "It will not save you to put the blame upon another."

"He speaks the truth," Ramona interrupted. "These men are guiltless."

"It is no strange that you should try and defend your lover."

Captain Willoughby took a step forward. Upon his bluff and honest face were no traces of fear.

"Who are you?" he asked, looking pointedly at Tench, "that dare interfere with honest Englishmen?"

"By Heaven! roared the old man. "I promise you shall know, and that right soon. Graves! Into the house, and fetch a coil of good stout rope. These knaves must be taught better manners."

"Let me speak," Barton began.

"No! You shall hang."

Cotton, who had until now kept his peace, went up to Tench, a fine fire in his bigoted old eyes.

"Put aside your evil thoughts, O man of wickedness," he exclaimed, "and take heed to your salvation."

The buccaneer's rage was in no wise lessened by this outburst.

"Preach me no sermons, Master Blackcoat," he shouted. "Your tongue wags overmuch for one about to die."

"We are honest traders from New Bedford, as many in the town will testify. We know nothing of your captain, or his death."

"Lies will not save you." Tench took the coil of rope that Graves brought to him. "Hang, you shall, or my name's not Israel Tench, and here is the rope you'll stretch. Out with the canting knaves, Jortugee."

Ramona saw that but for some quick intervention, Barton and his companions were doomed. A desperate plan had begun to take form in her mind. She went up to Tench, her cheeks gray, her lips trembling so pitifully that she could scarcely speak.

"Listen to me, Master Tench," she said, with great effort. "What I say is the truth. These men did not kill the Firebrand."

The old buccaneer turned fiercely upon her.

So Digestible That Even Babes Thrive Upon It

ASK your doctor what sort of cereal food is best of all for easy and thorough digestion. Answer: A balanced food that is non-constipating, granulated to allow free play of digestive juices, and complete with the natural salines and coarse brans retained. All of these essentials are abundantly provided by

Dr. Jackson's

Roman Meal

Even babies may use it freely (from the eighth month) with greatest benefit to not only their health but their development and growth.

When grains are "refined" the brans, salines and nutritive dark parts are removed. Only the highly starchy white parts are retained. These fine, starchy particles pack and clog the digestive tract, and ferment. The poisons thus produced enter the blood—and you feel the nasty, debilitating sensation due to indigestion and self-poisoning.

Roman Meal prevents indigestion, and helps other foods to digest, too. It is porous because granulated. The digestive juices can reach every particle quickly, thus promoting digestion. The brans also help to bring out the digestive juices. Result: Quick and thorough digestion, no fermentation and no self-poisoning, hence the sense of wellness when you eat freely of Roman Meal.

If Roman Meal does not positively relieve constipation we will refund your money. If you load up your system with foods that are impoverished and lack waste, the muscles of the digestive tract just stop working, and then you have constipation. Let Roman Meal relieve it.

Roman Meal is also a perfectly balanced food. Your digestion is never upset by too much starches or too much protein. That is why it "agrees" with everybody—it is properly balanced. Ask your doctor about it.

Roman Meal has all the nutritive value of entire berries of wheat and rye, and the seed of flax rendered both tasteless and odorless by electricity. Roman Meal makes the most satisfying porridge (must never be stirred except while mixing meal and water). It is also used for making pancakes, gems, bread, etc. At all grocers.

Inheritance Tax Argument

Inheritance taxes are very heavy. Unlike Fire hazard they are not merely possible, they are absolutely certain.

They deplete your estate at once, and to your heirs represent a specific and definite loss of money.

In New York a $250,000 estate would pay a combined Federal and state tax of about $12,000. If left to a friend or distant relative, about $22,000. The John Jacob Astor estate paid $3,150,000. J. P. Morgan has insured his life for $2,500,000 to cover a similar loss.

Thus the estate is provided promptly with the ready cash to pay this tax and other expenses without the need of hurriedly disposing of securities or other assets, perhaps at a loss, to meet such needs. The logic of the situation urges immediate action. Premium rates, however low, advance with age and so does the possibility of entering the physically impaired group and losing the opportunity to secure this protection.

Knowing that this loss is actually coming, it is simply a matter of ordinary business prudence to guard against it. The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada offer you a plan to do so at very low cost.

FORGED ANTIQUES.

Even British Museum Experts Have Been Fooled by Them.

The "antiquity" manufacturer is a man who thrives on expert forgery. Furniture, prints, china, pictures, plate, tapestry—he imitates them all most successfully. Each man has his specialty. One devotes himself to old leather jacks, another produces horn books, a third turns out "medieval" MSS.

The British museum once bought a Palissy plate for $250. While an attendant was handling it one of the seals attached to its back attesting its genuineness became detached, disclosing the mark of a modern French potter.

On other occasions terra cotta figures of Isis and Osiris, bought by the institution for hundreds of pounds, have been discovered to be composed of modern clay.

A good story is told of a forged silver cup in Rome that purported to have come from some secret excavation in Sicily. This ancient cup was ornamented with a circular bas-relief, representing the frieze of the Parthenon. But in the height of his innocence the forger had given the frieze in its present ruined condition. The exhibition of the cup was received with shouts of laughter.—London Standard.

Constellation of Orion.

The constellation known as Orion is referred to in Job ix. 9 and xxxviii. 31. Orion is the "giant" of oriental astronomy, and the giant was Nimrod, the mighty hunter, fabled to have been bound in the sky for impiety. The two dogs and the hare in nearby constellations made his train complete.

Few Roads in China.

That industrial development must stagnate so long as transport facilities are inadequate needs no emphasis, and when it is borne in mind that there is not a road worthy of the name, so much as 100 miles long throughout China, it becomes evident that the country is very severely handicapped. Certainly there are the rivers and canals, which intersect the land in every direction, but locomotion on them is naturally slow and uncertain. Railways are few and far between and serve only to connect a few of the larger centers

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Ranee's Crystal

Story of an Adventure In Bombay

By CLARISSA MACKIE

John Barclay, a young man prominent in New York society and still more prominent in diplomatic circles, had just completed a most delicate mission which had taken him first to London, where he had met many distinguished people in high life; then on to India, where his task was finished. Never having been in that part of the world before, he wandered around for some time making himself familiar with the sights and customs of the country.

For a week he had been in Bombay, fascinated by the old streets, beautiful temples and palaces and the general mysticism of the life of a people so totally different from that experienced in any other part of the world. On the eve before his departure from the city John Barclay stood on Temple hill, and Bombay seemed very far away that breathless night as he looked toward the mystic towers of the city that lay a few miles distant.

Temple hill was in a suburb of India's great city, and John Barclay had spent a delightful day in examining the ruins of ancient temples and in wandering through the beautiful garden of a deserted palace.

Now the garden lay behind him, at the foot of Temple hill. Overhead the moon shone, a soft, luminous disk against the dense blue sky. The great stars beamed; not a cloud flecked the sky; not a zephyr stirred the hair on his temples.

After awhile that died away, and there was no sound save the weird call of a night bird or the distant cry of a jungle prowler.

He started violently and drew away from the gaunt framed Hindu who had touched his sleeve.

"What do you want?" demanded Barclay sharply.

The man salaamed.

"Pardon, sahib," he said softly, "but the ranee requests your presence at once."

"The ranee? Let me see," mused Barclay. "The ranee is the woman ruler of a district or province. Sort of a lady rajah, eh?"

"Exactly!" put in the Hindu calmly.

"The dickens! So you understand English pretty plainly, my man! Well, what does her royal highness want of a poor American tourist?"

The Hindu salaamed again.

"She would speak with the sahib."

"Very well, lead the way," decided Barclay, ready for adventure. "I hear the ranee is young and lovely." He smiled to himself as he followed his guide down the hill and through the gate that led into the very garden in which he had spent the beautiful afternoon.

The guide walked silently and swiftly through the garden, and Barclay, thrilled with the mystery and romance attending his summons to the presence of the ranee, followed.

Heavy scents of roses, jasmine and lilies clung close to him as he walked. A nightingale burst into rapturous song from some hidden covert.

The walls of the palace rose dark and forbidding. There was not one ray of light to be seen. Only the white turban of the Hindu served as a guide for the American to follow.

A man of weaker nerve than Barclay might easily have quailed at the risk taken in following so blindly a guide on an unknown mission in a country like India. He well knew how mysteriously people disappeared in those big cities of India, never to be heard of again. Of course a sense of the danger flashed through his mind, but his nerve was good, and he rather enjoyed the thrill of excitement in the adventure. Added to this was his curiosity to see the inside of one of those wonderful palaces of India and to be in the presence, according to report, of one of the world's most beautiful women.

Barclay stepped close behind the other as the man's softly shod feet noiselessly trod a stone passageway and mounted a narrow flight of stone steps.

Up, up they went until at last they emerged upon the flat roof of the palace.

Here was all the warm luxury of eastern life—gay awnings, soft, silken rugs, cushioned divans, delicately shaded lights swinging to and fro, sweetmeats and luscious fruits heaped on low tables and over all the sweet pervading fragrance of many flowers.

Under a silken awning a lovely woman reposed on a soft divan. Barclay caught a general impression of perfect features, dusky hair twined with flowers and jewels and the wonderful harmony of a silk robe that drifted away from her little slippered feet.

There were no attendants, no ladies in waiting. The beautiful ranee sat alone, her glorious dark eyes fixed expectantly on the approaching American.

To his surprise the ranee spoke in English.

"Thank you for coming, stranger," she said in a rich, musical voice.

"I am at your highness' service," said Barclay clumsily.

"You know who I am?"

"The ranee of Obdurah. She is said to be the most beautiful as well as the wisest among the women rulers of India," was Barclay's quick response.

The ranee shrugged her shapely shoulders.

"And the most miserable, they might have added," she said bitterly.

"I am at your service," reminded John Barclay.

"Thank you."

The ranee took from her girdle a tiny box, a half inch square, of ivory. From this she extracted something pale and gleaming and held it toward him.

"What is this, stranger?" she asked.

John Barclay examined it. "A bit of polished rock crystal," he announced.

"Right," she murmured complacently. "Your errand for me is to take this to a very high official in London. You will be amply paid for the service. If I should die before you reach your destination you need go no farther. Turn about and go home and keep the crystal in memory of a most unhappy ruler." The ranee closed her eyes and shuddered.

"I trust your fears are groundless," said Barclay cheerfully.

"Perhaps—who knows?—you may bring me luck," muttered the woman. "Now, will you do this errand for me?"

"I will," said Barclay, without hesitation.

"Good! The reward for your accomplishment of this mission will be paid in London. If my death occurs before you reach that city turn about and go to your home and keep the crystal."

Things were beginning to sound pretty grewsome to Barclay by this time, and he began to wish he were well out of the palace. However, to all outward appearances he was still as calm and unnerved as if he were talking to an ordinary companion in his club in New York, and his answer was made in a perfectly cool, calm voice.

"Yes, your highness. And the mission I am to fulfill?"

"Simply deliver this to the high official. He will understand. It bears a message, a last appeal. Take it."

The ranee thrust the tiny box into Barclay's hand, and he turned to go.

"Hide it!" she hissed sharply, and his fingers tucked it into his waistcoat pocket and fumbled there, finally bringing forth a cigarette box and some matches.

The ranee shot a swift glance of approval at this maneuver on Barclay's part, for the roof was filling now with a gay company of guests and attendants.

"Farewell, stranger," smiled the ranee wearily.

"The name, highness—you forgot the name of the official in London," reminded Barclay in an undertone.

The ranee leaned forward and beckoned him nearer.

"Let me whisper," she murmured.

Barclay inclined his head to listen to a name that caused his eyes to flash excitement and incredulity.

"As your highness dictates," he said when she had finished.

Many curious eyes regarded the handsome face and well knit form of the American who had just received a confidence from a noble ranee of India.

John Barclay salaamed once more and turned to leave the roof. As he looked around for the Hindu guide who had conducted him from Temple Hill to the roof he heard sounds of confusion. There was a stifled shriek from the ranee's silken canopy, and even as Barclay gazed doubtfully in the direction of the commotion dark hands drew the silken curtains closely about the divan where the ranee had been sitting.

Then for a moment Barclay felt that his fears were to be realized and that he was caught in a most dangerous trap. The feeling passed in a moment, however, for Barclay was a man of iron nerve and, moreover, realized that he was too important an American citizen to make it safe for them to endanger his life. In an instant he was his cool, calm self.

He glanced around on the gayly dressed men and women who had entered but a few minutes previous and at the obsequious attendants. All stood mute and impassive as statues.

"What has happened?" asked Barclay of a sharp featured Brahmin.

"Our ranee is dead," said the man suavely.

"I must see. Let me pass. I am agent for the ranee."

Barclay stopped suddenly at the look in the man's face, a look of malignant hatred and bitter suspicion, a murderous look that brought the American's hand to his hip pocket.

"Let me pass! I must be convinced!" commanded Barclay, and his revolver cleared the way for him.

He dashed through the silken curtains of the ranee's canopy and stopped short at what he saw.

The form of the beautiful woman was stretched on the ground before her divan. Her dark eyes stared sightlessly upward, and from the pale silks of her bosom there shone the jeweled handle of a dagger.

Barclay stood with bared head for a moment, and then without interference from the silent gathering on the roof he found the narrow stairway that led to the deserted garden and so finally came to Temple Hill and the road to Bombay.

When he reached London he found that the high official to whom the ranee had directed him had been foully murdered at the very hour in which the ranee had met her death.

Now the ranee's crystal belonged to Barclay, and when he had it appraised he learned that it was a diamond of the purest water.

The business that's in a rut is ripening for the grave, merely an enlarged rut.

A REMARKABLE STATEMENT

Mrs. Sheldon Spent $1900 for Treatment Without Benefit. Finally Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Englewood, Ill. — "While going through the Change of Life I suffered with headaches, nervousness, flashes of heat, and I suffered so much I did not know what I was doing at times. I spent $1900 on doctors and not one did me any good. One day a lady called at my house and said she had been as sick as I was at one time, and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made her well, so I took it and now I am just as well as I ever was. I cannot understand why women don't see how much pain and suffering they would escape by taking your medicine. I cannot praise it enough for it saved my life and kept me from the Insane Hospital."—Mrs. E. SHELDON, 5657 S. Halsted St., Englewood, Ill.

Physicians undoubtedly did their best, battled with this case steadily and could do no more, but often the most scientific treatment is surpassed by the medicinal properties of the good old fashioned roots and herbs contained in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

HOW CONSCRIPTION WILL AFFECT BANKS

Arrangements Being Made For Equitable Application of the New Military Draft.

The Canadian banks are completing arrangements by which it is hoped to work out in an equitable and satisfactory manner the problem of staff arrangements to meet the drain of conscription. To what extent the banks may be called upon to contribute from their already greatly reduced forces has not yet been definitely decided but by co-operating through a committee of the Bankers' Association it is planned to distribute the demand for men equally over the different banks while each head office will endeavour so far as possible, in encouraging or discouraging applications for exemption, to retain the men who, by their experience, are the least dispensable at a time when trained men are especially valuable in their ability to control the inexperienced help being introduced.

So far as the applications for exemption are concerned they will be made in the military district where the bank employee is located. However, in the meantime medical examinations are being made and reported and after a survey of the whole situation the head office will endorse applications for exemption wheer the services of the applicant are regarded as indispensable to the efficiency of the service. Other grounds for exemption may also have the consideration of officials and in any event there will be no effort to discourage the application for exemption of individual members of the staffs on their own initiative.

Head office officials state that they will endeavour to reduce their staffs to the minimum which will still allow them to give that service which the agricultural, manufacturing and general business needs of the country demand.—Financial Post.

HARD KNOCKS.

I ain't the man to say that failure's sweet,
Nor tell a man t'laugh when things go wrong;
I know it hurts to have t' take defeat
An' no one likes t' lose before a throng;
It isn't very pleasant not t' win,
Especially when you've done the best you could,
But, if you're down, get up and buckle in;
A lickin' often does a fellow good.

I've seen some chaps who never knew their power
Until somebody knocked 'em to the floor;
I've known men to discover in an hour
A courage they had never shown before;
I've seen 'em rise from failure to the top
By doing things they hadn't understood
Before the day disaster made 'em drop;
A lickin' often does a fellow good.

Success is not the teacher wise an' true
That gruff old failure is. Remember that;
She's much too apt to make a fool of you.
Which isn't so with blows that knock you flat.
Hard knocks are painful things, an' hard to bear
An' most of us would dodge 'em if we could;
There's something mighty broadening in care;
A lickin' often does a fellow good.

Try Making Your Own Cough Remedy

You can save about $1, and have a better remedy than the ready-made kind. Easily done.

If you combined the curative properties of every known "ready-made" cough remedy, you would hardly have in them all the curative power that lies in this simple "home-made" cough syrup which takes only a few minutes to prepare.

Get from any druggist 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth), pour it into a 16-oz. bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. The total cost is about 55 cents and gives you 16 ounces of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for $2.50. Tastes pleasant and never spoils.

This Pinex and sugar syrup preparation gets right at the cause of a cough and gives almost immediate relief. It loosens the phlegm, stops the nasty throat tickle and heals the sore, irritated membranes that line the throat, chest and bronchial tubes, so gently and easily that it is really astonishing. A day's use will usually overcome the ordinary cough and for bronchitis, croup, whooping cough and bronchial asthma, it is splendid.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract and has been used for generations to break up severe coughs.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions, and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

HUN FURLOUGHS ARE CUT DOWN

Army Authorities Say That "Restrictions Are Imposed With Reluctance."

COPENHAGEN, Oct. 30.— The new restrictions on the furloughs of the German soldiers, necessitated by the growing problem of transportation, cut down by one-half the number for men in the field and eliminate them for troops garrisoning the occupied regions, except for urgent personal reasons, or when leave is granted for pressing farmwork. It is believed this regulation can hardly fail to have an effect on the relatives of the soldiers, for the semi-annual opportunity to visit home and relax from the strain of service in the field was an important factor in keeping up the fighting spirit and willingness to continue the war.

The army authorities announce that the restrictions are imposed with the greatest reluctance. This may readily be believed, owing to the effort which has been made to maintain a regular system of furlough, even for units engaged in the heaviest fighting.

Last year when the Germans were most severely pressed in that struggle was one of the military paradoxes of that time. A regular service of trains reserved for men on furlough has been running to full capacity throughout Germany.

After the radical step, the Government will hardly shrink from any measures to decrease civilian passenger traffic. If the recent doubling of fares is ineffective, it is expected that ultimately police permission will be required for every journey. The trains will be largely unheated in order to discourage travel and save coal.

Directory First!

WHEN you call a telephone number from memory or when you guess at it you are apt to be wrong.

¶ The mind has a trick of transposing figures—instead of "1263" you are quite likely to say "1623."

¶ Also, telephone numbers, firm names, etc., are frequently changed.

¶ And when you thus ask for the wrong number, you waste your own time, the operator's, and the time of the person called through your error.

¶ Directory first is a good principle. In the end it saves time and temper to first consult the latest issue of the telephone book.

A Talk on Health

WORKING girls who have only their own intelligence and their two hands to earn a living for them cannot afford the luxury of self-neglect. That may sound like a paradoxical statement, but it is an absolute fact.

The girl with means can afford to be ill whenever she feels inclined, which accounts for many of the imaginary invalids one encounters in certain circles of our society.

If the fashionable miss wishes to allow herself to get run down and anaemic because she is too lazy to exercise, it is no one's business but her own.

Illness as a Luxury.

If she dissipates (after a maidenly fashion, of course), with late hours, and even with cigarettes and an occasional drink of harder stuff than orangeade or lemonade, still it is no one's business but her family's.

Her health may—and usually does—suffer, but in such cases nothing vital happens to her as a rule, but there is often this deplorable result, that when she marries and has children her offspring suffer for her self-indulgence or self-neglect.

The working girl, on the contrary, cannot afford the luxury either of actual ill health or even a generally run down condition.

Prolonged ill health means the loss of work, the rapid vanishing of hard earned savings, and eventual poverty and insufficient nourishment to regain strength and health.

Even if she is only a little run down and anaemic, it means trouble for the business girl. Her mind becomes sluggish and will not act as quickly as it should. Her fingers seem loth to perform their duties. She must force herself to do even the simplest tasks, which seemed as nothing when her health was good.

Instead of the absolute accuracy on which her employer has learned to rely, come occasional little mistakes, often followed by others of a more serious nature, all due to her loss of sound health. In the end, that, too, leads to loss of position.

You girls who have your own way to make in the world must guard your health as your most precious possession, which, in fact, it is in all circumstances.

If you have rugged health it does not matter very much how many disappointments you may encounter. You can fight your way through them all.

It is only when you feel ill and weak that discouragement comes easily. Then you do not feel physically able to face the hardships which almost every working girl must overcome.

So take care of your health first and foremost, girls. And the way to take the best care of it is contained in three simple rules—plenty of nourishing food, plenty of outdoor exercise, plenty of sound sleep.

Nourishing food comes first, because of these three all important factors in building up health and strength it is possibly the most important. You cannot be strong and well unless you have sufficient nutrition.

Unfortunately, so many of the working girls who assemble in the big restaurants at noon seem to make their dessert the principal part of their menu. Pies of all sorts and various puddings are ordered in greater number than any other kind of food.

This is ruinous to your stomach and general health. It is far better to eliminate sweets entirely, and pay out your money for such nutritious foods as meat broths, eggs, all kinds of beef, fresh vegetables and fresh fruits, which are useful and necessary to the system.

You should have at least an hour's exercise daily in the open air. Mind you, one whole hour is essential; not a minute less if you can help it.

It is not hard to get in a half hour's walk in the morning before going to work and another in the afternoon after office hours.

Three Rules of Living.

If you can give two hours a day to outdoor exercise it will help you build up very quickly, for being out of doors for a long time these brisk September days will give you a big appetite and will make you sleep more soundly.

The average person should have at least eight hours' sleep every night. This is the minimum amount. If you want to dance and go to the theatre occasionally, arrange to have these parties on Saturday night, when you can sleep late Sunday morning.

But content yourself on week nights with movies or an occasional concert, where you can get into bed not later than eleven.

Do not neglect your health, no matter how robust it may be. Once gone, it will be hard to repair, so guard it now!

Girl Workers of World's Biggest Office Building Enjoy all Comforts of Women's Club

ONE OF THE FIFTEEN RECREATION ROOMS

By ANNETTE DUMONT.

NEW YORK, Saturday.

GROWTH, as every one knows, is not merely growing bigger and bulkier, but it is increasing in efficiency and adaptability, so it is to be expected that the Equitable Building, the largest office building in the world, would have some interesting experiments to show in the two years of its occupancy.

One is rather startled, nevertheless, to learn that even while the plan of this mammoth sky-scraper was being draughted Mrs. T. Coleman du Pont, the wife of the principal owner of the Equitable, foresaw the vast army of girls who would be employed in its 2,300 offices. Through her influence floor space with a yearly rental of $7,500 was set aside to make the Equitable a business home and not merely a business cage for so many hundreds of girls. To this end five suites, each consisting of a rest room, a silence room and a lavatory, were designed to be used in connection with the Welfare Department. These suites are located at regular intervals from the fourth to the fortieth floor, one suite for each group of floors for the zones served by each of the five banks of elevators.

But the idea of an office building corporation maintaining such a service for its employes and tenants was so new that it had no precedents or models to go by. The floor space was provided, and the next task was to place a secretary in charge of this welfare work who would be able on the ground to solve the whole working scheme of the department.

A Girl Among Girls.

As soon as you meet Miss Marie L. McComb, the Welfare secretary of the Equitable Building, you do not question why she has been chosen to direct this new experiment. You know why. She is a young woman herself, alert, wide awake, businesslike, and interested in everything—a girl among the girls—but she shows a sureness of touch in handling the executive part of this welfare work which one usually looks for only from older heads.

While waiting in the large rest room of the fifteenth floor suite, just adjoining Miss McComb's office, until she had returned from one of her rounds of the building, I saw that a woman's hand had been at work in giving those little feminine touches which convert a bare room into a living room. The color scheme, selected by Miss McComb, is tan and brown. In this rest room there are easy chairs and lounging chairs and rocking chairs and foot rests, all in the Craftsman style. There are writing desks and tables, covered with magazines and periodicals. Here and there are growing plants to give that touch of green which every woman loves.

"Our aim," as Miss McComb later explained to me, "is to make our rest rooms artistic and homelike and yet not overcrowded. The silence rooms are kept cool and quiet and dark, and each has three or more couches. Here, if the girls become suddenly ill or give way under the strain of office work, five minutes of rest will often enable them to return to their work, instead of losing a half day or a whole day's work by going home."

She Gives First Aid.

At this point Miss McComb was interrupted in her description while she applied iodine to a finger that had been cut. On returning from a visit to the four other sets of rest rooms I found her again busily engaged in bandaging a sprained wrist. Miss McComb has taken courses in nursing and in "first aid," and in slight illnesses she personally, or one of the five matrons under her, administers remedies. Each suite is equipped with a complete outfit of "first aid" remedies and bandages. If the illness proves to be serious Miss McComb telephones at once to one of the physicians whose names appear on the list, which is always before her on her desk.

Not a single feminine requirement seems to have been overlooked. There is even the sewing basket, fully equipped for taking care of rips and tears, and the lavatories are lined with unusually long mirrors, capable of satisfying fifteen or twenty girls at one time.

"So much for the physical welfare of the girls," Miss McComb continued. "In a social way we try to make their noon hour as much of a change and relaxation as possible. We have a piano, which is transferred from one set of rooms to another on various days and is at the disposal of the girls. The Edison company frequently sends disc machines down for entertainment at the noon hour. The Dennison Art Company has held displays here.

Some Are Needle Experts.

"In December we have on exhibition the art needlework done by the girls at the noon hour. It is amazing the skill and perfection some of these girls display in this side line. Last year the exhibition was held for one week, and prizes of five dollar gold pieces were awarded by competent judges to the most skilful."

The way these exhibitions came to be held is quite typical of Miss McComb's entire work. While passing through the rest rooms at noon she noticed how many girls would spend about fifteen minutes for lunch and devote the rest of their time to this embroidery work and even to making hats and gowns for themselves. This led her to suggest these exhibitions, which have been such a marked success. Thus her entire idea of conducting her department has been gleaned, not from the experience of others in the work, nor from books, unless it be from the book of feminine human nature which she has before her all the time.

"We make a special effort to assist girls who want to advance educationally and increase their earning power and their value to the firm. There are many firms in the building which have foreign departments. So we have organized classes in French and Spanish and the girls merely pay a fee large enough to cover the actual cost of the instruction. While we have no course in business English, we do arrange for them at the various schools in the city, in which, if the girls go from here in groups, they get the advantage of special discounts. This winter we expect to hold speed contests on the typewriter at the noon hour.

Advises on Personal Matters.

"Above all, we never lose sight of the personal side of the girls' natures. I come in contact with two thousand girls, and I aim to have them regard the Welfare secretary as a personal friend to whom they can go for comfort and advice on intimate matters relating to their troubles at home or at business."

It is quite easy to understand why the girls take advantage of this opportunity, for Miss McComb has the kind of personality which invites confidence and insures intelligent co-operation.

How much this Welfare Department means to the girls employed in the Equitable Building is shown by the following figures:—In the month of July 16,811 used the rest rooms, 3,526 used the silence rooms and 495 applied for "first aid" remedies. In that time 400 visitors were shown through the various suites.

Girls, Be Loyal to Your Employer's Interests

THE girl who is ambitious to succeed will find that there are many avenues to success if she will only look for them, and, contrary to the popular belief, she will find, after she has been in the business world for several years, that brilliancy is not by any means the chief requisite of the day.

The brilliant man or woman is very rare, and experience has taught most employers that the brightest employee are not always the most useful. The brilliant woman is too often opinionated about her work, with an overweening sense of her own importance and a too great appreciation of her own worth.

There are many everyday virtues that count far more in the general sum, and perhaps the greatest of these is faithfulness—not only being faithful in the discharge of work, but faithful in the sense of obligation to one's employer.

Every Day Virtues.

If your duties demand that you should reach the office or the store at eight o'clock in the morning, do not be one minute late. It is just as easy to be on time, and you will find that nothing will pay you larger dividends in after years than the habit of punctuality.

During your working hours concentrate on your work. If you had a pleasant evening the night before there is the greater reason to devote the day to the interests of your employer, and you cannot do this if your mind is on other things.

There are so many girls who do not seem to realize that their employers are paying for more than their mere presence at the place of business. It is not enough to be at the office or the counter or the factory—you must be not only at your work, but in your work. Only in that way can you possibly make good.

Press despatches have recently carried the story of an Irish girl only twenty-five years old who has inherited the large and lucrative business of her former employer because she was faithful to the trust that he placed in her. During her working hours she devoted her time to his interests. She did not forget that he paid for that time, and that from eight until five o'clock belonged to him.

We are not always rewarded in the direct way that reward came to this faithful girl, but rewards come in many and various ways. Often the indirect appreciation is just as valuable as the direct gift.

A girl who had worked faithfully for a great many years without any mark of appreciation recently came to a realization that it is not always possible to estimate the value of work faithfully done. She was often discouraged, and it seemed to her as if she was making little progress, and sometimes she wondered if it was worth while to always do her best, with no apparent reward, while she saw others advanced while she went her faithful way.

And then suddenly there came into her life a new impetus to good work. A man who often visited her place of employment and who had noted her good service offered her an opening. She then found, somewhat to her surprise, her real value to her employer had not been unappreciated by any means.

Not only was she retained by her old firm, but she was advanced to a more responsible position and her salary was raised.

Her employer called her into his office and said:—

"I am told that Mr. N—— has offered you a position with his company. I want you to know that if you wish to take that position there will be no ill feeling between us. But before you do I want you to consider one thing. You have been with this company for a number of years, and we have not advanced you very rapidly, for I am frank to say that you have been slow in learning the business. But your good work has not gone unnoticed.

Faithful to Trust.

"You have been punctual, faithful and conscientious in the discharge of your duties, and we have planned to raise your salary in the fall and, as you gain in experience, to advance you as rapidly as possible. The other firm may pay you more, but it is not well established. We are. And we appreciate the good work you are doing."

That girl is now holding one of the most responsible positions in the country. Yet she is not a brilliant woman in any way. But she has been faithful to her trust, and so has received her just reward.

Talks on Domestic Topics

SPRINKLE all your coal with water before using in stove or furnace. It will make a hotter fire and burn longer.

To keep lemons, have some nice, dry, clean sawdust in a box and bury them in it, and they will keep for weeks.

To have jelly come out of glasses without breaking its form, rinse glasses in cold water before filling; do not dry them with a cloth.

To insure the bluing being evenly distributed, in making blue rinsing water for clothes add a little salt to it.

To keep irons from rusting rub with mutton fat and wrap in brown paper before putting away.

The new broom will last much longer if the strands are tied closely together, put into a pail of boiling water and soak for two hours. Dry thoroughly before using.

Black and white cotton goods should first be soaked in a weak solution of salt water to prevent the black and white from running.

A range will keep black longer if you wash it with soap and water before applying the blacking.

The objectionable sputter and flying hot fat when eggs are dropped into it may be prevented if a little flour is sifted into the fat just before they are added.

If low shoes blister the heel use adhesive plaster on skin while shoes are new.

Save all greasy waters when cooking. Do not throw in sink drain, but use at roots of small bushes in gardens.

To clean kitchen walls use a soft cloth wrung from lukewarm water and spread with common baking soda. Rinse with clean, soft cloth wrung from lukewarm water. Walls will look like new.

Simple remedy for chilblains:—Bathe feet in hot water, then in cold; rub with cocoa butter. This relieves the feet wonderfully.

To insure fast colors in washing add one tablespoonful of turpentine to a pail of water, dip the article in the solution and dry before washing.

Before putting a roast in the ice chest cover with paraffine paper. This keeps the meat moist and juicy to the end.

When the stove is barely warm rub it briskly with a cloth moistened with kerosene; spot, dirt or rust will disappear and your stove will be neat and black with little work.

An old boiler and a wooden box are the bases of an ice saving refrigerator. Have the box a little deeper than the boiler, two feet wider and just long enough for the boiler to fit in easily. Place the ice around the boiler on both sides. A heavy packing made of gunny sacks or old pieces of carpet may be used to cover the top.

THE CHEMISE FROCK.

One dominating accessory that Paris is placing on the chemise frock is a bib that drops over the waist line and is given a semblance of curves by the girdle.

Here is the way in which the new kind of frock will differ from the one that is in your possession now in all probability. It will be as narrow at the hem as it was five years ago. It will have the neck line taken from the fifteenth century Italian student dress. It will be so loosely girdled that the waist line will be as supple as in a sweater.

The loose armhole, with its effect of being an imitation of a Chinese jacket, is in fashion, but there is a leaning toward the exaggerated mediaevalism of the swinging armhole, with a sleeve that protrudes from beneath it and which does not borrow its characteristics or even its coloring. At times it inclines toward strong individuality.

The Virtue of Being Popular

ALL young girls long for popularity. It is just as natural for a girl to want to be liked and admired as it is for a flower to bloom.

We all like the small attentions that mean so much in our lives. We women never get too old for the bouquet of flowers, the box of candy, the various courteous attentions that express so much. And yet popularity with men should not be the only popularity that the girl should seek.

The maid who is not liked by her own sex as well as by the opposite one is not really popular. There is something lacking in her make-up.

There are few fixed rules for popularity. But there is one law that has never failed and never will fail as long as the world lasts. And that is:—Be interested in other people.

The girl who is entirely immersed in her own affairs can never be really popular, for she must fail through the very nature of things. She may interest others for a brief space, but even the most faithful will tire after awhile with nothing deeper than the selfish background of her own personality to attract.

The beautiful woman always has her admirers; the bright and witty one forever precedes her train of followers; the vivacious and the amiable invariably attract. But the most popular girl you know is so for other reasons than these.

Stop and think why she is so much liked and you will find that it is not because of her beauty, not because of her vivacity, nor her wit nor her learning, but because she likes other people.

She is interested in them, and so she draws them to her.

One of the plainest women the world has ever known was one of the most popular. She lived in France, and in many ways you would not like to resemble her. But there was one great virtue she had, and that was kindliness.

It is a strange thing, but most people like to talk about themselves. And with all due respect this is especially a trait of the male. Men are grown up little boys. They like to confide in a nice girl, just as when they were little lads they liked to tell their troubles to mother.

But no woman can keep the regard or even liking of any man, no matter who he may be, if she breaks faith with him. Let her never betray the confidence he has placed in her. If he confides to her some cherished ambition or past endeavor, it is very unworthy of her to divulge to another what he has told her in confidence.

Women are older than men, no matter how young the woman or how much older the man. There is the eternal spirit of boyhood in every man's heart and the beautiful spirit of motherhood in the heart of every good woman.

Be Interested in Child's Studies

THE child of school age is out of place at home, provided, of course, that he or she is a strong, healthy youngster.

In olden times there wasn't much fuss made over children just starting in at school. Mothers saw to it that their little ones reported promptly on the opening day, and encouraged their children to be faithful in attendance during the term. And these mothers went still further. They "heard" the children's lessons after supper, assisted them as far as they were able with their studies, and did all in their power to help the little ones maintain a good standing in their school work.

The Lure of the Open.

The mother of to-day should take as deep an interest in her children's study progress as did those good women of other times. Indeed, the youngster of the present needs to be looked after pretty closely.

Swimming and fishing were about the only inducements that could lure the old-time schoolboy away from his books, but to-day every street corner offers some sort of an attraction, and in many instances it is an attraction that keeps boys away from school. Mothers should think seriously over these matters, should encourage their children to attend school faithfully, and should keep track of their progress in the school room.

The child who later on in life must look for his bread and butter should lose no time from his books. This is an age of education—of being able to use one's brain—and the boy or girl who enters the business world unable to express himself or herself correctly, or write a letter grammatically, faces life seriously handicapped.

Therefore the mother who will permit her children to lose time from their studies, unless they have a grave reason for so doing, certainly has a very hazy idea of "learning," and its influence on the average person's life.

There are children indolent and lazy—just like their elders. These youngsters will not study, and as a result cannot keep up with their classes, but such children should receive absolutely no sympathy at home. Instead, their parents should take them in hand and demand that they apply themselves in the right way to their books.

Many over-anxious mothers declare their little ones are not strong—that the school work is too hard and too wearing. However, the growing boy who can eat well, play and get into all sorts of forgivable mischief is not by any means delicate, and the quicker his mother acknowledges this truth the better it will be for all concerned.

School days are very brief, wonderfully sweet and vastly important. When they are passed we would give worlds to recall them, but as we cannot do the impossible we can do the next best thing—see that our children are present every day—that they are encouraged in their studies and helped in any way that we can possibly help them.

Don't leave it all to the teacher. Her path is not by any means rose strewn. See that the children do their share—encourage them to do it, and you may rest assured the teacher will do her part faithfully and well.

Co-operate with Teacher.

True, customs change with passing time. The school of the present is vastly different from those of other times, but the results aimed at to-day are the same as those aspired to by the teaching force of the "little, old, red" schoolhouse. Parents should remember this fact and forget the moss-grown past. Furthermore, they should not underrate the "new fangled systems" that seem to displease a certain element.

Keep the children at school. Open their books once in a while, and get an idea of their studies, and, finally, have a good word for the teacher. She is paid for her work, it is true, so are we all, but every one of us delights in having that work recognized no matter how fairly we are compensated for it.

CANADIANS ALMOST AT THE GATES OF PASSCHENDAELE

Dominion Troops Gained From 800 to 1000 Yards Along Their Front and Are Now Astride the Famous Ridge---During Last Night Germans Made No Attempt to Regain the Lost Ground.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(By The Associated Press.)

BRITISH FRONT IN BELGIUM, Tuesday — The forces of Crown Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria to-day suffered another stinging defeat when the British reached out across a sea of mud and wrenched away still more of the few remaining defences in the enemy's Passchendaele system.

It has been another proud day for Canada.

Her troops this afternoon were sitting almost at the gates of Passchendaele, and from their positions astride the Broodeseinde-Passchendaele highway along the ridge, they could see only four hundred yards away the great church which stands in the centre of the village. Meanwhile British home troops on the left of the Canadians had undertaken the task of crossing the Paddebeek River and morasses in order to bring their line forward and protect the Canadian flank. The men from the British Isles knew that this must be done and they did it. How they accomplished this drive through the clinging mud probably they themselves could not tell.

One heavy counter attack delivered by the Bavarians as early as 8:30 o'clock from Masselmarkt against the Canadians was caught by artillery and machine-gun fire and smashed. The gain on the Canadian front averaged between eight hundred and a thousand yards along most of it.

The Canadians encountered a stiff position early in the advance at Friesland Copse, a machine-gun defence lying in the Valley of Ravebeek, which runs down the slopes at the junction of Meetcheele and the Passchendaele Ridge. The enemy turned heavy machine-gun fire on the advancing troops, and when they closed in fought bitterly to retain hold on their concrete defence. But Friesland Copse fell and the Canadians pushed on up the slopes.

At the left Canadians and English pushed rapidly across the Paddebeek River and assaulted numerous enemy defences on the eastern bank. The ground was in very poor condition.

Such strongholds as Sourd Farm and Cource Farm maintained heavy gun-fire against them from the moment the advance began. In spite of those difficulties they pushed their line forward and established contact with the Canadians on their right.

PETROGRAD, October 31.—The Germans are continuing their attempt to fraternize with the Russians. The War Office reports that efforts in this direction on the northern front yesterday were frustrated by the fire of Russian artillery.

PARIS (Official), October 31.—A German attack in the Argonne last night was beaten off by the French, the War Office reports. An artillery battle is in progress over the front of the recent French attack north of the Aisne.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, October 31.—The Germans made no attempt during the night to regain the ground won yesterday by the British on the Ypres front. "The German artillery developed some activity during the night on the battle front against the positions captured yesterday," says to-day's report from Field Marshal Haig. "But no counter attacks occurred. There was nothing of special interest on the remainder of the front."

Canadians Defeat the Best of Germany's Fighting Forces

(By W. A. Willson, Correspondent of The Canadian Press in Flanders.)

CANADIAN ARMY HEADQUARTERS, October 31. — Opposed by troops as formidable as any in the whole forces of the Central Empires, our Canadian infantry is meeting them hand-to-hand and has gained one victory after another, sending them reeling back towards Passchendaele with heavy casualties. No fewer than four counter attacks have been repulsed. One against our right on the Ypres-Roulers railway where our troops were opposed by the famous Guards, another against our positions at Crost Farms, where the Prussian infantry fought stubbornly to regain last positions, and two against Meetcheele Spur, when the Bavarians proved no match for our men on the left flank.

Wounded men give dramatic indications of the nature of the fighting in their detailed stories. Held up for a moment on the right by heavy enemy shell and machine-gun fire our troops plunged forward and attacked Crost Farm at the point of the bayonet, killed, wounded and captured the occupants of the concrete stronghold, rooted out the enemy machine guns and turned their fire on counter attacking forces hastily thrown forward from the enemy reserve line behind Passchendaele Ridge. The German positions on Meetcheele Spur which were carried at the point of the bayonet under heavy machine-gun fire were scenes of bitter conflict, but the enemy could not long resist the determined onslaught of our men who, however, pay tribute to the clean fighting qualities of the Bavarians. So it was all along the line. The enemie's pill boxes, that is those that were still active after our artillery barrage, were overcome by our victorious men who swept forward irresistibly. No estimate of the number of prisoners and enemy machine guns captured is as yet available, but wounded Huns were travelling back all day. The total will not be small. Two human touches in the desperate day were seen in one of the clearing stations when German prisoners arrived supporting one of our men who had been shot through the thigh. Just behind them one of our men appeared lending assistance to a wounded enemy.

SENTENCE OF TWENTY-ONE MONTHS FOR LEO PHELAN

Local Young Man Convicted by Jury Yesterday of Indecent Assault Upon a Young Woman in August Last

CONTRADICTED GIRL

Leo Phelan, aged 19, was last night at the Fall Assizes, sentenced by Mr. Justice Latchford, to 21 months imprisonment with hard labour, after having been convicted by a jury of indecent assault upon a young woman.

The case occupied the attention of the court during the afternoon.

The prisoner took the stand in his own defence and flatly contradicted the evidence offered by the girl in the case. He unhesitatingly denied that he had assaulted her, and explained that the torn skirt submitted by the Crown, by saying that the girl in getting out of the car while he measured the supply of gasoline, had torn her dress on the handle of the door.

A number of citizens were called to give character evidence on behalf of the prisoner.

After the arguments of Mr. G. N. Gordon, who defended the prisoner, and Mr. W. J. McWhinney, K. C., the Crown Prosecutor, Mr. Justice Latchford briefly charged the jury. If they believed the prisoner's story, he told them they must dismiss the case. But he asked them, did they believe that story? The question of motive must be considered. It was easy to understand why a prisoner should give false evidence in his own behalf, but why should a girl concoct a story of the kind heard? Where two stories totally contradicted each other the probabilities must be taken into consideration.

The case went to the jury about 6.30 o'clock, and they returned their verdict of guilty of indecent assault, in a comparatively short time.

$10,792 FOR RED CROSS

Result of Preliminary Canvass on Monday and First Day of the Campaign Yesterday Decidedly Gratifying to the Workers

DRIVE CONTINUING

$10,792.00 was the splendid total reported at the supper of the Canadian Red Cross workers at Hooper's Palm Parlours last night.

The total represents the result of the preliminary canvass on Monday and of the first day's work of the teams yesterday. With to-day's and to-morrow's returns to come in, over half of the objective ($20,000) has been secured, and with the co-operation and assistance of the public the teams are confident that by to-morrow night they will be able to announce that the campaign has been a huge success. The canvassers expressed themselves as delighted with the spirit in which they were received.

A newsboy turned in a donation of $1.00 in ten cent pieces as his contribution to the great cause.

To-morrow night the members of the Salvation Army are holding a big meeting with a view of making the contribution of the Salvationists of this city to the Red Cross a noteworthy one. At the request of the Salvation Army several members of the Red Cross Society will address the meeting.

The headquarters, on George street, two doors north of the Examiner Office, will be kept open during the campaign and if anybody is overlooked by the canvassers he or she may leave a donation at headquarters. The ladies who were in charge yesterday installed a knitting machine and turned out a good many pairs of socks during the day.

Subject Milk

The advance in the price of milk is unavoidable for the reason that other dairy products, butter and cheese, are high. The season has been so unfavourable for the past two months, not a green blade of grass is to be seen for pasture. Feed has been so high the farmer did not feed to produce milk, believing it to be wiser to save feed for the winter feeding, consequently there is a very small supply of milk in the country at the present time. The farmer can ship 150 miles for the same cost as 10 miles; this brings us in competition with Toronto firms, who are buying all the milk in sight, at a price that will not warrant retailing at 12 cents per quart. The question is—do the citizens of Peterborough want milk or do they wish to do without and let the citizens of Toronto have all our milk. This is the question they must decide and decide at once, otherwise it will be too late.

Win-the-War Speakers Urge Unity of Action

ATTENDANCE NOT LARGE

Stirring pleas for unity, for individual support for the Union Government, and for the dropping of all party differences until the war is won, featured the meeting held in the Victoria Hall last night, under the auspices of the Win-the-War League. The attendance was not large, nor could it be called representative, as very few Liberals were to be seen in the hall. A delegation from the Great War Veterans' Association was present and a few ladies were in the audience. The greater number of the men on hand, however, seemed to be members of a section of the Conservative party who apparently saw in the meeting an effort to undermine Capt. J. H. Burnham. The result was that the visiting members of the Win-the-War League who came to Peterborough to promote unity between Liberal and Conservative, found themselves in the embarrassing position of being regarded by many in the audience as coming to widen the split that has long existed between two sections of the Conservative party in this riding.

Undoubtedly the visiting members of the Win-the-War League are sincere and patriotic in their campaign to encourage a spirit of unity and just as undoubtedly there is an abundant field for their work in this constituency.

Judging by impressions of remarks heard after last night's meeting the situation seems to be that the section of the Conservative party which nominated Capt. Burnham over two years ago regard him as the logical Unionist government candidate, regardless of the fact that he was nominated at a party convention held long before Union government was a factor. The views of the other section are too well known to need any exposition here. It seems reasonably certain that if representatives of the Liberal Association went to the Conservative Association to-morrow and offered to accept any other candidate than Capt. Burnham, even to allow the Conservative Association to select the man, and permit him to be returned by acclamation the offer would be refused. In other words the candidature of Capt. Burnham is regarded by the majority of those Conservatives who supported him at his nomination as more important than unity of action as a means of winning the war. This may be regarded as a strong statement, but no other unprejudiced conclusion could be formed from comment heard after the meeting. Mr. Ben Gould's remark that "until this war is over nothing else matters," seemed to have fallen on many pairs of deaf ears.

The Speakers.

The speakers of the evening were Mr. Ben Gould of Toronto, the former United States Consul, who became a citizen of Canada because he felt that the United States should have entered the war earlier, Mrs. L. A. Hamilton, of Toronto, the president of the Equal Suffrage League, and Col. McCullough of Hamilton, widely known for his work in connection with the Canadian Club.

Mr. W. R. Morris was elected chairman for the evening, on motion of Messrs. Jas. Kendry and Frank Adams. Mr. J. A. Aylmer announced that Mayor Duffus was to have presided, but had been called out of the city.

The meeting was opened with the singing of the National Anthem.

"Until this war is over, there is nothing else that matters," was the expressive sentence with which Mr. Ben Gould opened his eloquent address. "We have got to cast aside as of no importance, no value, those things we cared about in the lesser times that have passed. We have to grow in our souls until the thought that pervades us is what can I do in this great crisis of the world?"

The speaker reviewed what Canada had accomplished in the war. At the beginning there was hardly any one who believed that this war would be what it had proved to be in magnitude, in sacrifice and in suffering. "It is a shame," remarked Mr. Gould,

ONLY TWO MEN OUT OF TWENTY-ONE REJECTED TO-DAY

Sixteen Were Placed in A Category and Three More Pronounced Fit for Non-combatant Service in the Overseas Forces

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

THIS MORNING'S SESSION.

Candidates Examined 21
Placed in A Category 16
Placed in B Category 3
Placed in E Category 2

There was a very high percentage of Category A men in evidence at the armouries this morning. Out of twenty-one men examined no fewer than sixteen were graded as fit for the trenches and three others were considered fit for non-combatant service overseas, leaving the number of rejections for the morning only two.

The rush to be examined is as great as ever with a greater number of city men being examined than usual.

AT THE POST OFFICE.

Postmaster Edgar reports that to-day is the slowest day so far as regard to registrations and very few Class One put in an appearance this morning. The total registrations here so far only number 343, of which 328 are claims for exemption, and only 15 are reports for service. Two local men waived claims to exemption, and signified that they were ready to serve, yesterday.

Mrs. McLeish, 162 Adeline Avenue, has received the following letter from the Canadian Red Cross Society in regard to her son, Gunner R. G. H. McLeish:

Dear Madam,

I beg to inform you that Gunner R. G. H. McLeish, No. 1260528, Canadian Artillery, is now at Bath War Hospital, Bath, Somersetshire, England, and was recently seen there by our visitor, who tells us that he is suffering from rheumatism and debility, and is confined to bed. He says he feels better and seems quite cheerful and happy, and seems to be doing well. We hope that he may make a good recovery.

With best wishes.—Yours very truly,

Hon. Mr. Cross Confers With Sir Wilfred

(Special to the Toronto Star and the Peterborough Examiner).

OTTAWA, Ont., Oct. 31.—Hon. G. W. Cross, of the Alberta Government arrived in Ottawa this morning and will have a conference with Sir Wilfrid Laurier this afternoon. "The prospects are good," remarked Mr. Cross. "In fact they are excellent. As a man who stands by the resolutions passed at the Winnipeg convention, I expect to see Sir Wilfrid Laurier this afternoon.."

"Will straight Liberal candidates be placed in all seats?" Mr. Cross was asked.

"Speaking for Alberta and British Columbia," he answered, "there is practically no defection from the Liberal ranks to the Unionists. In Manitoba there is a complete Liberal organization. I am not so conversant with the Saskatchewan situation. We are not the ones who are worrying about the candidates," he concluded.

Foster and Carvell To Speak Here

It is understood that Sir George E. Foster and Hon. Frank B. Carvell will address a meeting in Peterborough in the near future in the interests of the Union Government. It is likely that the meeting will be held in the armouries.

ITALIANS WILL MAKE A STAND ON TAGLIAMENTO

River is a Roaring Torrent, Which Will Offer a Formidable Barrier of Defence Against the Austro-German Drive

COALITION IS FORMED

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

(By John H. Hearley.

ROME, Oct. 31.—Rome expects the great German-Austrian drive to come to a halt on the flood-swollen banks of the Tagliamento river. Reports from the front to-day declared the river was a roaring torrent, which it was confidently believed would offer a formidable barrier of defence for the Italians now being withdrawn in orderly array to its banks. French and British gunners, co-operating with the Italian troops, have been of tremendous moral support to Gen. Cadorna's men.

The excellence of the military roads constructed in Austrian territory which Cadorna seized last summer, has been of immense aid to the enemy. The net work of these highways has afforded the Austro-Germans quick means of transporting men and supplies.

ITALY RALLYING.

The strongest proof of how Italy is now rallying to the cause of repelling the invader was furnished in the quick formation of a coalition cabinet. Practically all parties threw aside their political differences and joined in this ministry. Particularly emphatic was the response of the Socialists — the party which forced the downfall of the Boselli cabinet.

As formed, the cabinet includes these officers:

Premier and Minister of Interior Vittori Orlando.
Minister of Foreign Affairs Baron Sonnino.
Minister of War General Alfieri.
Minister of Finance Signor Meda.
Minister of Pensions Signor Bissolati.

solidation to be appraised by two valuators appointed by the proper authorities. Should they fail to agree, a third to be selected by these two, and the decision of the majority to be final. Such appraising of each business to be based only on the physical valuation of the property together with the volume of business on the gallon basis. Shares to be issued to existing distributors. Releasing and retiring of these bonds to be charged against the distributing operations. Preceding the reorganization of any milk business justification for such action must be submitted.

Saving in Cities.

In taking the seventeen larger cities of Canada, the population aggregates 1,717,941. The daily consumption estimated at one half pint per capita the result is a total of 429,485 quarts per diem, or a yearly consumption in quarts of 156,762,120. At a saving of one cent per quart this would give $1,567,621.20. In Ottawa for example, the population is estimated at 87,062. The daily consump-

CARVELL IS OPTIMISTIC

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

OTTAWA, Oct. 31.—Hon. F. B. Carvell, Minister of Public Works, returned to Ottawa from the Maritime provinces by the sea. Sentiment, he tic about the Unionist outlook in the provinces by the sea. Sentiments, he declared, was very favourable even in the district where party politics have always been taken very seriously.

Questioned as to his policy in connection with the carrying on of Public Works, Mr. Carvell declared that while the war was in progress they must be subserved to the financial needs of the war, which are great. A million dollar appropriation for a breakwater at St. John, which is needed, but not immediately necessary under the conditions, will remain as an appropriation merely, but will not be used at present.

"I thought the best thing to be done was to start right at home," he remarked to-day. "So there will be no breakwater at St. John for the present."

MUST AND WILL CARRY ON.

The temporary reverse to Italian arms is depressing, but not discouraging. It is a disconcerting incident in a great war; one of the steps backward that may be followed by two forward. It will not probably have any decisive results; it may make the struggle longer and harder, but will not exclude the ultimate result, defeat for the German war lords.

The people of Germany have been schooled for a generation at least in the belief that the German army was invincible. That faith has been rudely shaken. The events on the western front have shown that the British and French armies in fighting quality, in initiative, in equipment and morale, are superior to the German war machine, and to hearten the people some spectacular thing must be done. This was tried with momentarily success in the Riga region, where Germans got an easy and empty victory over the demoralized Russians.

Russia's defeat was Germany's opportunity. It permitted the withdrawal of troops from the eastern front to make a smashing blow against the Italians. How the force of this blow persists will till the extent to which the German people will be heartened by a temporary military success, for which Germany will pay a high price. The situation is serious enough, however, but it should only incite us to more vigorous endeavor and greater unity of action. There is encouragement in the fact, in spite of a flurry of desperation, the German armies are beaten. They may break out fiercely here and there, but their defeat is closing in. For the moment the real battle front is in Italy and we shall soon see the Allies coopearting there to inflict, perhaps, a more smashing blow on the Teuton powers than the western front now theratens.

Is a "party" candidate under unionist colours, a wolf in sheep's clothing, or a plain sheep who thinks he can fool anybody?

GERMAN DISILLUSION.

More than a year ago the Germ... military authorities, to let down ther... selves as lightly as possible in t... failure to take Verdun, and to fu... ther blind the people, declared th... the losses of the French had been ... severe in that defence, and so irre... arable that the French army was v... tually eliminated as a fighting fact... This declaration has had to be as th... oughly reversed as the sentiment ... hind the taunt of "French's contem... tible little army." Since that t... the French have shown that there ... a great deal of fight left in them; ... have re-captured all the posit... worth capturing around Verdun, ... sitions which the Germans bo... with such merciless slaughter of n... ed men. The Crown Prince's ... has been thrust back by soldiers "... had no fight left," and the Fr... joined the British and conspicu... contributed to the victory of the Somme, and stiffened the British in the victorious drive north of Ypres. The "beaten" armies of the French, under General Petain, made a break through the German line north-east of Soissons, forced back the Crown Prince's army, and captured 8,000 prisoners, many of them of the vaunted "Prussian guard," and gained all the heights dominating the Arlette valley.

The French, who were "eliminated" at Verdun, are again showing splendid dash and a disastrously efficient offensive to the Germans. A despatch received yesterday shows how much efficiency for fighting is left in the French army, the German war office officially annihilated. The most perfectly coordinated team work in the history of the war, between artillery and airmen, carried the "beaten" French forces deep into enemy territory. We have long since learned to discount heavily German declarations of prophecy. They don't win, and they encourage us. We know that we have negatived every German estimate of the invincible efficiency of their own armies and military machinery. We have beaten them soundly time after time, and Germany has learned to her bitter cost that the British and French armies they have defeated on paper, are still formidable and victorious fighting factors; and we have yet to hear and see, as we soon shall do, the disparaging comment of Potsdam on the United States forces, pale in the light of victory won or aided by United States arms. We have taken the measure of German bluff and brag.

Food Controller Hoover of the United States says: Hogs, wheat and ships, but only by soldiers carried over with ships and loaded with hogs and wheat.

IS IT TO BE REAL UNION

If we are to have real Union Government, we must subordinate the party spirit and regard measures for selecting representatives who, by their support, will make a Union Government a real win-the-war government, as far as trying is concerned.

We don't know how it comes about that a partizan association can consider it is living up to the spirit of the Union Government, which has declared that it cannot recognize purely partizan nominations, when it uses its partizan machinery to nominate non-partizan union candidates. Yet we find party associations, composed of members of the Premier's own party, making party nominations, and presuming to label the nominee "union candidate." This was done in Ottawa. The Conservatives nominated two straight Conservatives without any pretence of cooperation of Liberals, evading responsibility for flying in the face of the Union Government's policy by renaming the Conservative Association the "Unionist Win-the-War Association;" a mockery, when one of the nominated candidates said: "Call the Association 'Union' if you like; I call it 'Conservative.'"

In like manner, Colonel Hugh Clark was nominated as "win-the-war" candidate for North Bruce. The bills calling the Unionist, non-party convention that nominated Colonel Clark, were headed "Conservatives, Attention!" There was no effort made to invite cooperation of Liberals.

Under similar circumstances, a "candidate of the Union Government" was nominated for South Waterloo by a Conservative convetion. In Brantford, two candidates have been nominated on the same principle, or contrary to the principle demanded by the Union Government, and the Conservative organ defends the action under the assumption that "the representatives in the new house should be of the same complexion in those constituencies whose members worked and voted for win-the-war measures." This airy assumption would bring the representation in the new parliament to the old status quo—a very pretty plan to protect party interests under cover of a nominal union alliance of political forces.

It was to entirely change the old ... not meet this fundamental consideration of united non-partizan electoral support.

If already nominated party candidates of either party, and partizns persist, they will be responsible for disturbing antagonism, and the defeating, in part at least, of the main object of forming the Union Government—to unite, on non-partizan lines, on lines of patriotism, all the energies of the people upon concentrated and unified effort to enable Canada to do her full share in war-winning.

Any and all who persist in the course adopted in Ottawa, in North Bruce, South Waterloo, Brantfgord or elsewhere, will show that they have more concern for party agrandizement, than for securing of general unity in war action; and tend to furnish evidence of the feeling of some sceptics that the Union Government was a mere camflouage—a travesty—of the old Borden Government to enable it to hold its party grip, and escape being brought to book for its record.

When the policy of using party conventions to nominate "non-partizan" but really partizan candidates, is pursued, the machinery of Union Government is disorganized, and the spirit of political unity imperilled; for as is to be done in some constituencies, Brant for instance, the Liberals will probably nominate a candidate in opposition at a party convention.

Claim Military Service Act Is Unconstitutional

Canadian Press Despatch:

MONTREAL, Oct. 31.— A petition has been entered in the Superior Court here to have the Military Service Act declared unconstitutional.

The petition was filed on behalf of Paul Emile Mongeau, one of the anti-conscription orators. It will be considered by Judge Bruneau. The parties named in the petition are Judge St. Cyr, who committed Mongeau for trial and Hon. C. J. Doherty, the Minister of Justice.

The petition claims that the Military Service Act is unconstitutional, illegal and vexatious, because Royal authority, vested only in the King, has been superseded. It argues that according to the British North American Act of 1867, in which are contained the clauses relating to Quebec, military service as applied to Canada is for the defence of the country. The petition further alleges that the Imperial Parliament is therefore illegal and unextra territorial powers outside the limits or borders of Canada, and that legisation otherwise by Parliament is therefore illegal and unconstitutional.

When the Germans Occupied Paris in 1871

WHEN the Germans occupied Paris in 1871 they demanded—and collected—an indemnity of one thousand million dollars. Hundreds of thousands of French peasants and industrial workers trudged their way into Paris and, with the citizens of Paris, offered their savings to the Government of France, so that their beloved country might be freed from the presence of the Hun.

Suppose, for example, that two or three Huns were quartered upon you—right in your home.

Try then to imagine what you would do, give, pay, or lend to free Canada from the Hun.

Recall the things that have happened in Belgium and France and conceive if you can what you would pay in money to prevent them happening in Canada.

Well, then, you who stay at home—women as well as men—are asked to lend your money to Canada NOW to prevent just that, and other things.

And so surely as the Allies' Soldiers in the Front line trenches are fighting for Freedom, so in a lesser degree do they fight who lend their money to support Canada's armies in the field.

Money fights to-day, and it is the bounden duty of every Canadian to back Canada's part in the war by investing his or her savings in Canada's Victory Bonds.

Sunday Sermon For Those Who Do Not Go To Church

(By JAS. SUTHERLAND)

Noah findeth grace, Gen. 6-8:

Noah was distinguished from the rest of the world, and a peculiar mark put upon him: This vindicates God's justice in His displeasure against the wickedness of the world, and it also magnifies His grace towards Noah and his family. Noah was made a vessel of God's mercy, when all the generation had become the children of wrath. Noah could not find favour with men, because his life and his preaching condemned the world; he preferred to find grace and favour in the sight of God, and that was sufficient for his honour and comfort. God made more account of Noah than of all the world, besides, and this made him greater and more truly honourable than all who were mighty men, and men of renown. Let this be our ambition, to find grace in the sight of the Lord, that whether present or absent we may be found in Him. 2nd Cor. 5-9.

Those are highly favoured whom God favours. When the rest of the world was corrupt and wicked Noah kept his integrity, and yet it was God's good will towards Noah that produced this good work in hif; he was a very good man, but he was no better than the grace of God made him. 1st Cor. 15-10.

He was a just man, justified before God by his faith in the promises of God, and his faith in Him; for he was an heir of the promises of the righteousness which is by faith. Heb. 11-7—none but a downright honest one can find favour with God—to be pleasing to God we must be governed by simplicity and sincerity, not by fleshy wisdom; 2 No. Cor. 1-12. He walked with God as Enoch had done before him. He was not only sincere but devout; he walked, that is he acted with God, as one always under His eye; he lived a life of communion with God; he strove to please God and approve Himself to Him; God looks down upon those with an eye of favour who sincerely look up to Him with an eye of faith. But that which crowns Noah's character is that thus he was, and thus he did, in his generation, in that corrupt and degenerate age, in which his lot was cast. It is easy to be religious when religion is in fashion, but it is an evidence of strong faith and resolution to swim against the tide to heaven, and to appear for God, when on one else appears for Him; did so. When wickedness is become general, ruin is not far off; while there is a remnant of praying people in a nation to empty the measure as it fills. Judgment may be averted for a time, but the day of reckoning always comes. God made Noah the man his counsel, communicating to him his purpose to destroy the wicked world by a flood. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him; we tell our secrets to those we love; to our friends we open our hearts. Psalm 25-14. It was with his servants, the prophets, by the spirit of revelation informing them particularly of his purposes. It is with all believers by a spirit of wisdom and faith, enabling them to understand, and apply the general declarations of the written word. God could have destroyed all mankind, as he destroyed all the first-born of Egypt, and the camp of the Assyrians, and then to set a mark upon Noah and his family for their preservation; but God chose to do it by a flood of waters, which should drown the world. The reasons we may be sure were wise and just, though to us unknown, as he chooses the rod with which to correct His children, so he chooses the sword with which He cuts off His enemies. He says, I, even , do bring a flood. I that am infinite in power ,and therefore, can do it; infinite in justice, and therefore, will do it. God here establishes His covenant with Noah. This is the first place in the Bible where the word covenant is found! It seems to imply that the cowise of nature shall be continued to the end of time, notwithstanding to the interruption which the flood would give to it. 2nd. The covenant of grace; that God would be to him a God, and of His seed. God would take to Himself a people. When God makes a covenant. He establishes it; He makes it sure; He makes it good; His are everlasting covenants. The covenant of grace has in it the recompense of singular services, and the fountain and foundation of all distinguishing favours. We need desire no more, either to make up our losses for God, or to make up for us a happiness in God, than to have His covenant established with us. Now God directs Noah to make an ark. This ark was like the hulk of a ship; fitted to float upon the waters, waiting for their fall. God could have secured Noah without putting him to any care, or pains or trouble. Himself, but He chose to employ him in making that which was to be means of his preservation, for the trial both his faith and obedience the providence of God crowns the obedient and the diligent. God gave Noah very particular instructions concerning this building, which could not be but admirably well fitted for the purpose when infinite wisdom itself was the architect. It must be made of gopherwood. Noah doubtless knew what sort of wood that was, though now we do not, whether cedar or cypress, or what other. Exact dimensions are given him, that he might have room enough in it to answer the intentions. God promises Noah that he and his should be preserved alive in the ark. What we do in obedience to God, we, ourselves, are likely to have the comfort and benefit of. He was not only himself saved in the ark, but his wife and his sons, and his son's wives. Good parents are solicitous, not only for their own salvation, but for the salvation of their families, and especially their children. Parents' piety often procures children's temporal salvation, and furthers them in the way of eternal salvation, if they improve the benefits of it. God made Noah a great blessing to the world. God made him a preacher to the men of that generation. As watchman, he received the word from God's mouth that He might give them warning. Ezek. 3-17. Thus while the long-suffering of God waited, by his spirit in Noah, He preached to the old world who, when St. Peter wrote, were spirits in prison. 1st Peter 3-18-20: He preached repentance and warned men of a deluge of wrath coming. God made Noah the preserver of the inferior creatures: to keep them from perishing. This was a great honour put upon him, that not only in him should the race of mankind be continued, but that also he should be instrumental in preserving the inferior creatures. Two of every sort, he must take with him into the ark: they were to come to him of their own accord and he was to provide sustenance for them. He must victual his ship according to the number of that great family. Noah's care and diligence in building the ark may be considered as an effect of his faith in the word of God. God had told him that shortly the flood would come and destroy the world, he believed it, and feared the threatened deluge and in that fear prepared the ark. We should fear the wrath of God against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men. It was also an act of obedience to the command of God, had he consulted with flesh and blood, many objections would have been raised against it. To rear a building, such a one as he never saw, so large and of such dimensions would put him upon a great deal of care and expense; it would be a work of time. neighbors would ridicule him, but he wrought steadily on, according to the plans that God had given him, till his work was finished. He did the work willingly and cheerfully, honouring God by his faith and obedience. When God gives warning of approaching judgments it is our wisdom and duty to provide accordingly. God's call is very kind, full of tenderness and love, just like a father to his children, and such he is, calling to all to come to His shelter from the impending storm; hear His loving invitation: Come thou and all thy house into the ark. The sacred inviter says, and the Lord shut them in.

Yours sincerely,
JAMES SUTHERLAND.

THE TONIC THAT BRINGS HEALTH

"Fruit-a-tives" Builds Up The Whole System

Those who take "Fruit-a-tives" for the first time, are often astonished at the way it builds them up and makes them feel better all over. They may be taking "Fruit-a-tives" for some specific disease, as Constipation, Indigestion, Chronic Headaches or Neuralgia, Kidney or Bladder Trouble, Rheumatism or Pain in the Back. And they find when "Fruit-a-tives" has cured the disease, that they feel better and stronger in every way. This is due to the wonderful tonic properties of these famous tablets, made from fruit juices.

Centralization Of Milk Delivery In Cities Suggested

Where An Economical Saving Can Be Effected—Suggestion to Food Controller

OTTAWA, Oct. 27.— The milk committee appointed by Food Controller Hanna to investigate the price of milk and the solution of the problem met for the last time as a body this morning. An incomplete resolution which has been drawn up to be forwarded to the Food Controller was read over by P. B. Tustin, chairman of the committee, and it was decided to leave the final issue in the hands of Messers. Hamilton, Tustin and Wilson, who will remain in Ottawa and add the finishing touches to the resolution before its presentation to the Food Controller.

Appoint Commissioner.

1. The Food Controller appoint as Commissioner a competent man, with business and practical dairy experience, to compile returns, determine prices and act as adviser.

2. The spread shall be determined by the actual costs of production and distribution in the various localities, and shall vary from time to time according to market conditions as reported to Chief Commissioner.

3. Reorganization of the milk business in any city where an economical saving can be effected, and by three competent men as local commissioners acting under the direction and approval of the Food Controller—one representing the producer, one the consumer, and one the distributor. These commissioners to be appointed by the Food Controller upon the recommendation of his representatives in the province where action is being taken.

Consolidate Distribution.

The following plan is submitted for consolidating milk distribution:

1. The most efficient plants and equipment be selected.

2. All property affected by the consolidation to be appraised by two valuators appointed by the proper authorities. Should they fail to agree, a third to be selected by these two, and the decision of the majority to be final. Such appraising of each business to be based only on the physical valuation of the property together with the volume of business on the gallon basis. Shares to be issued to existing distributors. Releasing and retiring of these bonds to be charged against the distributing operations. Preceding the reorganization of any milk business justification for such action must be submitted.

Saving in Cities.

In taking the seventeen larger cities of Canada, the population aggregates 1,717,941. The daily consumption estimated at one half pint per capita the result is a total of 429,405 quarts per diem, or a yearly consumption in quarts of 156,762,120. At a saving of one cent per quart this would give $1,567,621.20. In Ottawa for example, the population is estimated at 87,062. The daily consumption in quarts totals 21,765 and the yearly 7,944,408 quarts, and the sav-

SPLENDID WORK OF RED CROSS DESCRIBED BY CAPT. HENSHAWE

Lecture in the Murray Street Baptist Church Last Night Was a Revelation as to What is Being Done Overseas.

SPLENDID PHOTOGRAPHS

Straight from an investigation of the actual conditions of the work of the long arm of the Canadian Red Cross, and with photographs illustrating the conditions, Captain Julia Henshawe's lecure last night in Murray Street Baptist Church proved a talk of unusual interest to the large number who attended.

Captain Henshawe first illustrated the wonderful way in which British women have fallen in and actually released men to go to the Front. No branch of activities before undertaken by men have proved too strenuous for the women of Britain. Street cleansing, driving motor lorries, elevators, even remount depots, are now in the hands of women, who are being recognised as man's equal; not by breaking windows and destroying property, but by proving their efficiency in the call of war.

The women in Red Cross work are working as women have never worked before. Sorting casualties from hospital reports to notify the families anxiously awaiting news in Canada, working often until midnight. No effort is spared to comfort the anxious friends. Red Cross parcels to be sent to the right place, newspapers to be sorted and sent to the different hospitals—the work of the society is ceaseless and far-reaching.

Red Cross in France.

The speaker portrayed the terrible need of Red Cross supplies in France by a series of photographs from the casualty clearing station in the field to the time the wounded arrive in "Blighty." Step by step the progress of the wounded soldier was traced from the casualty clearing station, and in every step the efficient work of the Red Cross was the predominating feature—spotless hospitals only a short distance from the actual fighting, where the shattered sufferers receive as efficient attention as in their own homes; ambulances passing ceaselessly to the next stage of hospital attention; hot drinks for the sufferers, and cigarettes, not a luxury but a necessity—all are in the untiring hands of the Red Cross.

Socks Needed.

Captain Henshawe preached the gospel of socks—socks and more socks. "There never has been enough yet," she said. "The story comes of a battalion having too many. This is one battalion—another is suffering from the unequal distribution. Organized societies correct this situation. The long arm of the Red Cross sees that no soldier wants.

French Red Cross.

In startling comparison to the tender care of the British soldiers, Captain Henshawe depicted the attention given to the wounded French. No cleanly, comfortable beds, no perfectly equipped operating theatres, and few comforts await the wounded Poilu. His is the lot of a makeshift sometimes of straw in any building, and perhaps a serious operation on a rough board by a single candle light.

Work Has Slackened.

But the work of our Red Cross Society has slackened even in the face of all this, and fell off this year. To win the war the women must stand behind the men and work ceaselessly with the single-minded thought of winning the war and save Canada a like crucifixion Belgium suffered.

THE WEIGHING OF COAL EXPLAINED FOR THE PUBLIC'S BENEFIT

A few days ago, at one of the committees of council meetings, it was submitted that several loads of coal, from both dealers and from the city supply differed in the stated weight from the yard when the weight was verified on the city scales. Loads from the city supply were stated to have been over weight, one as much as ninety pounds. Possibly, but that load was weighed by a policeman, and not by the weighmaster. That is the reason we have a city clerk of scales. The bet is offered that if you pick out ten citizens, off the street at random, and ask each to weigh a load of coal, nine out of ten will make a mess of it. Nearly every man who tries the function gets wrong, for he proceeds to weigh in his own weight, and forgets to deduct his averdupois from the gross total.

Now it is not to be taken that we have policemen weighing only ninety pounds. That would be libel on the force, one of the finest. But if we hadn't a weighmaster, weights would not be accepted as authentic. And as, further, we are spending the people's money, their very own money that they have supplied for coal, possibly there are those who wish to know how the matter is adjusted at the yard in an endeavour to give fair weight.

Coal is, mainly, delivered in bags. Hence the consumer does not propose to pay for the weight of the bags. This dates back to the days when the grocer weighed in the paper he put on the scales. Each morning the waggon, as it comes to the yard, takes on say, forty bags, (for two tons of coal) the shovel, the shute, and a good healthy driver for the team, and the outfit is placed on the scales and weighed. Tally is kept of the weight. Then when two tons of coal are to be delivered in one load the gross weight should show four thousand pounds over the working weight.

Should the day turn out wet, the outfit, bags and all, is re-weighed before starting in on afternoon deliveries. A wet day will fasten twenty-five pounds of mud on the wheels, easily. The bags will take up sufficient moisture to make a very perceptible difference in the gross weight, when one wishes to be careful. Well wetted, a bag will pick up nearly a pound and a half of moisture. A perfectly dry bags weighs, on an average, about three pounds.

The weights of the running gear are taken as above, and posted up beside the scales, and unless altered by the formean, are taken as the standard weight for the day. Here are a few of the standards as taken from the records.

Wagon No. 1—Weight of wagon, 40 bags, shute, shovel and man, 1,590 lbs. With two tons of coal, registered as at 5,590 lbs. With 20 bags and one and one-half tons, 4,560 lbs.

Wagon No. 2—(Single rig). Weight of 20 bags, shovel, shute, man, 1,330 lbs. With one ton, 3,330 lbs. With one and one-half tons 4,360 lbs.

Wagon No. 3—40 bags, shovel, shute and man, 1,780 lbs. With two tons, 5,780 lbs. With one and one-half tons, 4,750 lbs.

This system is followed practically by all coal yards, unless it can contrive a better one. When the waggon rolls on to the scale to be weighed with the coal on board, any variation of weight is adjusted by adding or deducting what is requisite from a quantity kept in a box alongside the scales. Any small variation may be ascribed to the idea of "let 'er go; it's pretty near right."

To verify further, loads, at rondom are sent by the foreman for the city yard, to be checked up on the city scale. And he will not designate that the load is to be sent to the city scale until after it is out on the street. So that it will be average weighing, and not a load prepared for sacrifice. Below are the records of four loads so verified. Two are found short. Two are exactly the same on both sets of scales. All from the city yard.

Weigh ticket 2,795. Yard scales show 5,610 lbs. City scales same weight. Verified by clerk.

Weigh ticket 2,793. Yard scales 4,000 lbs. City scales, 3,980 lbs. Verified by clerk; load 20 lbs. short.

Weigh ticket 2,79.. Yard scales 4,000 lbs. City scales, 3,980 lbs. Verified by clerk, 20 lbs. short.

Very many of the loads agree, exactly. So they agree when weighed for local coal men. Where the difference comes in it is hard to determine. Why the weighs should vary between the yard and the city scale is one of those things no fellow can understand. But it comes so, occasionally. If it were heavy winter weather one could understand it if the teamster cast off his overcoat and boots preparatory to weighing. But he does not. And, on the other hand a few loads are a trifle over weight. But on the whole the men are honestly trying to give the people, as all coal men do, in fairness, the weight for their money. Any coal man who is attending to business has something else to do than to stand and swipe twenty or thirty pounds of coal off a load. If he did, his men would give him away, and so far we have not heard of such a case within the memory of man.

"VALSE ALLURING" IS CHARMING PIANOFORTE SOLO BY ASA HUYCKE

Mr. Asa Huycke has scored a new success in his latest composition, "Valse Alluring," which was received from his publishers last week. Already it has had an extensive local sale and promises to surpass in popularity all his previous efforts, even the sparkling march, "Irresistible," with which he won a secure place as a composer of music of more than an ephemeral appeal. His new waltz has a charming melody that dominates the entire work, with a diversion, in a minor key that indicates his fertility of ideas. Not only has "Valse Alluring" a haunting refrain, but it is also distinctly original. And there is nothing stereotyped in its form and arrangement, evidences both of a thoughtful and resourceful writer. Mr. Huycke deserves every encouragement and congratulation. The standard he has set in all his work should appease the captious critics who find no merit in popular music. Mr. Huycke gives promise of greater achievements, and his future will be closely followed by his friends whose best wishes are that his highest hopes may be realized.

There would be less trouble in this world if people were permitted to be happy in their own way.

No man will admit that he would marry a woman smarter than himself—because he doesn't believe there is one.

Evening Session Of The Sunday School Convention Was Largely Attended

Meeting Opened With a Praise Service Conducted by Prof. E. O. Excell of Chicago—Instructive Addresses by Prominent Sunday School Workers—The General Setretary's Report.

A YEAR OF PROGRESS

The third session of the fifty-second annual Sunday School Convention came to a close last evening just as the clock was striking ten. It marked the close of a big day's work and a quickening vision for many of the five hundred delegates who are present in the interests of the Sunday Schools throughout Ontario. The evening session was featured by a couple of splendid addresses by two staff members of the International Sunday School Association.

Prof. E. O. Excell, of Chicago, the well-known music publisher and composer, is in charge of the musical end of the programme. Last evening he was assisted by Prof. C. C. Laugher, of Bowmanville, and Mr. J. H. Renwick. The meeting opened with a song service, and during the evening a solo was sung by Prof. Excell.

Graded Lessons.

"The Spiritual Aim of the Graded Lessons" was the subject of an instructive address by Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner, of Peoria, Special Field Worker of the International Sunday School Association. "Every child has a right to know its spiritual relationship with God," said Mrs. Bryner. "This is the aim of the graded lesson. It is true that God is a spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit. That is not the easiest thing to inculcate in the mind of the child. Graded lessons have a four-fold purpose. The first aim of the graded lessons is to teach the child that they have a Heavenly Father. The second aim is to indicate the child's relation to God. The second relation is in response to the first. If God is love, we ought to be able to say we love Him, because He loves us. This is the simple story we should bring before the child. The third aim of the graded lessons indicates God's relation to others and our relation to ourselves is the fourth.

Simple Language.

Mr. R. A. Waite, of Chicago, Associate Superintendent, Secondary Division of the International Sunday School Association, was the next speaker. Mr. Waite, in a forceful manner, presented some of the difficulties that sometimes develop in Sunday School work. Chief among these is the tendency of some Sunday School workers to overlook the necessity of expressing themselves in simple terms in harmony with the thoughts of the child. "We have all recognised our duty to teach the boys and girls to pray, but am I right in saying that we are only learning to meet an equal responsibility, and that is to teach the boys and girls how to pray," said the speaker. "In the realm of the Sunday School, growth is often confused with the actual spiritual results, but numbers do not constitute a test of the religion in the school. What we do need is new spiritual life that will produce results in the Kingdom of God. A prayer that I would commend to you is taken from the Testament. It reads as follows: "Beloved, I pray that in all things thou mayest prosper and be in health even as thy soul prospereth.' Greater demands were never made upon the Sunday School than the demands made at the present time," said the speaker in conclusion.

Secretary's Report.

The General Secretary's report, which was presented by the Rev. Mr. Halpenny at the afternoon session, contains the following:

In the Elementary Division, 55 fresh county and city reports were received for this year, indicating that 33 out of 55 reporting had attended their annual county or city convention. One city and three counties have attained "Front Line" Standard. Fifteen counties report over 75 per cent. of their schools having Cradle Rolls. The total number of Cradle Rolls in Ontario is 2,433, with an

In the Secondary Division, boys' and girls' conferences have been held in several of the large cities in the Province of Ontario, with approximately 4,000 in attendance, reaching 250 to 300 places. The enrollment of registered classes is rapidly on the increase. The "Canadian Standard Efficiency Tests for Boys" and "Canadian Girls in Training" are gaining ground, and are being used by many Sunday School classes throughout the Province of Ontario. These programmes of work will assist very largely in building up a fine type of boy life and girl life in this Province.

Adult Classes.

It is very gratifying to notice the registration of the adult classes from both rural and city Sunday Schools, and it is very evident that the Adult Division is becoming recognised as a mighty force in community life. The second bi-annual Adult Conference was held in Hamilton last February. There were 462 registered delegates from 43 cities and counties.

Very satisfactory results were reached in the following departments: Teacher Training, superintended by Mr. H. W. Brown, the Missionary Department by Miss V. M. Thomas, and the Temperance Department by Miss Alice D. Adam.

Field Force.

During the year the field force attended 74 county conventions, 140 township conventions, 62 special meetings, in all reaching 234 places, and attending over 700 sessions, giving over 627 addresses. Besides, there were 161 conferences conducted, 52 Sunday pulpits supplied, 265 committee meetings held, and a mileage reached of over 30,000—a record of which any organization may justly be proud, and compares very favourably with previous years.

Three very important departmental conferences were held during the afternoon, each commencing at 3.15, as follows: The Elementary Division in Murray Street Baptist Church, with Mrs. J. J. Eaton, of Toronto, presiding; the Secondary Division in Bethany Tabernacle, at which addresses were given by R. A. Waite and D. H. Wing; also the Adult Division in St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, where Mr. J. C. Coveney, of Toronto, presided, and addresses given by Revs. Dyer and Halpenny on "Home Department Work and Parents' Classes."

At the close of the afternoon session, Prof. Excell arranged for a men's chorus that will participate in the evenings throughout the convention.

Questions sent to the Examiner will receive attention in due course.

Question: Mrs. J. R. T., Charlotte St., City—Editor, Examiner, will you through the medium of your valuable daily, tell me how to remove inkstains from my writing desk. It is red Mahogany wood?

Answer: Dissolve about two ounces of Oxalic acid in a pint of rain water, strain through fine muslin, then add one ounce of Butter of Antimony. Put this mixture on the spots, use it very carefully or you may discolour the wood surrounding the stain, which would have to be toned up again to match.

WHEAT STOLEN IN LINDSAY

LINDSAY, Oct. 31. — A. G. T. R. inspector from Montreal has been in town for the past few days, and in company with Chief Constable Short, is investigating a case of taking grain from one of the cars which was placed on a siding convenient to the iron bridge.

It is stated that hundreds of pounds of wheat are missing and two Lindsay youths are now under suspicion. The parties accomplished their purpose by boring several holes in the under part of the car with an augur.

Those upon whom the suspicion rests have been selling wheat in small quantities of late.

It is expected that some startling developments will be the outcome of the Montreal officer's visit.

EMERGENCY MEASURES MAY HAVE TO BE TAKEN TO GET COAL

May Be Necessary to Impound Surplus Supply in the Hands of Private Individuals or Public Bodies—A Programme That May Soon Be Necessary

During the last few days there has come incessant call to the City Coal Supply for fuel. Very many aver that in the house is nothing of fuel. Very many of these applications are true in fact. Some are not. But the end is that fuel is scarce, so far as a public supply is concerned. In the early days of September, now two months ago, and when coal was promised to the Supply in fair and regular quantity, orders of coal to the extent of three tons were served to citizens. But for the last six weeks none but ton orders have been served except in cases of very long haul. The city now has registered so many as over five hundred orders, all paid for. Coal is again promised early. It is on the track. The railroad has been urged again and again to hurry forward. If it can do this we shall have coal in the city, outside of what the local dealers have and get for supply.

On the 30th, (Tuesday) the selling agent from whom the Civic supply is procured was brought to the city to consult with as to the situation. Little was learned beyond the fact that now the function of the Dominion Fuel Controller is coming into prominence. For and remember, the whole duty of the Controller is to determine where fuel shall go, to what part of the province or Dominion, as well as to try and ensure a supply. The demand is insistent from all over. Presently it will take the shape that a city, or town, or village, will have to prove up that it needs coal. Not wants it. But is in stringent need before it may gain a further supply.

Coal has been held back from the border on a claim by the American interests interested that Canada has already had more than 600,000 tons of hard coal over its average supply at this time of the year. This contention has been disproved, after some time and controversy, and the anticipation is that coal may now be released in larger bulk. But over 2,000 points are clamouring for fuel. All making claims equally insistent and verified.

Now it is a truism that some difficulties and trouble we are able to meet with larger efficiency if we can have time in which to prepare, to look about, to consider what we may do and may have to do under a given set of circumstances. Rather than to have to act in an emergency. If we take thought how we should meet the emergency, should it arise, then we are that much further ahead in course of preparation. So we might just as well consider right now, what we shall have to do if we have to do it.

It will be best to anticipate a fuel shortage. If it does not intervene then we shall be agreeably disappointed. But if it does come about then we shall, as a city have to act. What is there we can do? Just this, help ourselves.

The powers of the Dominion Fuel Controller are pretty wide and thorough. The published excerpts from the Order-in-Council show that if he deem the emergency a valid one he can order a coal census to be taken of the municipality, in order to determine where the fuel is housed. Customs returns show, infallibly, how much fuel has come into the city, for instance. If not now in sight it is stored, somewhere, for winter burning has not as yet commenced in earnest. And if stored, either in private houses or in public places it may be available to fend off the hardship of cold and inclemency. As it surely will be used, if the pinch come.

The Fuel Controller can, if he be requested, have the coal dealers enumerate and supply lists of those to whom coal has been delivered. This to determine how much any individual or individuals have laid in stock for the winter. We hear it darkly hinted that there are those who have laid in a two-years' supply. Quite a proper thing to do in the course of ordinary trade. No censure is due those who have been thoughtful and who are able to anticipate. It is done every day in business and trade. But if the pinch comes, and it is much nearer than anticipated, those stores of coal may be available for use of those who are coalless and cold. It would be a drastic thing to do to impound a man's supply, but not his over-supply.

But that is not all. We could not, as a city, take any such impressive and radical step unless we first prove that we, as a city, are willing to make sacrifices. That we are willing to deprive ourselves of this or that to which we have been accustomed in order to lessen the demand for fuel that may be transposed to the bins and outhouses of those who really are in need. The old statement that "money counts," as was quoted by an inspired party at a late public meeting, has been shot to pieces. Money is of little avail, for there is heaps more money in sight than coal on the track.

What then can be done. To what may we look forward to giving up during this cold winter that is coming on. If we assume that the emergency will come, as it may arise about the opening of the year, we can plan now to meet it. Every ton that can be released is a ton for some one to burn in the household.

Beginning about January 1st, we must prove our faith by our works, and hit on a programme about as follows:—for charity begins at home.

Close up the city offices and house the clerk, engineer, tax collector, plumbing inspector and, if you will, the treasurer, in one room, the city engineer's office. Pretty close quarters, but all these people are agreeable to work with and have common sense.

Send the Charity Officer and Sanitary Inspector up to the Patriotic Fund Office, and all will be serene. The end is, release twenty tons of coal. For a couple of good stoves will warm the bunch.

Put a stove in the police station and another in the police court and save twenty tons of stove coal. It can be made hot enough for those frequenting the police court, at any rate.

Close up the public schools, for January and February. Let the teachers and pupils take a winter holiday, and even up by keeping the schools open in July and August, for one year only, when no coal is needed. Save, let's see, about 200 tons of coal.

Close up the Public Library. Could save there at a guess, about twenty tons, possibly more. A substantial saving, at any rate.

The Isolation Hospital asked for 47 tons of coal to do it for the winter. If the cases are very few, and such may be, as has been the case, arrange to have them taken care of at one of the other hospitals. Some rules may have to be bent, (not broken) and the rules can be straightened out afterwards. We could release, say twenty tons, or so, and not feel it.

Close up the T.A.S. It is a local convenience, but local conveniences will not keep the home fires burning when the home fire is short of fuel. Close up the Y.M.C.A. to even things up from a useful standpoint, and a guess is hazarded that by the time the robins come in the spring no one will be much the worse for it. Inconvenienced, that's all.

Let George St, Church go over and worship in St. Paul's. The two are pretty close together now and the winter's association may close up the gap. Close down the Church of the Sacred Heart and have the people attend the Cathedral. This to even the matter up in a denominational way. From these churches coal can be had that will warm many a household.

Carry the same spirit of economy and helpfulness into other public gathering places, and the combined saving would make such as would relieve the strain and provide fuel. For if the pinch comes, and it may, we shall have to rely on ourselves much more than on outside assistance.

What has been suggested is no romance. It may come to pass. The fuel situation was to mend at the end of October. So far as mending it is nearly the reverse. Some difference may appear so soon as navigation on the lakes closes down. But with cargoes to be had and wheat to come over the lake traffic will keep up to the last day. If you want to get a bird's eye view of the local situation just go and see Mr. Adams, who can tell you, if he gets time from the 'phone, just what the public think, say and beg for. Just this, coal.

POWER CONTROLLER IS DEMAND OF ADAM BECK

Asks Government to Regulate and Govern Power Export and Production.

OTTAWA, Oct. 30.—That a controller be appointed by the Dominion Government under the War Measures Act to regulate and govern the whole question of production and export of power in Ontario was urged by Sir Adam Beck on behalf of the Ontario Government, the Hydro-Electric and the various municipalities interested to-day. Government members present were Hon. Messrs. Rowell, Reid, Foster, Mewburn and Robertson. Representatives of the power companies were also present. The matter will be further discussed this afternoon, but Sir Adam Beck expressed the hope at noon to-day that the request would be acceded to. Sir Henry Drayton who has gone into the whole question and gave his views to the gathering.

Sir Adam strongly advocated effective Government control of the power situation, giving primary consideration to the needs of the munition business so that the Hydro could meet its obligations. The attitude of the Government was generally that the largest possible production of power could be secured from existing plants and that industries supplying essentitl war supplies should have adequate power for the operation of their plants. It was the desire that necessary public utilities should not be interfered with in any manner.

FEW FOLKS HAVE GRAY HAIR NOW

Druggist Says Ladies Are Using Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur

Hair that loses its colour and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even colour, that beautiful dark shade of hair, which is so attractive, use only this old time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture improved by the addition of other ingredients by asking at any drug store for a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite to impart colour and a youthful appearance to the hair. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Permission To Lay Gas Mains Given

A special meeting of the North Monaghan Council was held last night at the residence of Reeve Rye for the purpose of hearing a deputation from the Browton district, who waited upon the Council to ask that permission be granted to the Gas Department of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission to lay a gas main on Monaghan Road and on Chamberlen Street as per plan submitted.

The Council was represented by Reeve Rye, Deputy-Reeve Bell, and Councillor Williams, while the deputation consisted of Messrs. W. J. Byers, A. W. Archibald, Michael Curtin, and W. T. Byers.

On the motion of Mr. Williams, seconded by Mr. Bell, the request of the deputation was granted, and permission will be given to lay the required main, provided that the road be left in as good condition as it is now.

It was moved by Mr. Bell, seconded by Mr. Williams, that the Clerk notify the Grand Trunk Railway to repair the crossing at Lansdowne Street on the siding into the Brinton Carpet Company's plant.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Bell, seconded by Mr. Williams, that the Road Commissioner for No. 6 Division be authorised to gravel the west side of Lock Street from Lansdowne Street to the river; also that the strip between the rails be filled.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Williams, seconded by Mr. Bell, that the ditches in Brownton be cleaned out by the Road Commissioner.—Carried.

At a previous meeting of the Council held at May's Schoolhouse on 18th October, after the British Red Cross meeting, the following applications were received for the position of tax collector for the year 1917:

Alex. Gordon—salary $200.
F. E. Wilson—salary $140.
Norman Moncrief—salary $200.

The Council unanimously appointed Norman Moncrief, the tax collector for 1916, at a salary of $190 for the present year.

Italians Retreat In Good Order

SEVEN MILES IS THE LIMIT

Notwithstanding the fact that the Ontario Motor Vehicles Act provides for a speed limit of twenty miles an hour on country roads, any motorist who travels faster than seven miles an hour is liable at any time to be caught breaking the law, according to a judgment handed down at Osgoode Hall by Mr. Justice Lennox. The appeal arose from a judgment of the County Court Judge of the County of Hastings, who dismissed an action brought by a farmer in that county, a man by the name of Bradshaw, against a motorist, named Conlin, to recover damages for injuries he sustained when the motorist ran into his team on a country road.

He based his claim for damages on Section 16 of the Act, which states that a "motorist shall not drive at more than seven miles an hour when approaching within 100 yards of a team of horses."

The lower court dismissed the action, the judge interpreting the section to mean that if a man "knows he is approaching a team of horses" he should not drive more than seven miles per hour. As the motorist by reason of the crooks and turnings in the road, was unaware that he was approaching the team, the judge held he could not reasonably have been expected to "slow down."

In granting an order for a new trial, Mr. Justice Lennox states that it is merely a question of law, and not of evidence. The law states that the motorist must slow down to seven miles an hour, and makes no provision for whether or not he knows there is a team ahead. The only safe way when driving on a winding or a dark road is to keep within the seven-mile limit at all times.

Mr. Justice Meredith dissented from this ruling, but his objection was overruled by Chief Justice Meredith. The defendant was ordered to pay the costs of the first action, and of the appeal.

May Maintain The Patriotic Fund By Government Tax

Ottawa. — A meeting of representatives of the Patriotic Fund, the Great War Veterans' Association, and the Dominion Cabinet considered the advisability of the Government raising money for the carrying on of the fund by taxation. The headquarters executive of the G.W.V.A. of Toronto favored the government taking over the fund and increasing the allowance to the dependents of soldiers of all ranks.

ENTERTAINMENT HELD IN ST. GEORGE'S SCHOOL ROOM

A Very Interesting Programme Was Provided--Young People Were in Charge

A very pleasing entertainment took place last evening at the school-room of St. George's Anglican Church, South Peterborough:

The affair was under the auspices of the Young People of the Church, or, in other words, they undertook the whole of the active management, the adult members only appearing as spectators or in some of the numbers on the "bill."

The school room was crowded. If the manageemnt had possessed S. R. O. boards they would have been of no use; it was a case of "House Full."

The proceedings were commenced by a pianoforte solo by Mr. Turner, the indefatigable organist of St. George's Church, who was also the accompanist to the majority of the numbers. "The Song of Liberty," by eight girls, was well executed. In fact it may be veraciously said that all the numbers were well rendered and well received. Mr. J. Johns, as usual, was highly appreciated in his recitations. This gentleman's services are so much in demand that immediately he had finished at St. George's he had to make a hurried exit to fill an engagement at All Saints'. Mrs. Barnes won loud applause by her rendering of "Forward the Union Jack." Miss May Cole was at her best in her song "Queen of the Earth," and she and her sister, Rose, scored again in their duett "Come Back to Erin." As stated on a previous occasion, these two young ladies possess very sweet voices—soprano and contralto—and more will be heard of them in the near future. Mr. C. A. Spence, who is in charge of St. Alban's Mission at Brownson, was very happy in his rendering of one of Chevalier's famous coster songs, "Mrs. 'Enery 'Awkins." An encore being vociferously demanded, he responded by singing that old, well-known English song, "Simon the Cellarer," as well as "Nancy Lee."

Two humorous sketches were put on. One, entitled "A Literary Society," which was very amusing, because the members were anything but literary; the other being entitled "Wanted a Nurse," in which some comical situations were caused owing to a mix-up in the want ads. column of the local newspaper; the lady who wanted a nurse being represented as being desirous of going out as a nurse.

Nor must the instrumental part be omitted. With Mr. C. Spence at the piano, Miss Spence at the violin, and Mr. Farr with the violincello, a very charming trio was put up. Space will not admit of a detailed description of the other numbers, suffice it to say they were all acceptable, judging from the rounds of applause.

At the intermission Mr. Spence drew the attention of the audience to the Basket Social to be held this evening at the Orange Hall, May's Corners, for the benefit of the Building Fund for St. Alban's Mission Church.

In between the various numbers the Rev. J. Price, Retcor, told some amusing anecdotes or made some pithy remarks. Just before the National Anthem Mr. Holmes proposed a vote of thanks to those who had taken part in the programme, as also to those who had undertaken the management of the affair, saying that credit was due to the young people belonging to the Church. This was seconded by Mr. Frank Russell, who remarked on the creditable manner in which everything had been carried out, and expressed his pleasure at being present. The singing of the National Anthem, "God Save the King," brought the proceedings to a fitting close.

The young people taking part in the sketches, as afar as could be ascertained, were: Mrs. Barnes, the Misses May, Rose, and Margaret Cole, Mabel Scott, Isabel and Phyllis Turner, and Beatrice Ivory; Messrs. Arthur Reed, Clifford Soden, etc., etc., cum multis aliis, quae nunc perscribere longum est.—F. R.

Want Parent As Candidate

(Special too the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

OTTAWA, Ont., Oct. 31. — Strong pressure is being brought to bear by an important and influential Ottawa Liberal element to have Hon. S. N. Parent run as a French Canadian Laurier candidate in the capital at the coming election. A petition already has been presented to Mr. Parent asking him to stand. Already there are three Liberal aspirants for the French Canadian nomination in Ottawa — Auguste Lemieux, K.C., Alphonse Provost, wholesale grocer, and Horace Chevrier, barrister. Each has his coterie of supporters. Hon. S. W. Parent was formerly Premier of the Province of Quebec, and for several years mayor of Quebec City. He also held the position of chairman of the National Transcontinental Commission under the late Laurier Goernment. He has a very large circle of friends both in upper and lower town and would undoubtedly be a strong candidate. The Liberal convention date has not yet been set. Meanwhile there is a strong agitation in favour of the holding of a real union convention in distinction to the Conservative party convention held last Friday night at which Messrs. Fripp and Chabot were re-nominated.

There were no casualties and no damage was caused.

Win-the-War Speakers, etc.

"that there should be people who say that if it had been foreseen that it would have involved so much that Canada would not have taken part." The great republic to the south of us did not think at first that the war concerned them. They tried to escape the obligation, to escape the pain and suffering, but the time came, and I thank heaven that it did come, when the soul of the United States saw that in a crisis like the present that nation could not stand aside. They saw that it was necessary that they, too, should come into the fray and share the burden of supporting civilization, liberty and free institutions."

Fighting For Home.

"Our Canadian boys," remarked the speaker, "are fighting for every town and village in Canada. If the war ever were lost, life would not be worth living. The world would not be a fit place for us to live were we to be trodden under the brutish heel of Prussian autocracy of Prussia."

Mr. Gould pointed out that Canada had sent 350,000 men overseas and could not desert them now, leaving them to look across the ocean watching in vain for the help that never came. They must be backed up to the end. "This end is not so far away but trat we can see it clearly," said the speaker. There may have been an allied disaster in Italy, but Germany can never win the war in Italy any more than Germany can win the war in Serbia or in Russia. As long as the British lion and the French cock and the American eagle stand together Germany cannot and shall not win."

OUR RESPONSIBILITIES.

It was necessary to get away from generalities. It was necessary to count the men that could be sent to increase the production of food and munitions and to look at the financial end as well. And, too, it was necessary to look at the political life, and see that Canada had a government able and determined to see that Canada does all that she ought to do and can do.

Mr. Gould passed on to declare his sincere belief in conscription. Voluntary enlistment was through and the time had passed to ask men to come forward voluntarily. He was convinced that the selective draft was the only way in which Canada could supply reinforcements. And with conscription of other activities and of wealth, every one would have to pay in some way or other.

After discussing the financial situation and pointing out the necessity of Canadians of all stations in life supporting the new Liberty Loan, and lending to Canada the money which Canada needs to carry on the war, Mr. Gould passed to refer to the political situation.

BORDEN A CANADIAN.

"We have got to have a Government that represents our determination and see that it has support as long as the war lasts," said the speaker.

I had the great honour to have two conferences yesterday wi the Prime Minister of Canada," he continued, "and I wish every man and woman in Canada could have been present, and could have received the impression I did of the intense and serious determination of Premier Borden to keep Canada to the forefront in this struggle. I am as sure as I am standing on this platform that Sir Robert Borden is not a Conservative to-day, but a Canadian and nothing else, and that to-day there is not a Conservative Government at Ottawa but a Union Government.

In conclusion Mr. Gould pointed out impressively that the whole issue now was: "Are you for the war or do you want Canada to drop out?" It was necessary to leave aside all questions of personal ambition or desire for office, and to secure a supporter for the Union Government.

A MESSAGE TO WOMEN.

Mrs. L. A. Hamilton, the next speaker, said that her message was primarily to women. She understood that a Red Cross meeting was being held and many of the women of Peterborough had to be in attendance. She hoped that the ladies present would carry the message to those unable to attend.

The women of Canada had shown themselves loyal to the core, she said, and there was no question as to what Canadian women have done in connection with the war. In the last month or two a new responsibility had come to the women, at least to those most directly interested in the war by reason of their loved ones who had gone overseas. The women knew what it would mean to them if the war were lost and the Huns got into their country. Canada had always been an objective of the Germans, and would be an objective until Germany was brought to her knees. The war was a question of Canada's safety.

The little scrap of paper which enfranchised half a million women, did something more than give them the vote—it placed them in a position to make Canada safe or not. She appealed to the women to realize their responsibility. If they used their vote with a full sense of what it meant the future would be in their hands.

Speaking of the political situation, Mrs. Hamilton said that there was only one party now, the win-the-war party, which was the party of Union government. Now that such a party had been formed it was necessary as a means of winning the war to see that it was returned to power.

The speaker urged upon her hearers the necessity of providing machinery to bring out the vote and of reading the newspapers in order to be thoroughly acquainted with what was going on.

Col. McCullough.

Col. McCullough, of Hamilton, the next speaker, congratulated Mrs. Hamilton upon her address and endorsed her statement in regard to the influence of the votes of 500,000 women. The speaker referred to his impressions of the conference at Ottawa and to the development of a union spirit as evidenced by the fact that the deputation had been received by Sir Robert Borden and Mr. N. W. Rowell. The presence of the latter, until recently leader of the Opposition in Ontario, and now president of the Privy Council, was one of the stirring signs of the new order of things. What had taken place at Ottawa was a recurrence of what had happened at the time of Confederation when Sir John A. MacDonald and Hon. Geo. Brown had switched their personal and political animosity and had united for Canada's benefit. Then it was merely a political danger, but now there was more than that, there was a danger to Canada, a danger to civilization.

There was no use of talking about parties now. There was only one thing to do and that was to unite together in the same spirit as the deputation had seen in Ottawa. The women could do a great part, and one thing was certain, and that was that you could not buy a woman's vote.

In conclusion, Col. McCullough dealt with the object of his visit to Peterborough. He was here, he said, in order to encourage the spirit of unity so that the best elements in the community might get together and avoid political strife. We don't want to fight against one another when we have a foe to fight," said the speaker.

Mr. W. R. Morris read to the meeting the declaration of policy of the Win-the-War League, and on motion of Mr. J. A. Aylmer, the policy was adopted by the meeting, although it was noticeable that many in the audience did not vote.

In moving a vote of thanks to the speakers, Mr. Jas. Kendry said that he was prepared to support a union candidate, whether Liberal or Conservative. The motion was seconded by Mr. J. W. Worth, and was carried unanimously.

The platform of the Win-the-War League is as follows:

(1) The fullest possible participation by Canada in the war.

(2) The military service act of 1917 and its continued enforcement.

(3) The encouragement of shipbuilding and the training of crews.

(4) Conscription by taxation of wealth and especially of war profits.

(5) Regulation when practicable of prices of food and necessities.

(6) Prohibtion of the use of grain in the manufacture of alcoholic beverages.

(7) The curtailment of prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of luxuries.

(8) The mobilization, regulation and requisition, when necessary, by the government of industries, utilities, resources and of the personal services of men and women for adding to Canadian war effectievness.

(9) The promotion of Canadian unity and the elimination of party politics.

(10) The election of candidates pledged to support the Union government.

First Contingent May Get Furlough

If arrangements can be carried out without unduly interfering with military organization and efficiency at the front, the three thousand or so Canadians who have survived the dangers and withstood the hardships of three years of war will be given a long furlough this winter, with permission to come back to Canada. The survivors of the First Canadian Division have won the right to a long rest and a chance to revisit their families at home. The government fully recognizes this, and is sympathetically considering the proposal. It is understood that the Imperial authorities and Sir Arthur Currie have been communicated with in regard to it. A similar long furlough at home is to be given this winter to the heroic remnant of Britain's first army, which fought from Mons to the Marne.

ANNUAL MEETING OF MEMBERS OF IMMACULATE CONCEPTION CHURCH

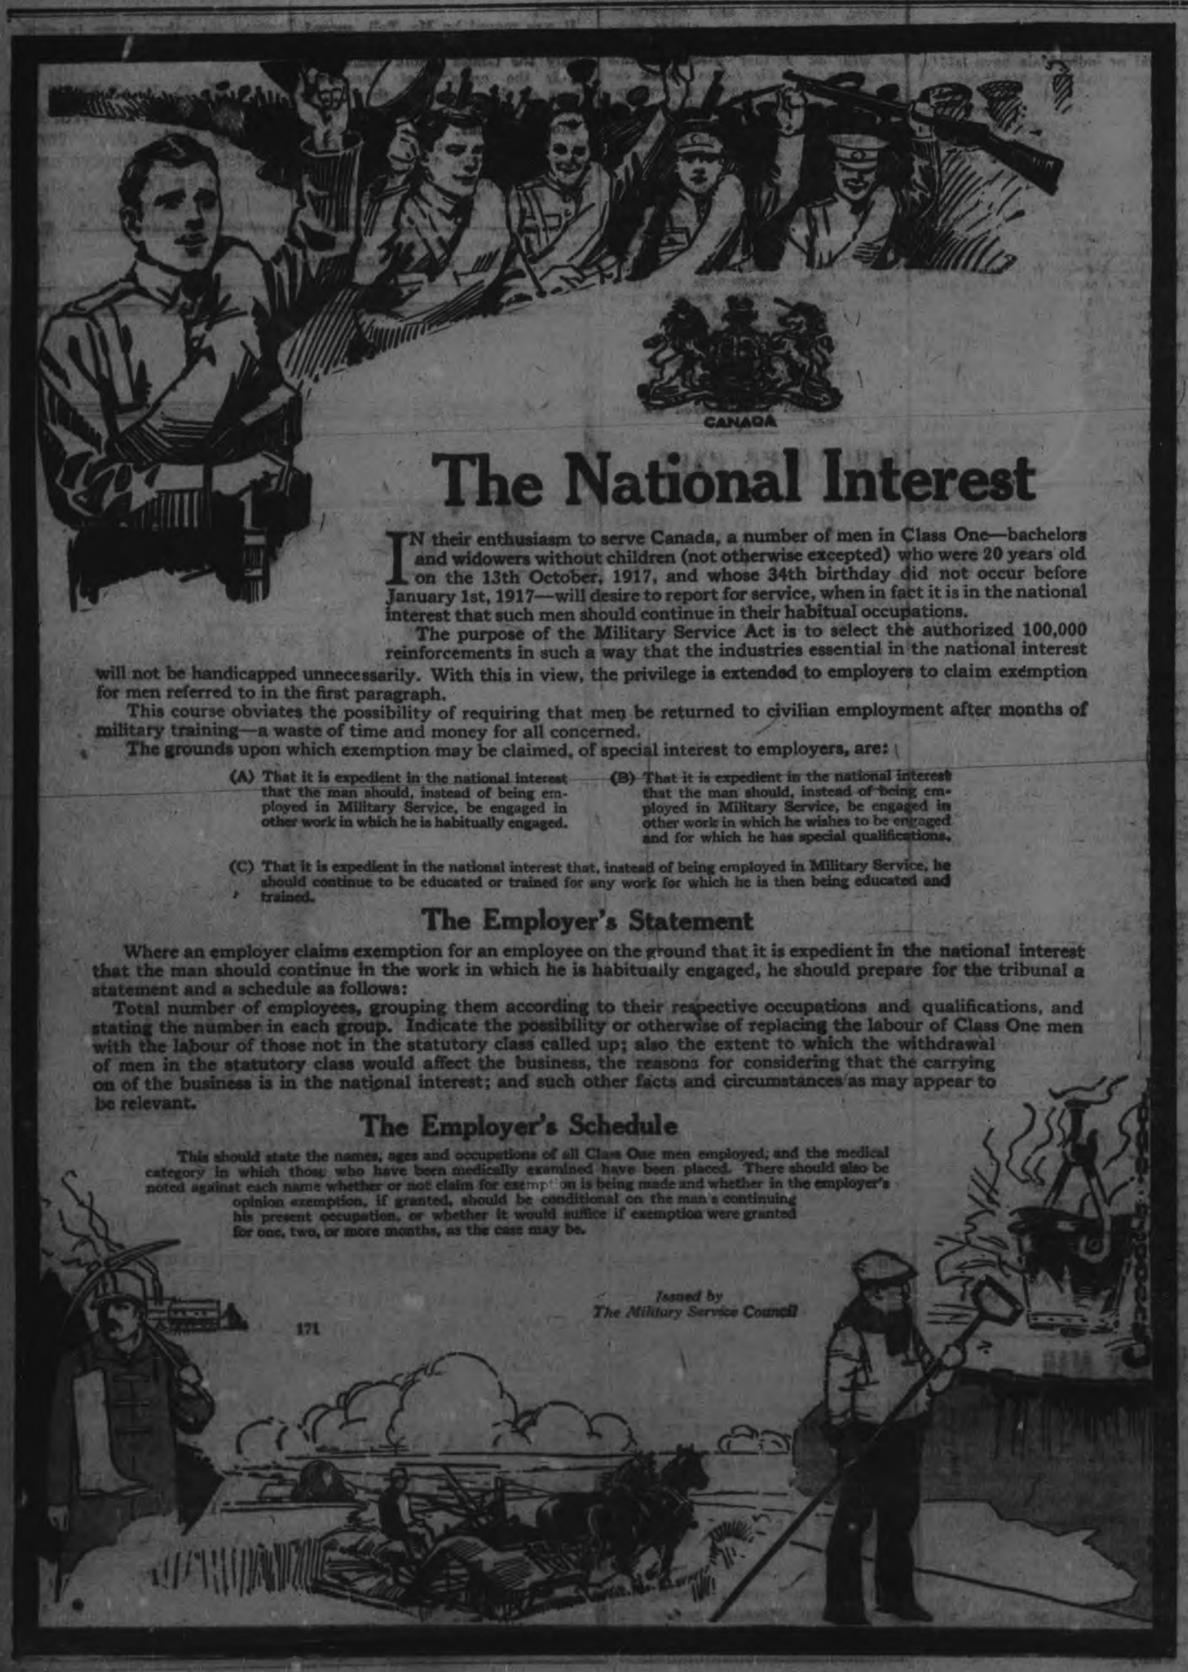
Mysterious Fire Does Great Damage

Canadian Press Despatch:

BALTIMORE, Oct. 31. —Four British sailors are missing and believed lost, and five million dollars damage done, when a British steamer just arrived, and two big Baltimore and Ohio piers were destroyed by a mysterious fire starting last night, and finally extinguished at three o'clock this morning.



The National Interest

IN their enthusiasm to serve Canada, a number of men in Class One—bachelors and widowers without children (not otherwise excepted) who were 20 years old on the 13th October, 1917, and whose 34th birthday did not occur before January 1st, 1917—will desire to report for service, when in fact it is in the national interest that such men should continue in their habitual occupations.

The purpose of the Military Service Act is to select the authorized 100,000 reinforcements in such a way that the industries essential in the national interest will not be handicapped unnecessarily. With this in view, the privilege is extended to employers to claim exemption for men referred to in the first paragraph.

This course obviates the possibility of requiring that men be returned to civilian employment after months of military training—a waste of time and money for all concerned.

The grounds upon which exemption may be claimed, of special interest to employers, are:

(A) That it is expedient in the national interest that the man should, instead of being employed in Military Service, be engaged in other work in which he is habitually engaged.

(B) That it is expedient in the national interest that the man should, instead of being employed in Military Service, be engaged in other work in which he wishes to be engaged and for which he has special qualifications.

(C) That it is expedient in the national interest that, instead of being employed in Military Service, he should continue to be educated or trained for any work for which he is then being educated and trained.

The Employer's Statement

Where an employer claims exemption for an employee on the ground that it is expedient in the national interest that the man should continue in the work in which he is habitually engaged, he should prepare for the tribunal a statement and a schedule as follows:

Total number of employees, grouping them according to their respective occupations and qualifications, and stating the number in each group. Indicate the possibility or otherwise of replacing the labour of Class One men with the labour of those not in the statutory class called up; also the extent to which the withdrawal of men in the statutory class would affect the business, the reasons for considering that the carrying on of the business is in the national interest; and such other facts and circumstances as may appear to be relevant.

The Employer's Schedule

This should state the names, ages and occupations of all Class One men employed, and the medical category in which those who have been medically examined have been placed. There should also be noted against each name whether or not claim for exemption is being made and whether in the employer's opinion exemption, if granted, should be conditional on the man's continuing his present occupation, or whether it would suffice if exemption were granted for one, two, or more months, as the case may be.

The "Masque Of Life"--What It Is

The Most Spectacular and Romantic Picture Ever Shown in Peterboro' —Read the Story

The Empire Theatre is to be congratulated on its enterprise in bringing such high class pictures as will appear in that theatre during the next month.

For Friday and Saturday "The Masque of Life" and "Gloria's Romance," with Billie Burke, will be given. The admission in the evenings is to be 25c., but for the afternoons only 10c.

Making as big a picture as "The Masque of Life" usually has its cost in death as well as money. Not only did it take seven months of strenuous directing to complete the spectacular offering, which is to be shown at the Empire Theatre Friday and Saturday, but twelve lives were lost in it, three of them were human, three horses and four full-grown lines being burnt to death in the terrific fire which was one of many striking scenes. The story of "The Masque of Life" is woven around Evelyn, a beautiful circus girl who meets a young prince; a romance ensues, and through the death of the youth's father and his ascension to the throne, his love is lost to him. With extraordinary cleverness the story is brought to a higher pitch as it advances. Starting simply as a love story and first getting the characters firmly set in the onlooker's mind, its plot progresses so tremendously that it is fairly staggering, and in one part of the film the suspense is so great that it has not been unusual for women to scream or faint during the performance. Certainly, no producer has ever before gone to such lengths to create excitement—the capture of a real live baby by Pete, an extremely clever chimpanzee actor, was one of the features in the scenario. According to the plot the chimpanzee was to take a baby up a 360 foot chimney—but of course they intended to use a dummy. The chimpanzee pursued by the crowds taking part in the film, ran up the chimney as per rehearsal, but he carried the real baby with him. The fact that the director tried to commit suicide after the end of this day's work—even though the baby's life was saved at awful peril, is an example of the energy put into the creation of this picture.

Starting with a real romance, it develops into a terrific tragedy; the moments of suspense ,when the heroine and monkey battle on the chimney top are really the most exciting thing ever screened. In sixteen scenes of pantomime—a play within the play—the entire ballet of the La Scala Opera House, Milan, create an allegory of such spectacular magnificence that it will not be forgotten. Dramatically intense throughout, the story often rises to superb heights of emotional acting, and every imaginable emotion is portrayed.

The finale, which shows a gigantic circus building on fire, has had no equal in technique. A tremendous building with a great domed roof, is seen blazing from the ground up, and a wonderful touch of realism is lent in the flashing electric signs which are shown as the flames reach them and destroy the connections, finally tumbling to the ground. The menagerie catches fire, and fifty lions in a great den are trapped. Actually the fire got beyond control, and towards the end there was no directing —the many camera men assigned to the making of the scene simply kept on with their work and from 7,000 feet of film which taken a few hundred feet of most gripping realism were the result. "The Masque of Life" is certainly the most unique production ever offered in America. It seems to be a combination of everything and the directors of it have certainly done miracles.

Sir Robert Falconer is Invested

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Ont., Oct. 31.—Sir Robert Falconer, President of the University of Toronto, returned from Ottawa this morning, where he was invested with the order of Knight Commander of St. Michael and St. George by the Duke of Devonshire. The President immediately plunged into the administration of the many university matters which had accumulated during his absence.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—This is the season when wild fowl seek warmer homes and feeding ground, and I have understood flocks of both geese and ducks have been going south. And when on the farm, in years gone by we have often seen geese going south, having been attracted by their cawing. And once, owing to the death of a brother,, on the south side of Rice Lake, many years ago, two of us were bringing boats from the south side to the north side, to take the friends over to the funeral of my brother, on the 29th of this month, (October), as I remember it, and going around the point of an island, about sun rise, I came suddenly on, or close to, a large flock of wild geese; they evidently had spent the night there for feed and rest.

But the strangest thing to me was a piece, taken from what was called the front rank on Migration of Birds. In it he says it had been my impression for years that migrating birds were always led by experienced veterans. Not long ago, however, I saw a published statement: There were always two separate flights south. First, the young went by themselves, the old following at a later time; all of which seems reasonable, for I well remember that the early arrivals from the north in years gone by were thin of feather and small of body. While as the season advanced came great flocks of full-plumed, plump bodied birds, wary and careful, which undoubtedly were the parents of those coming first.

This was often noticed by old hunters who never guessed the reason why. Is there anything more wonderful than such a gift of instinct, which enables a duck, not six months old, to start on a journey from Alaska or North Western Canada to the swamps of the Gulf Coast. With only companions of its own age and experience for company, to find its way, its resting places and feeding grounds, with ease. Yet they do it every year, and because it happens so often people think nothing of it.

Oh, the greatness of that God that rules over all; even the fowl of the air provided for.

Not long ago my partner in life and me, calling at a home where they had a fire-place, and they placing a very large piece of coal on a small fire, how very soon the room was so warm and comfortable. Oh the goodness, yes, and love of our Heavenly Father in thus providing for our wants, ages ago, and all ready to our hands now, and there appears to be a danger—we may take the gift and forget the Giver.

Yours, etc.,
J. H. TAYLOR.

"Diamond Hall"

349 George Street

Organization is Under Way for Big Campaign to Raise Peterboro's Share of $150,000,000

Kitchener League

The organization of this city and county for the raising of Peterborough's Victory Loan of $150,000,000 is nearing completion under the general direction of Mr. R. L. Warren, of Toronto, who has been assigned to this territory by the Department of Finance. An office has been opened at 174 Hunter street next to Lynch's drug store, and is being equipped for the campaign which officially opens on November 12th and will continue until November 30th. Desks the aldermen used to whittle in their mental ponderings have been recovered from the City Hall backshed, and after a general cleaning are more than adequate for the expected work of the greatest two weeks this country has perhaps ever faced. Everything will be made ready for smooth working. Mr. W. H. Bradburn is chairman of the local committee, and Mr. Felix Brownscombe secretary, both appointed by Sir Thomas White.

All the reeves and many of the township Councillors will be enlisted and the entire county will be raked from border to border giving every citizen an opportunity of securing a share of the Victory bonds. By Newspaper and billboard advertising the object of the campaign, its urgency at this time, and the responsibility of the individual, especially persons of means, will be sounded on every highway that even those who run may read—and respond. It is expected that there will be twenty team workers in the city working under captains who will visit the homes. Every person will have a chance to participate in this loan, which is needed for the prosecution of Canada's share in the war. Five million pieces of educational literature are being distributed from one end of the Dominion to the other, even to the farthest mail box, explaining the Victory Loan.

Mr. Warren has been placed at the disposal of the local committee and is very enthusiastic for the success of the loan in Peterborough. The allotment of this county and city has been determined and will be made public shortly.

It was said to-day that there may be a preliminary public meeting here to-morrow night, but the arrangements had not been definitely made this afternoon.

CHECK ON COLD STORAGE

All Such Products Cannot Be Sold Unless Plainly Marked.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30.—Special regulations for cold storage houses will be put into force by the food administration November 1st, when distribution of the most important foodstuffs goes under license.

Poultry, eggs, butter and fresh or frozen fish stored thirty days or more cannot be sold as fresh, and will not be permitted to go on sale unless marked with a placard "cold storage goods." All fresh meat, fresh meat products, fresh fish, game, poultry, eggs, and butter must be marked with the date on which they are placed in storage and their date of release. No warehouse will be permitted to store any foods tainted or diseased.

To check speculation the food administration will limit loans and advances by storage warehouse men to their patrons. Warehouses will be classified as public or private and those storing goods on their own account as well as for the public will be required to take out also dealers' licenses. All warehouses will be required to file schedules of their rates with the food administration.

PREVENTION OF BRIBERY.

All Necessary Steps Taken to Prevent Corruption Under Military Service Act.

OTTAWA, Oct. 31.—In setting up the machinery for the operation of the Military Service Act, special care has been taken to select only officials of the most trustworthy character. In the operation of the Act, attempts at bribery are always possible, in Canada no less than in other countries.

Attempt to bribe ay member of an exemption tribunal or medical board or a military representative, means a term of imprisonment of not less than one year and not more than five years. It will be very difficult for anyone so inclined to set aside the regulations of the Military Service Act by corruption.

Not all of the preparations made to guard against venality and unfairness in the operation of the Act can be made public, but it may be announced that attempts to bribe officials, in view of the checks and supervisions to be imposed, will be an exceedingly hazardous business.

Wonder if the Kaiser has ever noticed that a spirit-lamp flashes up brightly before it goes out finally.

CONTRACTS CALL FOR DOUBLE SOLE

Business in the American factories, equipped for producing army boots, has been given a boost by the scattering of the War Department order for 7,000,000 pairs, the largest order ever placed for army boots. New England firms have fared well, and with the price of $4.60 a pair, considerable money should be divided in the shoe-making centres.

With so much leather going into army boots and the contract calling for a double sole, the field for fibre soles on boots for the civilian use should be increased. The fibre leather soles undoubtedly will surprise some who, heretofore, have not recognized the material as a proper part of a pair of boots.

APPLY AT ONCE FOR CEREAL LICENSE.

Ottawa. — Announcement has been made by Hon. W. J. Hanna, Food Controller, that manufacturers of package cereals affected by the order in council of October 19th, who desire licenses for the sale of such products should make written application at once to the office of the Food Controller. Each application should contain a full statement of the reasons advanced in support of such application.

ROBBERS SCORN TO TAKE MERE CASH BUT STEAL HAMS.

Aurora, Ill. — Passing up cash registers for hams and sides of bacon, automobile robbers last night brought home to Kendall county farming folk the cry for food. Racing from one village to another, the robbers footed half a dozen country stores. This morning an abandoned truck was found on the roadside. The grocers reported their stocks depleted but no cash missing.

THERE IS BRISK DEMAND FOR WHEAT

Price Changes Were Again on a Narrow Range—The Cattle Market

There is a good demand for wheat, oats, and barley, but the difficulty in the way of a prompt delivery is the present car shortage. Local dealers in some cases have had to wait three weeks or a month for cars for short haulage. The railway companies are running all their cars through to the bay ports. Price changes were again on a narrow range.

Manitoba wheat—No. 1 northern, $2.23 1-2; No. 2 northern, $2.20 1-2, store; No. 3, $2.17 1-2; No. 4, $2.09 1-2 including 2 1-2 cent tax, in store Fort William.

Manitoba oats—No. 2, 66 7-8; No. 3, 64 1-8; extra No. 1 feed, 63 7-8; No. 1 feed, 62 5-8, in store, Fort William.

Armies Eat Five And A Half Billion Dollars Worth Of Food A Year

Home Gardeners Are Urged to Prepare the Soil Now For Next Year's Crop—The Above Figures Do Not Include the Feeding of Several Million Sea Fighters.

GREATER PRODUCTION

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1.—"The 38,100,000 land fighting men of the warring nations eat five billion, five hundred million dollars worth of food a year. They produce none at all."

These figures were cited to the United Press to-day by Judge Charles Lathrop Pack, of the National Emergency Food Garden Commission, to back up his plea that America's army of home gardeners begin now to prepare the soil for next spring's crop.

"That is $15,200,000 worth of food consumed by the land forces of the belligerents every twenty-four hours," said Judge Pack. "It does not include the cost of feeding the several million sea fighters.

"These 38,100,000 men and their brothers on the sea have been taken from food producing and distributing labours principally.

Someone must replace them. That puts a very serious problem up to America's army of city farmers.

"They did splendid work last spring, raising food worth $350,000,000. The coming year they can double that production and still leave a great hole in the world's market basket, even with all other crops thrown in.

"Now is the logical time to prepare the soil for next spring's garden Don't let an inch of it go to waste. We need every single vegetable you can raise.

"Remember that a home garden helps solve many international problems. It relieves the transportation battle by delivering your table supplies f.o.b., the kitchen door, free.

"Every vegetable you raise and eat releases that much wheat, meat, fat and sugar for export to our starving allies.

"Remember also that the Kaiser has two million prisoners of war tilling the soil for his next spring's gardens. If you don't want your son, your father, your brother or sweetheart to join the Kaiser's army of war garden prisoners, prepare now for a war garden in your own back yard and thus help the Allies quickly to win the fight and forever crush the Prussian demon."

CATTLE MARKETS.

Union Stock Yards.—Receipts 157 cars, with 1,236 cattle, 154 calves, 2,836 hogs, and 1,296 sheep and lambs.

There was a better tone to the market all around yeserday. Good active demand, and prices firm to 10c or 15c higher for the good butcher steers and heifers. For a week or more the demand for good butcher was decidedly slow and prices weak. To-day the change was for good butchers, and as there were not too many offering, prices stiffened.

Election Date Officially Set For December 17th

Canadian Press Despatch:

OTTAWA, Nov. 1.— The Dominion election is officially set for Dec. 17th.

CANADA

OBEY THE LAW!

Report at once for Service or Claim Exemption

Under the Military Service Act, all men in Class One are soldiers today, absent with leave and without pay. Failure to obey the law amounts to DESERTION and can be punished as such.

Class One includes bachelors and widowers without children (not otherwise excepted) who were 20 years old on the 13th October, 1917, and whose 34th birthday did not occur before January 1st, 1917.

DO IT TODAY!

The rush in the last few days may be such that in the hurry and stress a number of men may fail to comply with the requirements under the Act. That will not be recognized as an excuse, as every man is being given ample time to report for service, or claim exemption.

GO TO YOUR POST OFFICE TODAY and ask for a form for reporting for service or for claiming exemption. Understand, it is a matter of LAW that all the men in Class One must report for service or claim exemption not later than November 10th, 1917.

Issued by the Military Service Council.

Austrian Capital Shows Many Indications Of The Effects Of War

Food is Very Scarce and Prices Are Prohibitive—Some of the Food Problems—Clothing is Very Dear—The Rich Spend Freely.

THE "SIMPLE LIFE"

The Austrian capital has always had the reputation of being one of the gayest and most light-hearted cities in Europe, and it has not entirely changed its character even now, but to the keen observer there are many curious and interesting differences which show how deeply the stupendous war has affected it, writes a correspondent of The Manchester Guardian.

The quesion which touches the whole population, from the highest to the lowest, most early is that of the food supply. The state of semi-starvation at which the poorer classes have now arrived has come on so gradually, and has been marked by such distinct stages, that they have almost come to regard it as natural, and have ceased to wonder at it. They suffer most severely from lack of fat in every form. Almost every afternoon, outside the large markets, from four o'clock onwards, one can see crowds, consisting chiefly of women and children, but with elderly men and boys, too, gathering round the entrances; by about ten o'clock in the evening they may be counted by hundreds. These people lie, sit, or stand out on the pavement the whole night, waiting for the lard or bacon which is sold at seven or eight next morning. Each person receives six dekagram (about an eighth of a pound), and, as a rule, the supply is so limited that only the first-comers get any; those who only take up their places after nine in the evening come too late.

Some Food Problems.

The bread with which the people are supplied has gone through many stages. There was a time when it was made almost entirely of maize flour; then the maize gave out, and barley was chiefly used; since April of this year it has consisted chiefly of bran, horse chestnuts, and dried beans, with a small percentage of musty flour. Each person gets 18 dekagram (about 6 ounces), and the control is very strict. This amount is quite insufficient for the working classes, since they have nothing else to take its place; potatoes were hardly ever to be seen; dried peas, beans, lentils, rice, and sago have long since disappeared from general consumption; vegetables are scarce and enormously dear, and meat is only to be obtained at high prices and after long waiting. The principal articles of food for the people are a coarse kind of sausage, lights, horse-flesh, such odds and ends of vegetables as they can manage to get hold of, and their portion of bread and flour or oatmeal. Coffee is no longer sold. One can only get the "war mixture," which consists of burnt barley, sugar, and a little inferior coffee or chicory. For real coffee, which can sometimes be got irregularly, people pay as much as 80 kronen (about £3 10s.) a kilogram (2 pounds). Milk is very scarce, and kept chiefly for children and sick persons; butter is strictly rationed—six dekagram a week for each person; eggs are almost unobtainable and one gladly gives 7d. for one; and ham has disappeared from view since before Easter. Tea costs anything from 40 to 80 kronen a kilogram (a crown is about 10d.), and one can only get 5 dekagram at a time. Boiled sweets, which to some extent take the place of sugar, are sold in small quantities once or twice a week, and people stand in long queues several hours to obtain them.

SALMON NEARLY $5 A CAN.

For a tin of salmon which I saw here the other day marked at 10 1-2 d. one pays 24 kronen (exactly £1), wine and beer are made only in small quantities and have become very dear. At the restaurants a very small quantity of beer is sold once a day, either for dinner or supper. As soon as the "Piccolo" (the small boy who brings the drinks and clears the tables) makes his appearance there is a general rush for the coveted refreshments; he is relieved of most of his burden before he can reach the end of the room; the unscrupulous thirsty drink off their portions at one draught, hide the glasses under the table, and demand a second. I have seen as many as five glasses stowed away under a table. Of course liberal tips play an important part in impairing the Piccolo's memory.

Business, politics, even the war have almost ceased to be discussed much in public; the great and burning topic in the trams, in the cafes, in the streets, everywhere where people come together, is the price of food which shops still have supplies of this or that, which restaurants give the largest portions, when and where soap, candles, chocolate, petroleum or other much-coveted articles can be obtained.

CLOTHING IS VERY DEAR.

Every kind of clothing has become enormously dear and not only clothing but all the little necessaries of daily life in connection with clothes. Elastic containing real India-rubber, is almost unobtainable—for the last piece I bought I paid at the rate of 8s. a metre: a pair of shoelaces costs a shilling, a reel of sewing cotton about the same; all linen goods are so dear that two ladies of my acquaintance have been wearing their own dining-room curtains made up into costumes. They were of good Liberty linen, a little faded by the sun, but after being dyed they were as good as new and cost less than half the price now asked for linen of very inferior quality. Ladies can only buy one pair of stockings at a time; woollen dress materials cost anything from £1 to £4 a metre; cottons are somewhat cheaper, but the supply is very limited. For men's clothes there are, as yet, no cards as in Germany, but it is difficult to obtain a sufficient supply of anything. Most of the children of the working classes are wearing wooden sandals, for the soling of a pair of shoes costs about £1, and genuine leather can only be obtained from the military authorities.

THE RICH SPEND FREELY.

In spite of the high prices, there never was greater luxury in dress in Vienna than during the last two years. Many fortunes have been made, so that the wives and daughters of these nouveaux riches are resplendent in garments of finished elegance, furs, jewels, dainty shoes and stockings, and costly laces; many of them literally carry a fortune about on their persons. Although soap is so expensive and difficult to get there were neved so many white toilettes to be seen as last summer; women, girls and children even of the simpler classes were exquisitely dressed, mostly in spotless white. There are several reasons given for this intensified luxury in dress; one is that the taxes after the war will be so heavy that the people feel it would be of no use to try and save; money in any form would be taken from them, so they prefer to invest it now in something which will remain in their possession also, the prices rise so rapidly that everyone is anxious to secure all he can before things become quite unattainable. Another reason is that many persons earn more now than they have ever done before. It is more difficult to travel. France, that country so dear to the hearts of most well-to-do Austrians, is closed to them (although French fashions manage to find their way to Vienna). Therefore money flows freely inside the country.

At the begining of the war there was a great movement in favour of the "simple life"; people resolved to attend theatres and concerts less, and to content themselves with domestic entertainments. But Vienna is accustomed to amusing itself, and the cry was soon raised, "What is to become of actors and artists generally if there are fewer amusements?" This cry met with a steady response, and with a sigh of relief the city went back to its old habits. The theatres were crowded, concerts as well attended as ever; only the music halls suffered considerably, since they could get few foreign attractions. Mr. Bernard Shaw's plays are still given at the Burg Theatre, or were till the present director was appointed, and "Milestones" and "Charley's Aunt" still enjoy great popularity. Artists in general hold themselves aloof from war questions, and take the standpoint that art is international. There are, however, some exceptions, such as the popular director, Felix Weingartner. This gentleman has distinguished himself by violent anti-British proclivities, and he is one of the nine-three "intellectuals" who have signed a compact to give no concerts either in England or America till at least five years after the war.

Men in Training

Fighting isn't the only duty of a soldier, and exposure to bullets is not as serious as exposure to all kinds of weather and dampness.

Rheumatic aches, sore and stiff muscles, strains and sprains, chilblains and neuralgia, all are enemies of the soldier, and the relief for all these pains and aches is Sloan's Liniment. Clean and convenient to carry or use; does not stain, and penetrates without rubbing.

"THE PAINTED WOMAN"

By FREDERIC ARNOLD KUMMER

"Then mayhap you did. By my soul I'd not trust you. Were it not that you will bring a good round sum in the slave market, I'd string you up along with your lover. By Saint Bartholomew, I've half a mind to do it anyway!"

"Not so fast, One Eye," the Portugee said softly. "She never killed him. Bull Ormiston wasn't the sort to be done for by a woman."

"What does it matter to you?" Tench demanded, wheeling upon his companion.

"This Master Tench. I want the woman for myself."

"A fool you always were, Portugee, when there's a woman in the wind. I say you'll not have her."

"By God, I will!"

"No. Either she hangs, or we sell her in the slave market, and divide the money between us. It's the rules of the brotherhood, as well you know."

A chorus of approval from the others greeted his words.

"Devil take the rules," cried the Portugee. "I want the wench, and I mean to have her."

"That you shall not, by Heaven!"

"And who will stop me?"

"I will you Portugal dog!" Tench clapped his hand significantly to the hilt of his sword.

"Carramba! You are not our captain."

"No more are you."

"Let the One Eye lead us, I say," cried Long Rodgers, ranging himself alongside Tench.

"I'm wiz ze Portugee!" exclaimed De Rocheville, his Latin blood asserting itself.

For a moment the two parties stood confronting each other, hand on sword.

"We'll soon see which is the better man," cried Tench, whipping out his cutlass.

The Portugee followed suit.

"Come on, then, by all the saints," he shouted. In an instant the ring of steel on steel resounded throughout the garden.

Suddenly Graves, who had been watching the two with an air of keen dissatisfaction, stepped between them, and with his cutlass struck up their blades.

"Have done," he said. "There's naught to shed blood about."

"Out of the way!" The Portugee drew back, his eyes glittering.

"Let the dice decide," went on Graves, in his stolid way.

"The dice?" exclaimed Tench. "What mean you?"

"Ay! Whoever wins, let him take the Firebrand's place. So it was done when Mansfield died, and Dutch Peter." He turned to the others. "What say you, Portugee?"

"I'm ready enough, but I want the girl."

"Let her go to the winner—eh, One Eye?"

"So be it. Who has the dice?"

"Here." Long Rodgers plunged his hand into a yawning pocket, and drew forth a small leather cup, then cast the dice upon the table.

"How many throws?" inquired the Portugee, as the others crowded about.

"Three—two to win." Tench picked up the dice and began to rattle them about in the box. "Shall I start Portugee?"

"It's all one to me."

"Make your throws, gentlemen," cried Long Rodgers, casting an eye toward their captives to see that they were safe. "Two out of three. The winner to lead us and take the wench. Is it so understood?"

The contestants gave quick assent, and the Portugee, after a prodigous rattling of the dice in the cup, flung them upon the table.

"Fourteen! Two sixes and the deuce!" announced Long Rodgers.

De Rocheville clapped his companion on the back.

"Bonne fortune, mon ami!" he cried.

"Stow your parleyvoos, Frenchy," growled Tench, dropping his dice into the box. "Isn't English good enough for you?" He cast the bits of ivory carelessly upon the table. "A six and two treys. The devil's at your elbow, Portugee. Shall I follow?"

The latter nodded. Once again Tench made his throw.

"Nine," Long Rodgers cried. "Two fours and the ace."

"The luck's against you, One Eye," said Graves, eying the pair across the table with a disapproving glance. It went sorely against the grain to see an Englishman beaten by a Portuguese renegade.

"Wait, Buzzard. I've seen worse throws win." Tench leaned over, his eyes fixed upon the dice as his opponent allowed them to trickle slowly from the box.

"I've got you, old fox," the Portugee laughed, as the ivory cubes rolled over and over. A six, trembling on edge, finally resolved itself into a deuce. He gave a grunt of annoyance.

"Eight!" shouted Graves and Long Rodgers in a breath. "Got him, One Eye."

The Portugee again rattled the dice in the box. The throws were now even, a win for each. For a long time he shook the leathern cup, and mumbling inaudible exhortations to his patron saint. Then at last, he flung the dice upon the table.

"Seven! Seven to beat!" Long Rodgers' voice was shrill with excitement. "Shake well, One Eye."

"Ay—seven to beat," laughed the latter, as with scarce a moment's hesitation he emptied the dice from the box.

"Eleven! Sapristi!" ejaculated De Rocheville, starting back.

"He wins! The One Eye wins!" Long Rodgers extended his gnarled and hairy fist across the table. "My hand, captain." They shook with vast gravity.

Portuguese Joe swept the dice from the table with a cry of disappointment.

"Nombre de Dios!" he exclaimed, and turning his back, stalked moodily to the other side of the garden. Ramona was lost to him. He fumed in helpless rage.

So absorbed were the buccaneers in the contest of the dice, that they failed to observe a singular and in some respects sinister incident that took place almost within reach of their hands.

During the progress of the game, so pregnant with meaning for her and her future, Ramona stood near the fountain, not far from the corner of the house, her hands clasped upon her heart, her lips moving incessantly as she prayed for help in this supreme emergency. She well knew that however the fates might jog the elbows of the eager men about the table, it could have but small effect upon her broken fortunes. On the one hand lay a life of horror in the clutches of the Portugee; on the other a sale in the slave market to she knew not what bitter fate. For herself death seemed a pleasing prospect—her prayers were not for her own salvation, since that seemed no longer a possibility, but for the safety of the man she loved. It seemed to her that she was in some way directly responsible for the danger that had overtaken him. If she had only permitted him to go, when he had wished to go. Doubtless he would have been far down the hillside, before Tench and his companions had arrived. But she had persuaded him to stay and now it appeared that his life was to pay the forfeit. Throughout all her prayers ran an undercurrent of hope that in some way she might be given a chance to remedy that which she had done.

A fluttering touch upon her elbow roused her to quick attention. She looked down, wondering who had been able to approach her so silently. At her side crouched the hunchback, hidden by the bushes that grew about the base of the fountain. He had crawled to her from around the corner of the house. She gave a gasp of astonishment, having supposed the boy far away in flight.

"Mistress!" he whispered, and then seeing that he had secured her attention, he drew an object from the folds of his shirt and without further words pressed it into her hands.

It was his knife, sharp and evil looking. About its bone handle still clung evidences of the purpose to which it had so recently been put, but Ramona observed nothing of this. She hid the weapon beneath her cloak, while the hunchback crept noiselessly away through the bushes. What use she could make of it did not at once appear to her. With burning eyes she watched the backs of her captors as they bent over the table.

And now the matter had been decided. She was not at least to become the property of the Portugee. That Tench would send her to the slave market she did not in the least doubt. The old man had too little love for women to desire her for himself. "To work," she suddenly heard him cry. "Already the morning is half gone."

Suddenly the Portugee turned, a glinting rage in his eyes.

"What are you going to do with the woman, One Eye?" he inquired, in a silken voice.

"Hell's fire! Are you still thinking of the jade?"

"Carramba! Yes."

"Well, Portugee, now that she belongs to me, I've decided to sell her in the slave market."

"You'll not do that, One Eye."

"By Heaven, why not? She's mine, isn't she? I'd sell my soul, could I get the worth of it."

"Then would you be lucky if you got so much as a brass farthing," retorted the Portugee, sweeping the gracious form of the girl with a kindling eye. "See the figure of her—the spirit. A woman to gladden the heart of any man."

"She'll fetch a score of good golden doubloons. I'd never have the money," observed Tench dryly.

"A score of doubloons, you say." The Portugee was all excitement. "A score of doubloons!" He drew a handful of gold pieces from his pocket and began to count them down upon the table. "By the Lord, you shall have your price. Sell the wench to me. There is the money." He indicated the pile of broad gold pieces with a wave of his hand.

"She might fetch more," said Tench with a crafty look.

Long Rodgers came up to the table and pushed the doubloons toward his chief.

"For God's sake, One Eye," he said "let the Portugee have the woman, and be done with it. I've no mind to waste the day here. A score of doubloons is a fair round sum. Take it, and let's be off."

Tench swept the pieces of gold into his pocket.

"Take her, then, you fool," he growled. "But not aboard ship, Master Portugee. I'll have no woman on board my craft, with their jealousies and their deviltries and you can lay to that. If you keep the woman you keep her ashore."

The Portugee turned to Ramona with a smile of exultation. The money was a matter of small moment to him. He was very well satisfied with his bargain.

"Ashore it is then," he laughed, then came toward the shrinking girl. "Now, my sweet jewel," he said, "you belong to me."

She Thought Sure Her Time Had Come

Mrs. Baker Confined in Bed For Weeks—Her Recovery With Tanlac Wonderful

"Honestly, I have gained fifteen pounds and my neighbors as well as myself, are amazed at the change Tanlac has made in me," said Mrs. Emma Baker, of 39 Mariposa avenue, Toronto. Mrs. Baker is the wife of Fred Baker, a valued employee of the Steel Radiator Company. Continuing her statement, Mrs. Baker said:

"I had been going down in health for more than a year, losing weight, and steadily getting weaker all the time. My troubles were mainly stomach disorders and nervousness, and about six weeks ago I took a very sudden turn for the worse. At last I got down in bed and thought sure my time had come. I was so sick that I could not retain a thing on my stomach and was so weak I could hardly raise my hand. I was so nervous that the least noise would startle me and I could not get any sleep or rest at all scarcely. Many a night I would lie awake and toss and roll until day. I fell off until I weighed only a hundred and twelve pounds, and when I began taking Tanlac I had been confined to my bed for three weeks.

"Mr. Baker has taken Tanlac with wonderful results but I never thought of it being good for me until I tried other things and kept getting worse. Then I bought a bottle of Tanlac, and pretty soon I began to feel better. So it wasn't long until I was able to get out of bed and realized that I was gaining in weight. My appetite is fine now and my stomach never troubles me at all. My nerves are calm and steady and I sleep all night long every night. I now weigh one hundred and twenty seven pounds, have gained fifteen pounds, and have hardly finished my second bottle of Tanlac yet. I am now feeling stronger and better than I have since my troubles began—can do all my work without the least inconvenience—and consider it wonderful the way Tanlac has built me up. Mr. Baker and I both think Tanlac the greatest medicine in the world, and we certainly have good reasons for thinking so."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by the Warne Drug Company, Ltd., and in Havelock by A. C. Denike.

FORMER MILLBROOK RESIDENT DECEASED

Late Miss Ida Brown Former Taught School in Millbrook

MILLBROOK, Oct. 31.—Mr. G. A. Duncan received a telegram from Buffalo on Monday stating that Miss Ida Brown had died that morning. The deceased lady was born in Millbrook, and resided here until a few years ago, when, with her mother, she went to Buffalo to keep house for her brothers William and George, was most highly respected. She had an excellent contralto voice, and sang in the choir of St. Thomas Church for several years.

On Sunday evening last Rev. W. H. Higgs, of the Methodist Church, preached an interesting sermon to the Senior and Junior Epworth Leagues. The Leagues were well represented, and marched up from the basement in a body. Rev. Mr. Higgs spoke of the great work the Leagues are doing.

PERSONALS.

Mr. Hogue, Inspector of High Schools, was in town on Monday.

Mrs. John McCullough, of Newtonville, was a guest of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Mullen.

Rev. T. D. McCullough, of Port Hope, passed through town on Monday.

Dr. Lee will conduct anniversary services at Springville on Sunday next.

Messrs. John McBride, W. H. Bingham, J. Newton, H. Braithwaite, and Cliff Naltrass have left for a deer hunt.

Mr. Fred Pendry was a visitor to Peterborough on Friday.

Inspector O'Dell, of Cobourg, was in town last week.

Mrs. Morton, of Bethany, was a guest of Mrs. A. A. Smith last week.

A letter has been received from an old Millbrook boy, Gunner William (Bill) Hadden, in which he asks for the addresses of Millbrook boys in France. He said he had met Harry Page only since he went to France, and that was about five months ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell, of Gooderham, are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Mitchell.

RALLY SERVICE.

In spite of the rain on Monday night, a large number of Junior and Senior Leaguers and friends met in the school room of the church for the annual Rally service. The programme was very interesting, consisting of addresses by the President, Miss Stella Hetherington; 1st Vice-President, Mr. Irwin Hatherley; 2nd Vice-Presiden, Miss Alice Stewart; 3rd Vice-President, Miss Stella Pathlick; 4th Vice-President, Mr. Wilfred Elson, and a representative of the Junior League, Mr. Basil Richards. The pastor, Rev. W. H. Higgs led in prayer, and Miss Pearl Burnham gave a psalm recitation. Miss Eileen Higgs sang a solo, and Mrs. Johnston and Mrs. G. W. Sayles rendered a duet, "Speed Away," besides which the Junior Leaguers sang a chorus.

Mother and Children Had Awful Coughs

WERE CURED BY
DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP

Mrs. Arthur Appleyard, Novar, Ont., writes: "This past winter my children and I had awful colds and coughs which we got by being in drafts. I tried a number of different remedies for us, but got no relief. I thought I would try Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and I found it a most excellent and sure cure. It gave relief to the tickling in the throat, and stopped the cough, and with a few bottles we were all cured."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is a remedy that has been on the market for over twenty-five years, and we can recommend it as being without doubt, the best cure for coughs and colds that you can posibly procure.

There are a lot of imitations on the market, so when you ask for "Dr. Wood's" see that you get it. Put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25c and 50c; manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Stratagem

The Football Game at Westmoreland

By ESTHER VANDERVEER

It would be impossible to give a correct catalogue of the reasons why the male students of Westmoreland became antagonistic to co-eds pursuing the college course with them. Some pert little misses, tossing their heads, declared that it was because the girls wouldn't flirt; that they themselves had turned their backs upon sophomores who had more assurance than brains. Others averred that the presence of the women made the college a "hennery" instead of a field for "stags." A third lot laid the whole movement to the fact that several of the girls took scholarships away from as many young men. Certain it is that one young woman of remarkable facility for learning captured a prize that all the honor men were striving for.

Be that as it may, the antagonistic spirit prevailed, and it was determined by the board of managment that the class of '16 should be the last woman's class to be admitted to the university. The class contained an unusually bright lot of girls, who, spurred on by what they considered an injustice to their sex, devoted their intellectual efforts to taking away as many perquisites in the shape of prizes and scholarships as possible.

Miss Julia Horton, president of the class, proved an excellent choice. Not much of a scholar, she developed a rare talent for management. Upon her election she made a few remarks embodying the desire that the members of the class should beat the men in every field.

"In athletics?" asked a voice.

Miss Horton was staggered for a moment, then bringing her white fist down on the table, said with vigor, "Yes, in athletics."

A burst of laughter followed the announcement, after which it was forgotten till three years had passed. The president had by this time been succeeded by others, but she had become the recognized manager of the class. The college fall term for 1916 had scarcely commenced when she called half a dozen of her classmates to her room for a conference, and when they were assembled said to them:

"You may remember that when I was elected class president in our freshman year I signified a wish we should beat these dog in the manger students who haven't the brains to take prizes themselves and are unwilling that we should take them, even on the athletic field. Our prize scholars are sure to sweep the board next June, and I have called you together to consult as to a means of beating the men in athletics."

A dozen coral ears were pricked up at once at this daring statement.

"If we haven't the muscle," Miss Horton continued, "we may at least have the ingenuity to find a way to beat the men, or at least drive them from the field. The football season is at hand. At that game manly strength has a greater advantage over woman's physique than any athletic contest. I propose that we select a team from among those of us whose advantage lies rather in our muscles than our brains and at the final of the season attempt to win a game."

"Nonsense! Impossible! It wouldn't be proper!" were the words that greeted the proposition.

"All I ask of you," continued the speaker, "is to co-operate with me. We will organize a team. We will not let our object be known till the last moment, then we will challenge the university team, relying on our wits rather than our physical strength to win. At any rate, we may get revenge."

"Wit won't win where brute strength is needed," remarked Miss Porter.

"Any more than brute strength will win where brains are required," Miss Ripley added, "as is manifest from our sweeping away the prizes and scholarships from these strapping fellows."

"We might weaken them," suggested little Miss Muffins, "by sticking pins into them."

"I have a scheme," said Miss Horton, "that I propose to put in practice when it comes to the final test."

"What is it?" asked all at once.

"Girls," was the reply given impressively, "there is one faculty we need not flatter ourselves we possess—reticence. I shall not communicate my plan to the men through each and every one of you."

Miss Horton won the assent of the company, they agreeing to her terms—at least all of them except little Miss Muffins, who declared she could never in the world wait for the denouement.

There were several remarkably strong young women in the class, and one, Mary Honk, who had come from a farm on which, her classmates declared, she had followed the plow, was five feet eight in height and strong as an ox. Miss Horton, who organized the team, selected her for the most prominent position and assigned the others to the rest of the places as they seemed best fitted.

Since the manager's plan was based upon the wits rather than the strength of the team it was not supposed that training and practice would be adhered to very strictly. The main trouble was to find a ground where they could practice without having the men students ogle and guy them. However, they secured a gridiron in a neighboring town, fenced in, and on practice days went there in a hay wagon.

Nevertheless it was not long before the men students learned that the co-eds had organized a football team and were practicing. Then it leaked out that they were intending to challenge the men. Innumerable were the jokes perpetrated at the girls' expense, which luckily they did not hear. Miss Horton was working with some especial purpose in view, but since she kept her own counsel no one knew what it was. She urged the team to learn the game and charged a few of the strongest, especially some who were fleet runners, to prepare for some real work on the last Saturday in November.

There was considerable anxiety on the part of the men team to learn when and where the girls did their practicing. In order to prevent giving away these important matters the young ladies chose unexpected practice days and set out each and every one for the field in a different direction.

The university team and the woman's college team were in fine practice, there being about two weeks remaining before the end of November. Then a formal challenge passed, which was accepted by the university team captain with great formality, but with the belief that the affair was a joke. Soon after this it was noticed that a change had come over the women students. Up to this time there had appeared no disposition on their part to flirt, but now it was observed that several of the prettiest had abandoned their maidenly reserve and were showing a disposition to be wooed. But what was not especially noticed was that the attraction for them seemed to lie not in the honor men, but in the stalwarts of the football team.

The truth is that the joke attending the proposed game with the girls was overshadowed by a more serious matter. The annual game between Westmoreland and Pompton was to come off on Thanksgiving day. As to the game with the girls on the following Saturday, no one believed it would take place, or, if it did, it would be a sham game intended for a sort of social function. A couple of weeks before Thanksgiving Captain Ashton of the Westmoreland university team began to have trouble with his men. Several of those he most relied on became very lax in their training, and not a practice game was played but one or more men were absent. The captain stormed and threatened and vowed he would resign, but to no effect. The irregularities grew instead of decreasing until during the last week before the great game the condition of the team approached demoralization.

Ashton questioned the big fellows as to what was drawing them, but received no satisfaction. His best man, Tomkins, suddenly cast the captain into the depths of despair by accidentally shooting himself in the foot while cleaning his revolver and thus rendering himself unfit to take his part in the annual game. Wharton, another good man, was called home the day before Thanksgiving by a telegram announcing that he was wanted there immediately. He did not return till the beginning of the next week.

It was only two days before the game that an incident occurred which cast a faint light on what was the matter with the Westmoreland team. Skulpins, who was relied on to do the punting, while his team was out for practice was seen walking on a by-lane with Beatrice Wheaton, one of the prettiest girls in the woman's college. The fact was reported to Ashton, who began to "see through a millstone." But it was too late. His team was obliged to go into the game with Pompton shorn of several of its best men and with others whose non-attendance upon practice had unfitted them for their parts. It subsequently leaked out that no less than seven of them had the evening before been sumptuously entertained by young ladies of the woman's college. The result was that at the match game the score at the close stood: Pompton, 24; Westmoreland, 0.

This defeat of the Westmorelanders seemed to be especially gratifying to the co-eds. They were observed congratulating each other, and the defeat was celebrated by spreads given in several of the girls' rooms. Four men who had been attentive to four different girls left college on Thanksgiving night, and three out of the four never returned. It was rumored that they had made propositions of marriage and been rejected.

On Friday, the day after Thanksgiving, the captain of the woman's team wrote a note to the captain of the Westmorelands asking some question pertaining to the game to come off on the morrow. The messenger, returning, announced that the captain's room was locked and bolted. Messengers sent to other members of the team failed to find any one of them. Not a man Jack of them was left in town.

On Saturday evening a notice was posted on the college bulletin board, signed by the captain of the woman's team, claiming the game to have been played that afternoon, since the men's team had run away.

The girls' scheme of revenge was out, and to no one was it plainer in all its details than to Captain Ashton. The triumph of heart over muscle had been complete. Miss Horton's management had been eminently efficient. She had set the most intellectual girl after the prizes, placed the most muscular on her team, while for the breaking down of the athletes she had brought up her corps of beauty, before which their hearts collapsed like a burst football.

The class of 1916 was the last woman's class to be graduated at Westmoreland, and the men students swore a great oath that there should never be another.

DAUGHTER GAVE AGED MOTHER VINOL

Now She is Strong and Better Every Way

Pitman, N. J.—"I suffered from a weak, run-down condition so I could not get around to do my usual light duties, for I am 73 years of age and past hard work. My daughter brought me a bottle of Vinol and asked me to try it, and after taking two bottles I have a good appetite, rest well at night and am stronger and better in every way."—Mrs. F. Anderson, Pitman, N. J.

We wish every feeble, aged man and woman in this vicinity would just try this constitutional cod liver and iron tonic on our guarantee to return their money if it fails to benefit. Formula is on every bottle.

A SLUGGISH LIVER CAUSES LOTS OF TROUBLE

When the liver becomes sluggish it is an indication that the bowels are not working properly, and if they do not move regularly many complications are liable to set in.

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills are a specific for all disease or disorders arising from a slow, sluggish, lazy or torpid liver, and they have been universally used throughout Canada for over 20 years with the greatest success.

Mrs. W. A. Harrison, 7 Poplar Grove, Halifax, N.S., writes: "I take pleasure in writing you concerning the great good I have received by using Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills for a sluggish liver. When my liver got bad I would have severe headaches, but after using a couple of vials of your pills, I have not been bothered any more."

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills are 25c a vial at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Digestibility of Cheese.

By experiments on the digestibility of cheese it has been shown that much depends on the special physical characters of the food. All fat cheeses are said to be dissolved and digested with great rapidity, because the molecules of casein—the nitrogenous part of the cheese—are separated only by the fat, and so the gastric juice can attack a large surface of the cheese at one time. Whether the cheese be hard or soft does not appear to influence digestion, and there is no connection between the digestibility and the percentage of water present in the cheese.

Too Economical.

"The servant that works for me must be very, very economical," said the boarding house mistress to the applicant for work.

"I'm such a one, ma'am," promptly returned the applicant. "Indeed, me last mistress discharged me for bein' that way."

"For being economical?"

"Yes, with me clothes. I used to wear hers."

Changing the Story.

"Anyhow, we can change the story to our children a little."

"What do you mean?"

"We can tell them that when we were married I was making $75 a week, and we had a mighty hard time of it to get along at that."

Bridgenorth Hunters Leave For North

Bridgenorth, Oct. 31. — Every appearance of winter but we have not had our Indian summer as yet.

Wild geese were to be seen going south on Oct. 29th.

Mr. Harry Wolf and Mrs. Wolf left Chemong Park in their big auto for New York, on Monday, the 29th. They have been at Chemong since the beginning of May, and have enjoyed a good summer's outing.

There are still a couple of families at the park.

The wild ducks have been very numerous on the lake this fall and the shooting has been good.

The Jopling party left on Tuesday for their hunting ground at Stoney Creek. There were ten in the party.

The Jim Grant party left for Crane Lake. The party consisted of eight persons.

The farmers are busy getting on their potatoes, but the weather is very unfavourable.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Kelly have returned from a trip up at Trout Creek where their lumber interests are located.

Lieut. McNabb is in the village on his job getting things ready for the tribunal which is to commence on Nov. 10th.

Mr. J. H. Garbutt of Smith and Mr. Eugene Moloney, of Ennismore, will constitute the tribunal, with the aid of Lieut. McNabb.

MUSIC IN THE HOME

MODERN TALES OF A WAYSIDE INN.

Muskoka is a great meeting place. At one of the summering places there, there chanced to meet The Organist, The Choir Soloist, The Piano Teacher, The Orchestra Player and The Outsider. One evening the group gathered and the self-appointed chairman, The Outsider, called on The Organist for a tale.

Then spake The Organist: "Befor. I got an organ in a city church, I was playing in a country town, where the motor-power that blew the little organ was a boy of fourteen. At first he would fill the air chests as dull as possible, rest until they were empty, then suddenly go at it with short noisy jerks again. I got him cured of that. But one day I noticed that certain pipes did not sound. The perplexing part was that the trouble shifted from one pipe to another. Entering the blower's corner when my visit was least expected, I caught the boy replacing a G. A. Henty book on the mouth of one of the pipes. Having solved the difficult——" but the closing words were lost in the laughter that the experience provoked.

Then came The Choir Soloist's turn. He said: "You are all familiar with that class of touching songs, the chief ingredient of which is a mixture of religious and sentimental mush. They are often submitted to our publishers, and indeed, sometimes one gets through. I shall recite a typical verse:

Oh come, all you who love piety
Of the treacle and M'lasses variety,
Come to our holy Bethel,
Come, sweet lovers, Algy and Ethel
You'll find religion is love,
For love rhymes with dove,
And the dove comes from above;
So come all you who love piety
of the eau-sucre variety.
To our little Bethel.
Come Algy and Ethel.
Come! Come!"

The tinge of sarcasm in twinkle of The Choir Soloist's eye as he closed his recitation was catching, for sarcasm tinged the laughs which followed.

Then spake The Orchestra Player: "A certain rich man once had a swell party. He engaged an orchestra on the spur of the minute agreeing to pay handsomely for their services. The position of trombone player for the night was offered to a musician whom we shall call No. 1. Now No. 1 was engaged with another orchestra for regular playing but the remuneration for this extra night was a good deal more than the regular thing. So he got a friend who knew nothing about playing to take his place for the usual evening performance, saying to the greenhorn, 'the man next you is a cracker-jack on the trombone—you just watch him, put your mouthpiece to your lips when he does, swell up your cheeks when he does, and move the slide in and out, keeping time with him. You won't be any help, but the other trombonist will play for you both, and nobody will be any the wiser.'

"The substitute went to the appointment, perhaps a little nervous, but ready to carry out instructions. The orchestra played an overture in the midst of which was a trombone solo. The conductor made all manner of wild gesticulations, trombone players Nos. 1 and 2 both puffed and worked the slides frantically, but in place of the solo there was nothing but silence. Trombone player No. 2 was also a substitute."

When the third round of applause had subsided The Piano Player proceeded: "Brahms was noted for his biting and sarcastic remarks. Once, though, he met his mark. A great banquet was given in Vienna. Among those in attendance was Popper, the 'cellist and composer. Called on for a speech, Brahms responded lamely. He said, 'Gentlemen, composing is very difficult, yes, very, very difficult, indeed.' Perceiving Popper, he continued, 'Composing is very difficult. Copying is very much easier, Gentlemen, but on that point my friend Popper can give you more information.'"

"Popper got up smiling. 'Gentlemen,' he said, 'Brahms has told you I know all about copying. I know if I copied anybody, there is only one man I would consider copying and that would be Beethoven, but on that point my friend, Brahms, can give you more information.'"

While the party was giving outward evidence of their enjoyment of the story, The Outsider was making ready for a quick departure to avoid having to tell one. But he was not quick enough and under threats The Outsider went on: "A lady who was much annoyed at the unvarying monotony of the repertoire of the hurdy gurdy that played in front of her house every day asked the organ-grinder if he could not play something by Wagner. 'Wagner,' he said, in tones of disgust, 'Wagner. I play him no more signora; I brekka two organ and spolla two monk with Wagner.'"

With a chorus of shouts the meeting broke up without any ceremony, beyond a self-inflicted, anti-retiring dip for each of the five.

QUANTITY VS. QUALITY.

Harold Bauer says of the pianoforte: "The instrument sounds its best in a small hall. In a large one its worst characteristics are likely to come out all too clearly to the surface. And though it is in many ways the most powerful of all the instruments, truly beautiful playing does not call upon it's limits of sound, but makes it the medium of fine and delicately shaded musical thought." In this connection there is a story to be told. A Toronto girl had been studying the piano for some time and had become a fairly efficient player when she moved to another city. For a time she gave up her lessons. Then she began with a teacher who was "strong" for the Son-of-Thunder style. Her aunt went to visit her, heard the pounding in the front room and made a mild protest: "My dear Caroline, whatever is the matter with your playing? You used to have such a beautiful touch. Now it seems as if you have forgotten it all." The girl replied that her new teacher favored the Orchestral method and had instructed her to use all the power she had. "He says my arms are too weak and I must play as loudly as I can in order to strengthen them."

Consider the wondrous art-sense of a teacher who turns the music room into a gymnasium, and makes the passive instrument a sort of horizontal bar for strengthening the biceps! Verily the world is full of fakers, and among them are some persons who teach the art of piano-playing. The judgment of Harold Bauer is unquestionably sound. The amount of tone from any instrument is of secondary importance. The quality of tone is vital. When some of the pounders begin to play one wonders why they do not get a maul and make a good job of the destruction when they are at it.

TAKE SALTS TO FLUSH KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have Bladder trouble

Meat forms uric acid which excites and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Regular eaters of meat must flush the kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; removing all the acids, waste and poison, else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get irritated, obliging you to get up two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive; harmless, and makes a delightful effervescent lithiawater drink which millions of men and women take now and then, thus avoiding serious kidney and bladder diseases.

CARVED JADE.

It Takes Chinese Patience to Work This Hard Oriental Stone.

When you go into an oriental shop in any big city you are almost sure to see rings or necklaces or bracelets which are a pretty, clear green in color and are made out of jade. If you ask the shopman to tell you something about jade he will answer that the true jade is seldom found outside of Asia and Oceanica, but that in these parts of the world it is to be had in considerable quantities.

You, of course, know that a diamond is so hard that it will scratch glass, but perhaps you have not heard that jade is also extremely tough and will cut glass and quartz. Because of its great hardness the man who carves it must possess vast patience, and the Chinese are almost the only people who have sufficient patience and persistence to carve designs in jade.

The Chinese make numberless articles out of jade—paper weights, handles for swords, belts, bangles, rings, vases, cups, plates, pendants, and so on.

Jade is far from cheap to buy. Nowadays fine pieces of jade are just as much valued among collectors as are fine paintings for their great beauty and artistic value. So, then, if some one gives you a little pendant of carved jade, you will understand that you have a present which not only would be valued highly today, but one which many peoples in all times would have treasured

COST OF WORLD WAR.

Germany Without Credit Becomes Practically Bankrupt.

The estimated cost of the world war, to date, is, approximately, $90,000,000,000, a sum almost beyond the comprehension of the average individual. It means a per capita cost of about $55 for every man, woman, and child on earth. That expenditures for war purposes are not growing less, in the aggregate, is seen by the fact that the daily cost to all belligerents is now about $117,000,000. This compares with about $105,000,000 six months or so ago. Now that the United States has entered the conflict, it is probable, from this time forward, that the expenditures will increase much more rapidly.

The financial demands have meant a hard strain upon the resources of the belligerents of Europe, particularly the Central Powers, Russia, and Italy. In its forty years of preparations for war, Germany had provided a well-filled war chest, and was in an excellent condition, in both a financial and a military way, for the inauguration of hostilities. The three years of fighting, and the rapidly increasing cost of it, have, however, made such serious inroads upon Germany's war chest that its contents have, it is believed, all but vanished. Germany's credit with the few neutral countries of Europe has nearly disappeared. They demand gold for what they sell to Germany now, and Germany has not the gold to pay. If Germany succeeds in getting further credit from the neutrals, it will be only in the manner in which a highway man gets his booty from his victims. In short, Germany is virtually bankrupt. If the morale of Germany were as good, for instance, as that of China, which never considered itself a Christian nation, the neutral peoples would probably keep on extending credit, taking Germany's promises to pay as contentedly as its gold. But Germany has forfeited its standing as a nation, both financially and morally, and no people is inclined to trust a financial and moral bankrupt. It is an axiom, among business men generally, that a man of character and without security is more desirable to lend money to than the man with security and without character.

Germany began to lose gold most heavily last June, when the United States Government embargo measure became a law. If President Wilson had any doubts as to the effect of that act upon Germany's economic position, they must have been dispelled at that time, or soon afterward, for, since then, Germany's gold has disappeared so rapidly that mark exchange, in the neutral countries, has declined to a most serious extent. Germany's efforts to stem the tide by shipping gold has resulted in the depletion of the gold supply, but has had scarcely any appreciable effect upon exchange rates. England has shipped considerably more than $1,000,000,000 in gold to the United States, but England's annual production of gold, within her overseas Dominions and possessions, is almost one-third of that amount. Germany has no outside sources to draw from, but, on the contrary, has had to help Austria and Turkey. Germany has spent money so lavishly, in carrying on the war, that it is necessary for it to borrow to pay interest on the obligations already incurred. The entrance of the United States into the world war came about a short time before Germany's financial exhaustion. The United States has brought to the aid of the Allies the resources of the wealthiest nation in the world. It is, therefore, not difficult to see ultimate victory for the Allies, nor, is it hard to understand why Germany desires peace now.

GRUMBLING IN THE GLOOM.

Try to Forget Your Aches and Pains and the Bad Weather.

It was a wise old wit who remarked that if talk about our aches and pains were suppressed a third of the conversation of civilized life would cease. If to this interdicted subject were added that of unsatisfactory weather another third would be chopped off.

It is amazing to hear humanity devoting so much of the brief time allotted us here to painfully detailed diagnoses of our headaches, backaches, stomach aches and innumerable other miseries.

The comical part of it lies in the solemn patience with which each listens to the other. He or she knows, however, that his or her turn comes next, and the luxury of unloading sickening accounts of sickness will be indulged.

Many of us are not miserable enough with the pains of the present, but must treasure up the pains of the past as constantly accumulating reservoirs of misery and borrow them of the future as a debt under which to groan and grumble.

If we could forget it all and permit others to forget it, throwing open our spiritual side to the boundless blessings offered it, what a universe of joy and cheer and brightness before unseen would lie before us!

It is all a matter of mental turn. We may shut the shades of the windows of our minds on the sunny side and moan in darkness, or we may open the same windows wide and laugh in the sunlight.

NATURE THE GREAT HEALER.

British Army Surgeon Says Antiseptics Have Been Discarded.

CHICAGO — That nature and cleanliness still are the greatest healers, and that the world is yet to discover the perfect germicide, are assertions made before the eighth annual session of the Clinical Congress of Surgeons in session here.

Sir Birkley Moynihan, of Leeds, Eng., member of the British army medical staff, asserted he had been able to discard all the recent solutions used as antiseptics, and employed no other methods than cleansing the wounds, sewing them tight before infection set in, and then leaving nature to do the rest.

Major Edward Martin, of Philadelphia, defended the germicide solutions, and declared he believed neither surgeons nor patients would sleep well if a mere washing and sewing tight of the wound were the only methods employed.

LIQUOR IN EGG SHELLS.

HEAD STUFFED FROM CATARRH OR A COLD

Says Cream Applied in Nostrils Opens Air Passages Right Up.

Instant relief — no waiting. Your clogged nostrils open right up; the air passages of your head clear and you can breathe freely. No more hawking, swollen mucous membrane and relief snuffing, blowing, headache, dryness. No struggling for breath at night; your cold or catarrh disappears.

Get a small bottle of Elys Cream Balm from your druggist now. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic, healing cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothes the inflamed or comes instantly.

It's just fine. Don't stay stuffed-up with a cold or nasty catarrh.

DISCHARGE ALIEN ENEMIES.

Order Issued to Shipyards and Manufacturing Plants.

NEW YORK, Oct. 30.—A letter warning that alien enemies must be discharged before November 1st was sent by United States Marshal Powell in Brooklyn to-day to hundreds of shipyards, drydocks, machine shops and manufacturing plants along the waterfronts of Brooklyn, Queens, Long Island and Staten Island.

Guinea Pigs as Food.

The cavy (guinea pig) is typically a pet animal and has no other excuse for existence than the pleasure he gives those who appreciate his good qualities. But it is to the undeniable edibility of the cavy that we owe the existence of the cheerful little squeaker of today.

The Incas of Peru long ago domesticated the wild ancestor of the modern animals—a small, tailless, unicolored member of the genus Cavix, the exact identity of which is a matter of some doubt. These creatures were allowed to run freely about the home of their owners, whose object in breeding them undoubtedly was for their food value.

The time which must undoubtedly have elapsed since this domestication was first begun is evident from the entirely changed color of the present day cavy.—"Pets," by Lee S. Crandall.

Encourage the Workers.

If you have people working for you one way to encourage them to do more and better work is occasionally to pick out instances where they have shown signs of ability and commend them. Any worker, particularly a young worker, is likely to be unable to discriminate always between his good work and his poor work. If you are his boss it is up to you to help him distinguish between the two. It is also up to you to take the young man in hand and explain to him why the good job is good and why the poor job is poor. In the first instance he will be hearing something pleasant and inspiring, and in the second instance he will be in a better mood to listen to you. You can also depend upon it that the man who is intelligently praised for a good piece of work will try to duplicate that work, so that he may earn more praise.

King's Grape Vine.

The King's grape vine at Windsor, England, in the warden near Cumberland lodge, was planted in 1773. It is 120 feet long and twenty-feet wide. The most remarkable vine in Europe, however, is the famous vine at Hampton Court, from which this is a cutting. This was planted in 1763 and still grows abundantly.

The Cat and the Chickens.

An authentic story tells of a male cat and a female cat in France that lived on terms of perfect amity with all the animals on the place—dogs, chickens and what not. It so happened that a hen which had a brood of seven chickens was killed accidentally. The cat, which some two weeks before had been deprived of her kittens, appeared to observe the predicament of the seven little chickens. She crawled into their nest, and the chickens, looking for warmth, nestled into her warm fur, peeping gratefully. The chickens, fed by their owner, throve perfectly, and every day the strange sight was presented of their following the mother cat about the premises as if expecting her to find them food after the manner of a hen.

Will Never Find Body.

Dr. John Cope of the Imperial Antarctic expedition that was sent in search of Captain Scott's body, says it will never be discovered. "Every year," he said, "there falls 14 feet of snow in the Antarctic. This blows away and melts down to seven feet, and then the next year comes another 14 or 15 feet, and all the while the barrier wears away underneath, so that Captain Scott's body has been buried so deep it will never be found."

It never rains roses. When we want more roses we must plant more bushes.—George Eliot.

A Cubist Compliment.

Paris is laughing at the latest Cubist story. The wife of one of the most renowned Cubists was returning from Spain to France. The customs officer opened her baggage and discovered a remarkable canvas. The picture appeared to represent a collection of old iron, which had been strongly colored. "Qu'est-ce que c'est yue ca?" asked the officer, gazing with astonishment, mingled with suspicion, at the work of art. "That's my portrait," replied the lady coldly. "Never!" retorted her examiner; "that must be the plan of a submarine or aeroplane. An engineer as expert was called. He looked at the masterpiece for a long time and turned it round and round. Finally he said, "It is possibly a machine, but it will never go." On this the lady was allowed to depart, which she did joyously, for was it not a tribute to the husband's miraculous skill?—London Chronicle.

RE-ORGANIZED ITALIANS ARE HOLDING THE ENEMY

Bulletins of General Cadorna Indicate That His Army Has Checked Invaders Seven Miles West of Udine---Many German Machines in Air Raid on England--Beersheba Captured by British Troops

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

ITALIAN HEADQUARTERS, Wednesday, November 1.—As the bulletins of General Cadorna, the Commander-in-Chief, indicate the Italian troops perfectly reorganized, are holding back the enemy at a distance of seven miles west of Udine.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, (Delayed), November 1.—Monday night the Royal Naval Air service carried out raids on Sparappelhoek and Varssenacre airdromes in Belgium. The visibility was excellent and accurate shooting was made. All the machines returned safely.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS, November 1.—The French merchant shipping sunk by submarines or mines last week consisted of two ships of more than 1,600 tons, and one vessel of less than 1,600 tons. No fishing boats were sunk.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, November 1.—Count George Von Hertling has been rejected as Imperial Chancellor by the Reichstag majority leaders, who construe this as a rebuff to the Emperor and a victory for Parliamentarism.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, November 1.—The City of Beersheba in Palestine has been captured by the British, it is announced officially.

The text of the War Office statement says: "General Allenby, Commander of the British Forces in Egypt reports that after a night march our troops attacked Beersheba yesterday morning. While our infantry attacked the defenses covering the town from the west and southwest, mounted troops made a wide turning movement through the desert and approached it from the east. Beersheba was occupied in the evening in spite of determined resistance by the enemy.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS (Official), November 1.—French raiding detachments last night penetrated the German lines at several points, the War Office reports. A German attack northwest of Rheims was repulsed.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, November 1.—East and northeast of Ypres the German artillery was active during the night, says to-day's official report. In the neighbourhood of Passchendaele hostile concentration was dispersed by our fire.

THIRTY AIRPLANES IN RAID ON ENGLAND

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, November 1.—About thirty airplanes in seven groups took part in last night's air raid. Three of them penetrated to the heart of London, says an official report to-day. The casualties and damage were slight. A report from Lord French, Commander of the Home Defenses, respecting last night's air raid, says German aviators took advantage of the clouds to prevent any decisive engagements.

The first group of raiders dropped bombs near the southeast coast. Two more groups were broken up by barrage on the southeastern outskirts of the metropolis. The fourth group was turned back up the Thames half way to London.

Of the fifth group one or more airplanes penetrated southeastern London. Some of the the sixth group reached the southeastern part of the city. The seventh group was dispersed before it reached the outer defences of the city.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, November 1.—Unusual interest within and without Parliament attaches to the statement in regard to the navy which is to be made in the House of Commons this afternoon by Sir Eric Geddes, First Lord of the Admiralty. It will be Sir Eric's first statement in regard to his department, and also his first address in Parliament, and never has a maiden speech been awaited with keener anticipation.

Naval affairs have been to the fore in the last few weeks. There has been much outspoken criticism of the conduct of the Admiralty, especially since the the successful German attack on a convoy in the North Sea. A section of the press supported by certain retired naval officers of high standing, is carrying on a campaign with the object of ousting Admiral Sir John Jellicoe as First Sea Lord. The Admiral has been the subject of attacks for his alleged lack of strategic ability and insufficiently forward policy.

The Admiral's defenders in other sections of the press, as well as among his colleagues in Parliament, have been equally emphatic in his support.

RED CROSS WORKERS HOPEFUL OF REACHING THE DESIRED TOTAL

The Committee in charge of the Campaign to raise the $20,000.00 asked for from the Citizens of Peterborough for the Peterborough Branch of the Canadian Red Cross met last night, and while the districts were not altogether covered, it was felt that the amount aimed at would be raised. While $20,000.00 is the objective more than this amount of money was required last year, and if as much work was done by the ladies during the next twelve months as was done in the past twelve months it will take close to $35,000.00 to accomplish it.

Let everybody give as much as it is possible in order that the work will not be hampered. Remember the boys in the trenches, in the hospitals, or prisoners in Germany, are entitled to as much considefation next year as this, and if it costs more as is the case, we should be prepared to make the sacrifice.

While three days have been set aside for the Canvass the City cannot all be covered in this time, and it is possible some sections of the City may see a Canvasser any day this week up to Saturday. If you have not been called upon just drop into the Red Cross Campaign Headquarters, next to The Examiner Office, with your subscription as others have done already, and receive the thanks of the Committee.

If you prefer cut out the Coupon that is appearing in the both papers, fill it in and mail to Mr. G. H. Thompson, and it will serve the same purpose.

"LET THE COUNTRY HAVE CONFIDENCE" WIRES CADORNA

Italian General in Telegram to New Premier Says That the Army is Determined to Resist and Conquer

CALMNESS IS SHOWN

(By John H. Hearley).

ROME, Nov. 1.—"The army is determined to resist and conquer, to avenge the cry of pain issuing from the country's sacred soil," General Cadorna, Italian Generalissimo, declared to-day in a telegram to Premier Orlando. His message was evoked by the new Premier's telegram, apprising Cadorna of a union of all political elements and Rome's unfaltering support and confidence.

"Let the country have confidence," General Cadorna concluded.

Italian newspapers all over the country to-day commented on the nation's extraordinary calm under the threat of the German invasion. The evacuation to the new battle lines has been carried out without serious losses. Every report from the front emphasized that the army was still of fighting efficiency.

A Merry Hallowe'en Tea Held

That the tea given yesterday afternoon by the ladies of St. Peter's Patriotic Club excelled all previous occasions, was the unanimous opinion of the very large crowd that visited the club rooms during the afternoon, and the ladies in charge are to be congratulated.

On entering the tea room one felt as though they were being ushered into fairyland—a fairyland evolved from charming hostesses, pretty waitresses, shaded candles, pumpkins and fairies in happy combination. The decorations of yellow and black were used extensively throughout the tea-room, the hostesses and their assistants being dressed in white, with pretty aprons and caps of yellow.

The tea table was draped in yellow and black crepe paper. A large Jack O' Lantern smiled from the centre, amid a plentiful supply of sandwiches and cakes, the lights above being shrouded in gorgeous range.

Tall brass candlesticks holding lighted candles, were placed on the piano, and smaller candles and fairies on the tea tables.

The hostesses, Mrs. M. Tooley, Mrs. Fred Shannon and Mrs. A. McGibbon were assisted by Mrs. Angus McPherson, who poured tea, and the Misses Annie and Lillian Simons, Myrtle Wolff and Annie Kelly, who waited on the different tables.

Suitable music for the occasion was provided by Miss Hurley and Miss Marion Gorman. The tea was a great success, both socially and financially, and the ladies wish to thank all who helped to add to their funds the nice sum of twenty dollars, to be used to procure comforts for the brave boys who are suffering so much for us all.

Good wishes also come home to roost.

A SECOND APPEAL FROM PREMIER BORDEN FOR A UNION EFFORT

OTTAWA, October 31.—The following official statement was issued to-day:

"On behalf of the Government the Prime Minister desires to emphasize the considerations set forth in his public announcement of October 25.

"Men prominent in public life, in both political parties, have unselfishly stood aside in order that union might be achieved. The members of the present Administration have sunk their party differences, disregarded all minor considerations, and united in an earnest effort for a supreme national purpose. They feel that it is not too much to ask the people of Canada, of whatever party allegiance, to pursue the same course, to unite in the same spirit, and thus to aid in the same purpose.

"The Government have no desire or intention of interfering with the right of the people in each riding to select the candidate of their choice, but they desire united endeavour in making the selection. It is hoped that the women of each riding will be invited to co-operate for that purpose.

"Those who are prepared to support Union Government naturally expect that they shall have a voice in the selection of Union candidates. Any course which prevents this is liable to provoke discord and undermine unity of effort when it is most needed."

A Scorching Castigation Of Sir Joseph Flavelle And The Borden Government

Taken From the Peterborough Review of October 31st, Page 6---Will Have Significant Bearing, Appearing in a Conservative Journal of Which Prominent Local Conservatives Are Directors--Mr. T. F. Matthews, Matthews-Blackwell Co., Mr. Jas. Kendry, ex-M.P., Mr. E. A. Peck, ex-M.P.P., and James Lynch.

The subjoined article, taken from the Review of Oct. 31st, is not a mere thoughtless screed. A careful perusal of it will show that it is a thoughtful article, founded upon careful consideration and connotation of facts, pungently put. It is written by one of the most talented special writers in the country, Mr. H. F. Gadsby, well known in Peterborough:

OTTAWA, Oct. 20.—The five hundred thousand women enfranchised under the War Time Elections Act are no doubt taking a great interest in the Flavelle investigation now in progress in Toronto. In spite of a corps of highly paid lawyers and a Royal Commission whose object is to paint the lily and gild refined gold, Sir Joseph is being more and more discovered by his fellow citizens.

The evidence will bite despite the efforts of the best counsel to draw its teeth. Perhaps this is due to the presence of Mr. Gordon Waldron, a good Liberal, a lover of the people, and the legal representative at this trial of "Saturday Night," the one Toronto paper that was fearless enough to come to grips with a big advertiser like Sir Joseph Flavelle.

Of course the evidence would be more revealing if the Royal Commission included one expert cost accountant instead of two auditors, with Flavelle affiliations in Big Business which they must take care of. These two auditors do not go behind the figures presented to them by Sir Joseph's crack mathmetician, General Manager Fox.

Naturally, Mr. Fox does not make out a bad case for his employer, and just as naturally two auditors looking for future commissions, do not disagree with him. They say, "These figures check, therefore they must be all right." An expert cost accountant on the other hand would say, "Figures cannot lie, but some liars can figure. How do you make up this item?" Then he would enter into a searching analysis of the cost elements.

However, murder is coming out in spite of handicaps, and the five hundred thousand women who have been given the vote by the Borden Government would do well to keep a sharp eye on the evidence from day to day and see what it means. It is not too much to say that of the five hundred thousand soldiers' women folk who have been enfranchised, four hundred thousand belong to the working class which feels the high cost of living most acutely. They are on short commons most of the time and very little would push them over the dead-line into actual starvation. Their separation allowances have not been able to keep pace with the price of Sir Joseph Flavelle's bacon.

Sir Joseph is more responsible than any other man in Canada for the high cost of living. It is his calculating brain that has built up the pork trust and perfected the system by which the fourteen cent. hog became the fifty-seven cent. bacon. The high cost of butter, eggs, and other staple products can also be traced to his pernicious activities. Sir Joseph is not only the guide philosopher and friend of the Borden Government, but he is said to own Finance Minister White, who runs chores for him. Sir Joseph has such a hold on the Borden Government, that he hasn't even offered to resign from the chairmanship of the Munitions Board while he is being investigated, Sam Hughes did it, and Bob Rogers did it, but the pious Sir Joseph, who deplores everybody's profits but his own, refuses to do it.

He makes the excuse that he doesn't do it because his is an imperial appointment, but the general opinion is that if the man had any delicacy he wouldn't let a little thing like that stand in his way. The fact seems to be that Sir Joseph has associated with hogs so long that he caught some of their manners. Anybody but Sir Joseph would have taken it as a hint to quit his chairmanship of the Imperial Munitions Board when the British Government stoped buying his bacon, but his hide is thick and he didn't feel it.

So far as Big Business goes Sir Joseph has long been known as one who had all his feet in the trough at once, but since the war started he has done even better. Rumour has it that his beef stew contract will net him thirty million dollars and that, what with other enterprises, shells, fuses, munitions, carried on under various aliases, he will be in the Rockefeller class when the war is over.

Unluckily all the Royal Commission is authorized to do is to look into his bacon. All his other grafts escape inspection. A Royal Commission that would thoroughly investigate Sir Joseph Flavelle would need to investigate every spot where a dollar shows its head in Canada, not to mention choice spots in the United States and England. A Royal Commission with these plenary powers would also find him and his Toronto group of looters up to the neck in the C. N. R. deal, by which they hope to fleece this country of $135,000,000 — $75,000,000 for the bonds they brought up in England, and $60,000,000 for the watered stock. They would also find Sir Clifford Sifton somewhere in ambush. This is why Sir Clifford is so anxious to continue the Borden-Flavelle Government in office. Where the treasure is there shall the heart be also. One hundred and thirty-five million dollars is worth gambling for. You see now why Flavelle and the other big fellows are all playing the same game. As long as there are so many dollars in sight the Borden Government can't lose Sir Joseph. What he gave to the campaign fund in 1911—rumour says it was a cool million—he wants back a hundred fold.

The Borden Government has given five hundred thousand more or less poor women the vote. They asked for cheaper food and they got the vote instead. The Borden Government said, "Here are your pretty little votes. Use them to keep Sir Joseph and us in power and you'll feel better."

This is the old story of the bread and the stone over again. You can't eat votes. They won't keep the children from starving. Food Controller Hanna issues an inspiring manifesto ever and anon, but soft as has words are they don't fill an empty stomach. Votes from the Borden Government and kind words from Mr. Hanna—

THE REGISTRATIONS.

Total registrations	386
Reported for service	16
Claims for exemption	370

These are the figures at the Peterborough Post Office up to noon today, and indicate that the men of this district have yet to realize their responsibility under the Military Service Act. They have only nine days more to claim exemption or report for service, and quick action is needed. Many of the men who are registering now have not yet been examined by the Medical Board.

Once again for the benefit of men who have been placed in B, C and E catgories, the following instructions from the Registrar are published:

Order of Exemptions.

"While men in Categories B, C or E must file their claim for exemption or report for service before November 10, they will not be brought before the Tribunals at present. Tribunals will grant them temporary exemption till men in their respective medical categories are called upon for duty, at which time they will be given notice of the hearing of their respective claims. After filing their claims for exemption in the post office, such men, therefore, need do nothing further unless they receive a notice signed by the Registrar."

Postmaster Edgar has received a large shipment of dodgers calling attention to what is required of men in Class One under the Act. These will be distributed by the letter carriers.

Yesterday's Figures.

Of fifty-two men examined by the Medical Board at the armouries yesterday only seven men were totally rejected, which is the minimum number of "E" category men for one day's operations of the Board. The men examined were a mixture of city residents and farmers, and the general physique was above the average, as the figures show, thirty-seven men being placed in A category.

The figures for the three sessions were as follows:

Many Hunters Are Going to Jack's Lake

The woods will be full of deer hunters to-day, and around Jack's Lake, according to the latest communique, there will be guns enough to make a noise like somewhere in France. Mud-stained "jitneys" have been filing out from the city at frequent and regular intervals. Old timers stated that the hunters would apparently be so numerous there would be no chance of anyone even seeing a deer.

No Election Ever Fraught With More Elements of Uncertainty Than the Coming One—Big Task to Count and Allocate Soldier Vote.

THE ONTARIO SITUATION

(Special to the Toronto Star and the Peterborough Examiner).

OTTAWA, Nov. 1.—It will be mid-January at the earliest before the result of the election fixed for Dec. 17 will be definitely known, owing to the time which will be required for counting and allocating the overseas soldiers' votes. There are some Canadian hospitals and other units in Egypt and Salonika, and it is not expected that the work will be finally completed until thirty days after polling day in Canada. So that men who so far as Canada is concerned may eat their Christmas dinners as members elect, may be retired to private life before the New Year is well on its way, while others who taste the bitterness of defeat may later partake of the sweets of success.

No election was ever fraught with more elements of uncertainty than this. Under the new Franchise Act a large element of the community who voted in past elections will not vote in this, while a new vote has been added in the case of female relatives of men overseas, and in addition to the soldiers who went from Canada, several thousand men who never resided in the Dominion, but who joined the Canadian forces, will vote.

Added to these new elements of uncertainty is the fact that for the first time since Confederation a Union Government of both parties stands for election. Not even the most sanguine prophets who for years past have predicted results will venture a guess as to the composite result of the coming contest. Ontario continues to be the centre of interest so far as the choosing of Unionist candidates is concerned. Unless better counsels prevail the existing disparity between Conservatives and Liberals will be perpetuated in the union ranks. Hon. Frank Carvell, Minister of Public Works, brings back promising reports of the Unionist progress in his province. Hon. Arthur Meighen, Minister of the Interior, who returned to-day from the West, while admitting some difficulty in uniting on candidates, declared that the union spirit was strong and anticipated no trouble before nomination day comes. For these reasons the Cabinet is giving particular attention to Ontario, realizing that if union is to be a success, the existing disparity must, to some extent at least, be obliterated. Hon. N. W. Rowell is in Toronto to-day negotiating on the matter. Meanwhile, from the opposition camp, arrangements are under way for the placing of Laurier candidates in as many seats as possible.

Barricades On The Highway

Several accidents were narrowly averted last evening on the Chemong Road due to the depredations committed by a number of young ruffians whose idea of celebrating Hallowe'en was to barricade the road in several places by means of fence rails. One automobile party had to pass six of these obstructions, and in one case the machine passed completely over the obstruction. The party removed three barricades and passed two others in addition to passing directly over the one referred to, making in all six obstructions on a seven-mile stretch of highway.

In the city fairly good order was maintained, and beyond a few gates and other portable fixtures that were removed, the evening passed off very quietly.

FRANK JENNE says:

Perhaps I do not tell as often as I should about my Boys' High School Clothes. They were made to satisfy the demand for something better in Boys' Suits, and cost very little more than ordinary stuff—$7.50 up. "Come to me."

THURSDAY, NOV. 1, 1917.

MARGARINE.

It is stated on good authority that a prominent United Stacs concern is ready o spend half a million dollars in establishing a factory for making margarine in Toronto—$250,000 for the factory, and a like sum in launching the production. The proposed manufacturers say that margarine contains more nourishment than butter. Pasteurized milk is largely used in its manufacture, and the prices will be greatly less than butter. The concentraiton of manufacture in one plant, permits of thorough inspection, and provides assurances of wholesomeness and cleanliness, something we cannot be so sure of in connection with the makig of butter. While the creamery methods are clean and sanitary, and while a great deal of our dairy butter is made under good conditions, there is no doubt that in the country much dairy butter is made under conditions that fail to provide for cleanliness and wholesomeness and confidence.

The permission for the importation and manufacture of margarine will be a boon to thousands of persons who are unable at present prices to even think of buying butter. That is the first point of recommendation; and the concern of the dairying interests also seems to have been a false alarm. The manufacturer quoted asys that milk being a large ingredient in the manufacture of margarine, will be in increased demand for this purpose, and a large amount of cream will be released. Margarine will help meet the demand for fats for domestic uses and can be sold much cheaper than the present price of lard.

The only regrettable feature about the government's dealing with margarine is that action was not taken sooner for the relief of the classes that had had, owing to the great price of butter, to eat dry bread. The relief the introduction of margarine will bring, might just as well have come two years ago. The trouble with a good deal of the government's war measures is that they come too late, and the conditions they are intended to improve have become more settled by the delay and become more difficult to corect.

It is said that the Teuton thrust on the Italian battle front has created greater political unity in Italy. We have no Teuton thrust in Canada but we have the German spirit working—the party spirit that prevents united action in support of the Union Government. Party before country is their motto.

CANADA FIRST.

For a long time The Examiner has been urging that, in the matter of Canada's pulp wood supply and products, the motto should be "Canada for Canadians"—that export of raw woods or finished product should be subject to assurance of adequate supply for Canadian printers and publishers. If government action that is now being taken in this regard had been taken two or three years ago the conditions of complexity and difficulty now existing, might very largely have been avoided.

At the meeting on Monday of the commission having in charge investigation of news print conditions, Commissioner Pringle very plainly intimated that the supply of Canadian printers should be the prime consideration. One paper making company refused to supply paper to a large Canadian daily, and the commissioner pointedly asserted that the company would have to supply the Canadian paper market independently of any exclusive contract it might have with newspapers outside the country. "Don't be surprised," said the commissioner, "if you get an order from the government to supply Canadian newspapers irrespective of what contracts you have."

It is very obvious that the government does the right thing, though it has delayed taking action too long. Had it not been for this many publishers would have had to go out of business.

Canadian newspapers by supplying newspapers outside the country, and denying an adequate supply to home newspapers. The unthinking do not know nor appreciate the debt the country in the course of the war, owes to the newspapers. If it were not for the agency of the press there would be no adequate means of reaching the public, and appeals to popular discharge of this duty and that duty among the many presented, would not be effectively made. Just think for a moment how flat would fall appeals for win-the-war work, for Patriotic Fund work, for Red Cross work, etc., etc., if the people were not aroused through the medium of the newspapers.

It therefore becomes the duty of the government to see that an adequate supply of news print is assured to Canadians first. Such a thing is fully justified as a war measure for the Canadian newspapers are doing more than any other agency to keep the people in a war-winning temper, and teaching them the duty, as well as inciting them to the discharge of the duty, of helping to win the war. Cut off the newspapers of Canada for a week and the whole country would be groping in the dark .

To have papers, printing paper is necessary and at a reasonable figure; it must not be allowed to be exported to the destruction of our home supply. Canada's pulp wood, Canada's capital and Canada's skill are used in making paper, and we should get the lion's share of the benefit—should, at least, be assured of an adequate supply before we supply outsiders.

IS PATRONAGE PASSING?

The Ottawa Journal, the Capital organ of the original Borden Government, prints the following:

The Prime Minister has always been a pronounced advocate of the merit system in the making of appointments to the civil service; if Sir Robert Borden's Government did not go any further in the direction of reform than it did go, it was because of the obstacles and limitations set up by the continuance of partisan administration forced upon it. The new Government is not partisan, and it has no axes to grind. The members of the Cabinet will now naturally favor throwing the responsibility for the civil service upon the Civil Service Commission and the permanent heads of departments.

This artlessly naive admission means much. It is as much as to say that while Sir Robert Borden, as "boss" of the Cabinet, believed in government without the wasteful embarrassment of the patronage system, he was not strong enough, nor courageous enough, to prevent, or even try to prevent, a discontinuance of the partisan administration, that during the period of the war has been responsible for unreckonable waste of Canadian resources, and diversion of their use by corrupt profiting of partizans, from fruitful service in war-winning. Sir Robert Borden permitted orgies of partizan exploitation against the protest of many now associated with him in the Union Government. If their influence has converted Sir Robert to the necessity of taking action to minimize, or remove, the tremendous evils of the patronage system, he heads a new sort of government, which, as the Journal says, "is not partizan and has no axes to grind"—another naive admission that the old government was "partizan and had axes to grind," which as a fact were ground with a vengeance—till the sparks flew and the money flew also.

Sir Robert's work in removing the evil of the patronage system will be rendered more difficult by the encouragement he gave to it; by his failure, when he had the power, to sweep away the "obstacles and limitations set up," by his permitted continuance of partizan administration, the soil in which the rank and wasteful weed of partizan patronage grew and flourished.

We cannot forget these things because their influence persists in the attempt to remedy by the Union Government, the evils which partizan war administration have fixed in the character of politicians. These have been so trained and schooled and encouraged in the doctrine that "to the victors belong the spoils," that they persist in carrying into the selection of candidates in support of a Union Government, that "is not partizan, and has no axes to grind," the partizan spirit which the very fact of a Union Government and the principle of its foundation specifically, specially and emphatically excludes; if the new government, the Union Government is to be any more than a repetition under a thin veneer, of the government, which patriotism is supposed to have displaced by a non-partizan win-the-war government.

The announcement of the Atlantic Sugar Refineries of a drop in the prices of sugar, is a drop of comfort in the ocean of high cost of living.

ALL SAINTS' DAY AND ITS PRESENT SIGNIFICANCE

The world is not wholly in accord as to who are its saints. Neither do men agree as to how, if at all, the lives of the departed still connect with ours

But we all have our honoured dead, saints inasfar at least as they were healthy-hearted, whole, and therefore holy men. Them it were not well to forget; heroic souls, the star-crowned strugglers who have passed on duty's rugged road.

The mediaeval world might have deified its glorious departed—we in the fevered rush to "live, live in the living present," overlook them and their great, brave deeds.

But the war has linked us up anew with the life that is not of Time. Anew "the angel of death" has "spread his wings on the blast," and we are peering so many of us, from under his black pinions to catch a glimpse of the clear sky beyond.

This is a time of startling contrasts, which lift All Saints' Day out of the dim past, which widen it without the bounds of this or that communion. It, too, is born anew into special wartime significance.

In that they have suffered and died for us it is meet that we scatter the tear-gemmed flowers of fond remembrance before our hallowed dead. Can they know our gratitude? May we do aught for them? At their hands, they who have given us all, we dare not ask yet other boon, were it theirs to grant.

But the great black pinions that shut out the sunshine in the valley of the shadow of death leave much vague and obscure, bringing to some a fervent certainty, to others hope's desire that is still a doubt, and to yet others a barrier that is as of night.

But to all of us comes this certainty, that the contemplation on such a day as this, of service and sacrifice, is well and worthy. It will help us to readjust values between time and after-time; between our interests and our inspirations; between self-pleasing and self-perfecting.

This surely is the call of the hour, a call issuing not from platform or pulpit merely, but thundered from cannon's mouth, re-echoed from the lonely, cross-crowned resting-place of the boy who "went over," like a man; and in a way best suited to the understanding of each, bids us all on this All Saints' Day to make memory's tribute to noble deeds incentive to efforts and sacrifices commensurate with theirs.—S. in Brantford Expositor.

Prominent Toronto Men Are Killed

Canadian Press Despatch:

TORONTO, Ont., Nov. 1.—Lt. T. C. Irving, of the Canadian Engineers, and Major Jaffray Eaton, Canadian Infantry, were both killed in action in the recent Canadian advance in Flanders, according to private cables received here to-day. Irving was a prominent engineer and athlete, and Eaton was a newspaper man, and a grandson of the late Senator Jaffray, President of the Globe.

Hallowe'en Party Held at the Y.W.C.A.

The Hallowe'en spirit of fun and frolic was very much in evidence at the masquerade party at the Young Women's Christian Association, last evening, when nearly three hundred and fifty girls and young women enjoyed an hilarious time.

At 8 o'clock a procession of masked and otherwise disguised figures filed past the ghostly doorkeepers, and in a short time the gymnasium was thronged with all sorts and conditions of characters. Several nationalities were represented; princes rubbed shoulders with peasants; clowns and pierrots chatted with dancing girls, while fairies and ghosts flitted to and fro. Many of the costumes were very cleverly planned, and the whole scene was exceedingly picturesque.

One outstanding feature of the evening was a dance of ghosts and witches, very fantastic and creepy, around a glowing cauldron, while the spectators sat in darkness, and shivered with delight at the weirdness.

On the whole it was a most successful Hallowe'en party, and will long remain in the memory of those present as a very jolly evening.

C. G. E.'S NEW CONTRACT.

Canadian General Electric shareholders will be especially interested in the news that the company has received an order to build four 3,500-ton steamers for the British Government.

It is said the amount of the contract is in the neighbourhood of $3,000,000, and the Financial News Bureau says the company has agreed to wait two years for payment, carrying the amount meanwhile as an ordinary book account.

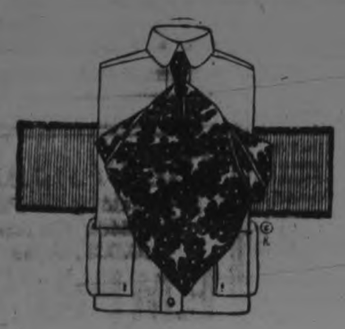
GRAFTON'S

Enlargement Sale Store News That Men Who Need Clothing Can Read To Best Advantage

The young fellow who wants the smartest TRENCH MODELS or other snappy effects can find them here. The conservative man who wants correct style in a more modified form also can be pleased. In short, Grafton's is the store where you can get just what you want, and get it for less money than you'd have to pay elsewhere.



Men's Four-in-Hand Ties

50c, 75c, $1.00 and $1.50

Four-in-hands, made up in the season's smartest effects — every tie perfect in workmanship as well as up-to-date in style, design and colouring. A wonderful collection. Better buy yours now while assortments are complete.

Men—Here's a Chance to Come in on some Mighty Good

Shirt Specials

$1.25, $1.50, $1.75, and $2.00

For obvious reasons, hundreds of men are buying an entire season's supply of shirts right now. This is the wisest course to pursue under the present uncertain market conditions.

We're making a special feature of good shirts at above pricings. They are carefully made in the most improved models, and fit comfortably. All sizes.

Good Fall and Winter

Gloves for Men

$1.25, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00 up to $3.50

For good styles and varieties of them for fine materials and careful making, we're willing to compare them with any you'll find selling at fully a third more in other Hamilton stores.

THE important thing in these days of INFLATED PRICES and DEFLATED QUALITIES is to get VALUE for your money, and this news is to tell you why you can get the best value at GRAFTON'S. But when you buy at Grafton's---you buy directly of the makers and you are sure, therefore, of getting better fabrics and better tailoring than any other store can afford to give for the same price. You can make your selection from the largest variety of new styles, new fabrics and new patterns to be found in Peterboro.

WE'RE READY TO SERVE YOU, MEN AND YOUNG MEN, WITH THE FINEST FALL AND WINTER

Suits and Overcoats

YOUR MONEY WILL BUY FOR

$15, $20 & $25

And we'll go as far as to state that they are Suits and Overcoats such as you cannot equal in any other store at or near these prices.

Their style is what first attracts the men who pass our windows. It's smart and snappy, whether the Suit or Overcoat is for the young or older man.

Men who examine these Suits and Overcoats closely are amazed that we can put such good fabrics into them, because everyone knows how scarce and expensive woollens are this year.

When they ask us how we manage it, we tell them, as we're telling you, that as there's no middleman's profit on Grafton's clothing, we can make better Suits and Overcoats, and sell them cheaper than any other store in Canada.

Men's and Young Men's Fall and Winter

Suits and Overcoats

Up to $35.00 and $40.00

All we ask is an opportunity to show them to you. The prices are the prices of a MANUFACTURER who deals personally with his trade. We are not agents for another's product—but the dispensers of OUR OWN.

This is the Kind of Men's Underwear

That gives long and Satisfactory service even though it is very low in price.

We would remind you that our underwear was bought at last year's low market prices. Our values are therefore fully one-fourth to one-third better than the merchant's whose stocks have only recently been contracted for.

Men'sCombination Underwear

$1.50, $1.75, $2.25, $2.50, $2.75, $3.00, $3.50 and up

Including such famous brands as Stanfield's, Pen Angle, Mercury and others. Made up of merino, mercerized silk, natural wool, cotton, elastic rib, Scotch knit and so on.

Men's Two-Piece Underwear

50c, 75c, 88c, $1.00, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00 and up

All the better brands are here. Made up in elastic rib, fleece lined, natural wool, Scotch knit, cotton, merino and mixtures.

Last November we made huge purchases of Wool Sweaters For Men

And they're just coming in now to sell at Remarkably Low Prices

$2.75, $4.00, $5.00, $7.50 and $9.00

Prices based on advantageous purchasing a year ago, which means that you can buy them for a good third or more less than they would cost you if we purchased them this year.

Among the numerous high points of excellence for which our Sweaters are famous, are these: Hard-finished wools, knitted-in shoulders, deep, strongly-reinforced pockets, fast colours and corded silk buttonholes.

They come in a wide variety of good colours, and in sizes 36 to 46.

BOYS' UNDERWEAR

Have you bought your boys' underwear yet? Better do so now, if you haven't. Stocks are still complete, and if you have to buy after this first stock is gone, it'll cost you a great deal more.

Our stocks—bought a year ago—are priced fully a third under the market.

Boys' Combinations and Two-Piece Suits at 40c, 50c, 60c, 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 and up.

Elastic rib, fleece-lined, natural wool and other suitable kinds—all made and finished to give long and satisfactory wear, with plenty of comfortable warmth.

"Hall Of Fame" Banners Presented To Successful Counties At The Convention

Mr. G. K. Quarrington of Toronto Elected President of the Ontario Sunday School Association—Resume of the Wednesday Sessions

The second day of Section B of the Provincial Convention of the Ontario Sunday School Association began with four very successful and largely attended simultaneous sessions, the Elementary Division, Secondary Division, Adult, and Administration. A new feature added to the sessions this year was that of the Administration Division. It was a gathering of the officers of the Sunday Schools to make a study of their own work in their local Sunday Schools. In the afternoon one of the outstanding features was the Hall of Fame, in which four counties received beautiful "Front Line" silk banners for the resultful work done during the year, as follows: York, North; Guelph City, Huron, South, and Grenville. Those attaining "Banner" standing this year were the City of Stratford, Haldimand, Brant, Welland, Norfolk, Elgin East. This part of the programme was of a spectacular nature in that there were ten Primary girls all dressed in white, each carrying a beautiful silk banner prepared by the Association and a gift to the Counties attaining "Front Line" and "Banner" standing. It was very thoroughly appreciated by the large audience in the afternoon session.

Added to this were three impressive and forceful addresses delivered on the following subjects: "Setting my School at Work to Win" by Rev. C. D. Draper, Milton; "Religious Education: Its Scope," by Dr. J. C. Robertson, who is editing the new Teacher Training Book on Administration, and the last address was that by Mr. R. A. Waite, on the subject "The Annual Glimpse of the International Field." In this Mr. Waite pointed out the personnel and the programme of the Sunday School Association. Mr. Waite gave us a quotation from W. R. Birks, who is now at the front as supervisor of the Canadian troops. "The real constructive work of the kingdom is being done at home by the Sunday School, the Y.M.C.A. and kindred organizations". Mr. Waite urged that in view of the fact that this war may be drawn out for years, that everyone is to do his part with the older boys who are now being called to the colours.

A very large and successful County and Township Officers' luncheon was held in the Murray Street Baptist Church, at which reports were given from the Executive Committee of the Chatham session, in which Mr. Halpenny reported that Mr. G. K. Quarrington of Toronto was elected as President of the Ontario Sunday School Association for the ensuing year.

Twin meetings were held in the evening, one in St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, for women only, and one in the Convention church for men only. The speakers at the Women's meeting were Miss Mabel Taggart of Toronto, and Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner of Chicago. At the men's gathering, Rev. T. A. Halpenny of Ottawa, and Mr. R. A. Waite of Chicago, were the speakers.

Sentenced To Penitentiary For Life Term

(Canadian Press Despatch).

CHATHAM, Ont., Nov. 1.—Life imprisonment in the penitentiary was the sentence imposed this morning on Frank McDonald, who was convicted of manslaughter for removing a rail on the Michigan Central railway near Ridgetown on the night of May 31st, 1911, causing a wreck which resulted in the death of Engineer Stephen Quinlan and Fireman Russell Oakes. McDonald was convicted largely on a confession which he made to the Detroit police, under duress, he stated in the witness-box. The Detroit and Ontario police, however, denied that any pressure was used to develop the confession. Harry McDonald, brother of Frank, is also under arrest, awaiting trial on the same charge.

Fall Plowing But Half Finished

Reports to the Department of Agriculture from district representatives this week speak of the cleaning up of farm work. Some winter rye and even a little wheat were put in during the week. Fall plowing is only about half finished, and the soil, owing to recent rains, is in many sections in such a condition that plowing cannot be completed before winter sets in. During the week potato-digging was practically completed. There is some rot in the Eastern townships, but in the West the crop is in good condition. Reports speak of some farmers hoarding their potatoes.

Root crops are turning out well, particularly mangels. Turnips are a good crop, but slow in maturing and a third of them are still in the fields.

The outlook for fall wheat and clover is excellent, the young crops having made good progress during the past week.

Middlesex reports a considerable shipment of fat cattle, but indications are that in most quarters more young stock will be kept over than last winter. From all parts come reports of a diminishing flow of milk, with many cheese factories closing.

NATIONAL INTEREST IS TO BE BASIS OF TRIBUNAL'S WORK

Instructions Issued For Benefit of Tribunal Members Are General Rather Than Specific—No Particular Occupation Exempted as Such

OTTAWA, Oct. 31.—All preparations have been completed for the opening of exemption tribunals on November 8. How the tribunals will proceed in their work, the broad principles by which they will be guided in considering applications for exemption, have been laid down and will shortly be in the hands of the tribunals. The instructions are general rather than specific. They lay down that it has been found neither necessary nor desirable to exempt any particular occupation as such. In considering the claim for exemption on the ground of occupation, for instance, tribunals are to exercise their best judgment and to use their common sense.

Regard will be held to local conditions, and to the domestic and world situation from the point of view of production, manufacturing and commerce.

"The dominant factor," the instructions proceed, "is of the course the national interest and every claim under this head must be determined by this test. In the most general terms it may be said that the maintenance of the supply of food, with particular reference to fish, wheat and meat, of coal, steel and certain kinds of metal, and of timber of certain kinds, is, or may be, of primary importance.

OTHER THINGS NECESSARY.

"The same is also true of certain manufactured products and of the operation of railways, steamships, telegraphs, telephones, light, heat and power plants. The machinery of finance must also of course, be kept in full and efficient operation to ensure the continuance of production and distribution of produce as they are required. It is understood, however, that it is not only to the production and manufacture of articles directly necessary to the conduct of the war to which regard must be had. Canada must not only throw her strength into the field, but must maintain those of her industries upon which depend her capacity to bear the financial interests involved.

"While, therefore, national interest is primarily concerned with the process and the products essential for war purposes, it is also vitally concerned with the maintenance so far as is consistent with the performance of her military obligations of the economic fabric of the nation. In case of all industrial, financial and public service undertakings it regarded should be had by tribunals to the extent to which the substitution of the labor of those both men and women, not available for service has or can be substituted for the labour of those whose services can me advantageously used for military purposes.

AS TO EDUCATIONAL CLAIMS.

"In considering a claim for exemption on the ground of education and training effect should not be given to this ground of exemption unless it be manifest to the tribunal". The instructions continue, "that the education or training of the individual concerned is designed to qualify him for service which will increase the national strength for war purposes or which will be necessary for the maintenance and upholding ow the social fabric of the nation and its stability during and after the war. In applying this principle, tribunals will keep in mind that war as now waged is a war of experts and that is no longer, as it was once considered to be, a question of human physical force available for bodily contact with the enemy, that the prevention of disease among the men and even among the animals at the front, their cure from disease and wounds, and the care and direction of very highly specialized appartus involving knowledge of scientific principles, is now of an importance which cannot be exaggerated. The supply of specially trained men for these purposes is therefore a matter of high national interest, and losses among men of this type have been, and continue to be, great, so that constant renewal of the supply is of the first importance."

A claim made on the ground of domestic position will be considered in its relation to any financial support the man had been in the habit of providing for relatives or others who, as a result of withdrawal for military service would be in want.

WHERE ONE OR MORE SERVE.

The instructions proceed: "Where from a given family, one or more are already members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force every humane consideration would point to the propriety of a single remaining member being granted exemption on hits ground, which reasons might also apply to more than one member of a family from which voluntarism has already taken two or more members especially if one or more has already been wounded or killed."

The instructions emphasize "that the importance of the careful and conscientious consideration by tribunals of their duty cannot be overestimated. Any claim granted for insufficient reasons not only deprives the State of a soldier, but tends to sow the seeds of bitterness and discord in a community. The arbitrary refusal of exemptions is, on the other hand, to be avoided."

Kitchener League

The Canadian Kitchener League makes a shipment of socks to our boys in the trenches every two weeks. Letters of appreciation have been received from the boys in acknowledgment of every parcel the League has sent. This amount of work has only been accomplished by the untiring efforts of a number of the ladies of Peterborough, to whom the League is most grateful. The Christmas season is drawing near and every friend and society is preparing Christmas cheer for the dear lads in the trenches. The Canadian Kitchener League realizes, from the letters received, that the boys are still very much in need of socks, and so have decided to make this Christmas shipment a most generous one. The League has yarn on hand and will be pleased to give it to any one who would like to do a little towards making comfort for the boys in the trenches.

France, Sept. 4.

Dear Friends: Just a few lines to let you know I received your parcel of socks O.K. I distributed them among my chums as far as they went and they were, everyone, thankful to get them. I received them just when our battalion came out of the trenches, about ten days ago, but I have been admitted to the hospital since I received them and have not been able to write until now. I am getting along fine and expect to be out soon. I will close for this time, thanking you very much for your kindness, I remain,

F. A. Cooper,
19th Batt.

France, Sept. 15.

Dear Friends: I received the parcel of socks about a week ago, for which I wish to thank you very much. I have distributed them to the boys in the battery, and you have no idea how much they were appreciated by all. We are having very nice weather at present, and I am enjoying the best of health. I am glad to hear the League did so well on their Trench Day as the money is certainly for a good cause. Thanking you once again, and wishing the Canadian Kitchener League every success, I remain,

Gunner C. H. Stuart,
27th Battery.

France, Sept. 13.

Dear Friends: I take pleasure in writing you these few lines to thank you for the parcel of socks which I received last night and distributed among the boys. They each read your kind letter and asked me to thank you for the socks and your kind remembrance. I beg to be a friend,

Fred Revoy.

France, Sept 3.

Dear Friends: I received your socks and was very glad to get them. I distributed them among the boys in the trenches and must say they appreciated them very much.

Organized Visitation For Securing Church Members Was Explained

Method Employed Under Superintendency of Mr. J. Shreve Durham by Which 47,000,000 Persons Have Been Reached in Nine Years.

Mr. J. Shreve Durham, a business man of Greensburg, Kentucky, who is superintendent of the Visitation Department of the International Sunday School Association, gave an instructive address at Wednesday morning's session of the Sunday School convention, on the methods to be employed in visitation, the scope of this work, and its value to the church.

Mr. Durham spoke with all the infectious enthusiasm of a man of action and achievement. In his position as International Superintendent of Visitation, he has effected organized visits to forty-seven million persons, and of that number only six per cent. failed to express any religious preference.

His discussion at St. Paul's church was largely attended and the interest he aroused was exemplified by the numerous questions submitted by his audience.

Visitation is designed to meet all the members of a community. It is applicable to large cities as well as to rural communities, and the system employed is essentially the same. All the churches of the town appoint visitors who thoroughly organize for the work of visiting every home. Protestant, Catholic and Jewish churches combine.

To one question of how visitors are appointed, Mr. Durham tersely replied: "Ask for volunteers, and if you don't get enough that way, draft them—see that you get the most representative, the biggest and the busiest men in your town." He told of one experience by which a prominent banker in the south was won for the Presbyterian church, after a visit by two directors of the bank, one a Methodist and the other a Catholic. When men of that type were active church workers, this man had said, he could not remain indifferent to the work, and the appeal of the church.

Cards were delivered to the persons visited, by which they signified the churches to which they belonged, or their preferences for a particular church or minister although they might not be regular attendants, or even did not attend at all. When these cards were collected they were transferred to the various churches, and ministers as designated. Those who expressed no preference were assigned to all the churches.

The incidental expenses in a small town were comparatively light, and were shared by the churches. After visitation there should be as thorough an organization to get the people to church as had been used to obtain their expression of preference.

Mr Durham stated that a welcome day had been successfully adopted. When a certain day had been chosen for their welcome all those persons who had a preference for a certain church should be visited, and urged to attend on that occasion, and the first results should be carefully followed up.

It is not the multiplicity of organization that will help the church, but the efficiency of its organization, Mr. Durham observed. The one without the other was actually hurting the church and the cause of Jesus Christ.

More can be done by the church for the commercial welfare of a town, to help it to be sober, righteous, honest, than by all the other agencies in the world. As a commercial proposition it was cheaper and better to expend money for the saving of souls, for the winning of people to God, than to pay taxes for the prosecution of criminals. For these reasons and because of the essential nature of the work no man should apologize for his activity in church work.

How the Sunday Schools in the U.S. Are Helping Hoover

How the Sunday schools of the United States are helping Hoover in the conservation of food and the elimination of waste, was evidenced by Mr. R. A. Waite at yesterday afternoon's session of the convention. His subject was, "Our Annual Glimpse of the International Field," and he was developing the topic, "the place of importance of Sunday school work." The Sunday schools have a representative with a desk in the Food Controller's Office at Washington. Mr. Waite had received ten printed cards which he was asked to use, filling in one per week to complete a test of ten weeks in which the whole country is to co-operate. Each card will show the number of wheatless meals he has had per week and the expected minimum is seven; the number of meatless meals in which he has abstained from beef, mutton and pork, the suggested minimum being fourteen and finally, the number of wasteless means, of which there should be twenty-one. The recipients of the cards are asked to hand them in at church every Sunday until the last has been used.

The Y.M.C.A. has asked the Sunday schools to supply a Bible class teacher for every company in every regiment in every military camp in the United States. The Sunday schools were also requested by President Wilson to assist in the relief of the Armenians and Syrian refugees.

Summer Sunday School of Eden Church Closed

MT. JULIAN, Oct. 31.—The summer Sunday School of Eden Methodist Church closed on 21st October with a very interesting rally service, after which the children marched into church singing "Sound the battle cry." A very instructive sermon was given by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Carr, especially for their benefit, but it could be listened to with profit by all. He laid emphasis on the truth that it was easier to begin to live right in childhood than to wait until the end of a misspent life.

The number on the S.S. roll, although not large, showed a good average attendance, and there was a good staff of teachers. The children were well supplied with cards and papers paid for by their collections, and they also have a good library.

The teachers were: Mrs. Charles Lauder, superintendent; Miss Emma Reid, sec.-treas., also teacher of the Bible Class; and Mrs. J. Northey, Mrs. W. T. Northey, Mrs. Bruce Reid, and Mrs. W. Mathews, teachers of intermediate classes and infant class.

The church was tastefully decorated with fruit, flowers, and vegetables for the Thanksgiving service in October, and also for the S.S. rally.

Splendid Report of the Canadian Field Comforts' Commission

Following is the report of the Canadian Field Comforts Commission up to 30th June, 1917:

To Our Friends:

In August last we issued a statement of moneys received and disbursed up to 30th June, 1916. A statement is now submitted for the year ending 30th June, 1917. The disbursements include the expenses connected with the handling of the comforts sent us from Canada and the United States.

Messrs. Price, Waterhouse & Co. have most kindly audited our accounts, and are again sending to each subscriber whose name appears on our books a copy of the audited statement.

Our Christmas appeal met a generous response. Many of the gifts were available also for the purchase of comforts generally and, as will be seen from the statement, a considerable sum was used for that purpose. The amount collected for expenses has exceeded our needs in that direction; the surplus is need for the general objects of the Commission. The balance on hand was largely held to pay for supplies to be distributed during the summer months when less comes from Canada.

In thankfully and gratefully acknowledging the contributions we have received in money we desire to add our no less grateful thanks for the large amount of supplies sent us for distribution. Our records show all packages received and sent out and these records are open to any of our friends or to their British correspondents.

The Leaflets issued from time to time by the Commission give such details as are possible of both departments of our work—the purchase of comforts for which money is sent and the distribution of those sent in kind—and we are glad to send copies of the leaflets to any who are interested in our work. They are sent regularly to all our known helpers, whose services to Canadian soldiers we hope some day to make known in a full report.

A Scorching Castigation Of Sir Joseph Flavelle

these are purely hypothetical. It will be interesting to see how many of the five hundred thousand women vote for conscription and how many against.

Meanwhile housewives all over the country who have been trying to make a dollar do fifty cents' work will be interested to learn that Sir Joseph Flavelle's company made two million dollars this year on bacon it sold to England. As the William Davies Company, it made a million on the bacon on this side of the ocean, and as Sheed-Thompson & Co.—another disguise of Sir Joseph— it made a million on the other side of the ocean.

That is what you might call working both ends for the middle. The process of collecting twice for the same article is very simple according to Sir Joseph. As the William Davies Company he puts on a profit on this sile of the water and then sells to himself as Sheed-Thompson & Co. on the other side of the water, which company puts on another profit, adds a commission and hands the bacon over to the British Government. Is is well that the bacon has only one ocean to cross. Apparently the number of profits increase in geometrical progression. That is to say, if one ocean means two profits, four would mean sixteen.

This probably explains how the Davies Company made two hundred and fifty per cent. profit during one year of the Boer war. The bacon had a number of oceans to cross and doubtless Sir Joseph, in some disguise or other, was waiting at all the strategic spots where another profit might be expected to happen.

The Easiest Way To End Dandruff

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely and that is to dissolve it. This destroys it entirely. To this, just get about four ounces of plain, ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive, and four ounces is all you will need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail.

FATHERS SHOULD BE SYMPATHETIC FRIEND TO SONS

Boys Are Hungry For the Companionship of Men Who Are In Sympathy With Their Youthful Ideas

ADDRESS BY MR. WAITE

"If I had my way I'd be out leading you to-night in a Hallowe'en stunt with the boys," said Mr R. A. Waite of Chicago to a large audience of men last night at the session of the Sunday school convention in George street Methodist church. And of the assembly, few could have doubted the earnestness of his playful desire. If his expression conveys any suggestion of levity it fails to do justice to Mr. Waite, who is associate superintendent of the secondary division of the International Sunday School Association, is one of the dominant personalities of this convention, a striking feature of which is the commanding presence of its numerous leaders. Mr. Waite discussed a serious subject frankly, yet with a nice reserve. He betrayed the anxiety of a father and, above that, the wisdom of manhood that demands for his own and all children that their first and enduring ideals of life may be of the highest. Hence, his allusion to the mystic traditions and the childish pranks of Hallowe'en was but an evidence of an abiding love for boys, perhaps an involuntary expression of that spirit of youth that remains with men down to their maturity.

Briefly, Mr. Waite's message was this—"Children have a right to information regarding themselves and their relation to life from a pure instead of a filthy source. It is time we took the ban off frank, honest instruction of children in the mystery of life." Mr. Waite spoke of his own experience and indicated an opposition to the plan of collective instruction that is sometimes advocated. "You couldn't bribe me to tell those facts to more than one child at one time," he said. The dangers of ignorance and of knowledge gained from improper and corrupt sources were referred to and by contrast the purer, nobler ideas of life of motherhood that Mr. Waite had observed from his own experiences.

"Boys are hungry for the sympathetic companionship of men," Mr Waite declared in appeal to fathers to strive to establish a mutual confidence and respect with their sons. "This applies to your own boy and also to other boys," he remarked and made it clear that the future intimacies between father and son are founded in the latter's boyhood.

MacPherson's Have The Contracts

Mr. Frank A. MacPherson of the firm of F. A. MacPherson & Co., Limited, Simcoe street, has just returned from Kingston and Tweed, where he has been for some time on business in connection with important contracts under way in both places. This firm have under way the steam heating, plumbing and electric lighting of the new large Sacred Heart church on Wolfe Island, opposite Kingston, and for the steam heating of the new large hotel property in Tweed. The work on both these contracts will engage the services of skilled workmen for some time.

SPLENDID ADDRESSES AT WOMEN'S MEETING OF BIG CONVENTION

At the women's meeting of the Sunday School Conference last night in St. Paul's Church, Miss Taggart, who was the first speaker, impressed the delegates of the great responsibility of the individual in influencing the lives of those with whom we came in contact daily. Our deeds, she said, cast a shadow about us, influencing those about either for good or evil. Typical of this is the shadow of the social workers who, with their great sympathetic hearts, go into the desolate, cheerless homes of the poor, casting their shadow of happiness, understanding just what is needed and supplying just what is necessary, spiritually and materially. All of us are not able to do miracles, but none of us can live for ourselves, for no matter how humble our walk, somebody is using us for an ideal, and we are responsible for him who "steps in our steps." The law of helpfulness demands that we live so that our lives may be a blessing, not a blight. The women of Canada should raise, individually and collectively, their standard, and help each other to live a cleaner life, so our lives may leave an influence for good in the world about us.

Mothers and Daughters.

Mrs. Bryner, in her interesting heart-to-heart talk to the delegates, hated the gradual raise in the plane of the valuaion of mothers and daughters.

Bible History.

In Bible history, beginning with Genesis, emphasis is laid upon the valuation of fathers and sons, the only mention of a daughter being made as an incidental in a calamity, and so throughout the Old Testament it was not the custom to appreciate girls. Gradually with the beginning of the New Testament, the plane of mothers and daughters was raised and the valuation lifted. The Mother of Jesus and John are appreciated. Women were exhalted by Christ Himself. Who is recorded as going about talking to women, taking compassion upon mothers, approving of their coming to Him with the little children. And so surely the valuation was gradually lifted.

New Plane.

The women of to-day should appreciate the plane to which they have risen. During the last 15 years her occupation has changed and her work which formerly bound her to the home taken over by men in the matter of such ties as bread-making and cloth-weaving, which is now done in the factories.

Ideal Relationship.

But the ideal relationship is not only in co-operation in occupation of the mother and daughter, but in companionship. Starting from the earliest effort a child makes in being the companion of her mother by helping, the ideal companionship is gradually established by the mother's sympathy, not with the result of the action of the child, but with the moive.

Lost Companionship.

All too easily is the spirit of companionship, but by a lack of sympathy in such a terrible disappointment as a shattered castle, which is built by every girl, and the wreck of which means a serious impression, at the time of that shattering the daughter needs the great sympathy, without which serious consequences are apt to arise. Again, companionship may be but a betrayed confidence in the repetition of a girlish secret entrusted to the mother.

Standards Set.

The standards of life set by the mother in earliest life will be pretty well carried out when the time comes for a daughter to make her own choices in life, so should be made high.

Influence of Women.

The influence of women is growing daily. The great victories in the liquor laws have largely been won by women who have raised their standards as the appreciation of their worth has grown.

Hebrew Women's Relief Association

An organization that is quietly doing its part to help in the distressed districts in Europe, is the Hebrew Women's Relief Association. Its branch in Peterborough has rendered material assistance, directing its energies particularly to the Jewish sufferers from the war. A short time ago the sum of $200.00 was sent by them, the proceeds of regular fees and entertainments they have put on.

On a recent evening another concert was given and a feature of it was an auction sale of parcels that had been contributed for the purpose. The sale realized the sum of $100, and, with the admission charges, brought the amount up to about $125. This with the accumulation of the members' fees, will make it possible to send another $200 to help swell the Jewish Relief Fund, a fact that a small community such as the Jewish colony in Peterborough represents, may well be proud of.

The ladies are quite encouraged by their success, especially the gratifying increase in the financial returns from the latest concert over any previous event of its kind.

CHIEF THOMPSON ON TWISTED TRAIL IN BURLEIGH WOODS

Chief Thompson lead one party o hunters out to the heart of Burleigh Township yesterday afternoon, for the big assault to-day on the unsuspecting deer. With him were Messrs. Charley White, George Yeates, and W. E Wigg. Dan Whetung is taking the party out and will remain for a couple of days. George Yeates was arrayed in all the toggery that ever Kuppenheimer might create. He was initiated to the bush last year, and in his eagerness to get back to the runaways fully endorsed "Bindle" pleasantery. "And they say nine flies," as he waited for the end of October.

The Chief's party made Haultain a little settlement in Burleigh, their headquarters. P. C. Wigg knows the country better than his George street beat, and he can travel that with his eyes closed if necessary.

THE CENTRAL POWERS AND THE MAP OF CANADA—It is not always realized how extensive the battle fronts which the Allies are holding in Europe. In this map they are shown drawn to a scale upon a map of Canada. It will be seen that the total battle fronts amount to 2,195 miles—a distance 44 miles greater than from Toronto Banff, while the battle front in the west, where Germany has massed her heaviest forces is 130 miles farther than from Toronto to Fort William.

Tommies Waded Through Mire And Bog To Victory

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)
(By William Philip Simms.)

WITH BRITISH ARMIES IN FLANDERS, Nov. 1.— A drab landscape, yellowish gray mud in undulating, oozy ridges, slimy, greenish-reddish water pools, spattered muck on naked, twisted trees and underbrush. That is Flanders to-day around Paddelbeek bog. Imagine this setting and then sticking to the picture, bedaubed figures plastered with all the prevailing muddy drab of the ground. They look like animated statues of clay. They are British Tommies. They might just as well be Germans as far as any recognition from outward appearance went, except the difference in shrapnel helmets. One can visualize the sort of fighting in the British drive in Flanders to-day, if they can imagine just the sort of a general scheme of mire and bog thus indicated. In yesterday's fighting for instance, British troops crossed the slimp, slippery, stinking, bottomless pit which is Paddelbeek bog under the fire of the Bavarians, and got what they set out to get. The barrage fire squirted a veritable wall of mud up ahead of these troops as it struck the quivering swamps. Behind it, the Tommies, holding their guns aloft, half swam through the same viscid mess. They twirted and fell as they leaped from hummock to hummock; many men lost their footing, plunging face down in the muck. Some were so inextricably mired that their comrades had to yank them out, gun barrels were choked, cartridges gummed. Through it all, the Tommie went on philosophically, but swearingly, cleaning smeared up guns and fighting tooth and nail when they came to clinches with the enemy. The British held all their gains to-day, despite Bavarian counter attacks, where the fighting at times was of the bitterest characer.

Life Boats Shelled By Submarine

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

AN ATLANTIC FORT, Nov. 1. — German submarines torpedoed and sank the British steamship East Wales, of 4,325 tons gross, off Queenstown, on October 14. One of the two U-boats which took part in the attack shelled open life boats and four of the crew perished and five others were wounded.

Red Cross Gathering At S. A. Temple

Twenty-five women of the Songster Brigade of the Temple Corps will dress in Red Cross uniform to-night and take part in the great programme given for Red Cross purposes.

The Temple Band will render several selections. Mr. F. D. Kerr will give a special address, and an offering will be taken and handed over to the committee on Red Cross work to-night. The public are cordially invited.

Pleaded That Whiskey Was Part of His Diet

"I've always drunk whisky since I was a boy," said a man in Police Court this morning by way of extenuation of his habitual two or three glasses a day.

"Then you've always been a fool," replied Magistrate Dumble with undisguised disgust to the accused, who asserted that he had been a respectable citizen of Peterborough for twelve years.

The accused was charged with being drunk in a public place yesterday. P. C. Sandbach said he had made the arrest. The man had staggered up Water Street, talking strangely to himself.

The citizen admitted having had at least two drinks of whisky, but there was nothing unaccustomed in that, for whisky was part of his diet.

"You're a working man," commented His Worship, "and can't afford to buy whisky at any time, but especially at its present prices, and when other necessities cost so much, you admit you were drinking and the constable states that you were drunk. Ten dollars, without costs, to be paid forthwith."

Big Credit For Britain in U.S.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1.—United States Treasury has made a credit of 435 million dollars to Britain to cover British expenditures in this country to the first of next year, making a total loan to Britain of one billion 860 millions, and to the Allies of three billion 566 million.

TRADING IN TITLES MAY HAVE TO END

House of Lords Passes Resolution Against Conferring Honours for Money.

LONDON, Nov. 1.—The House of Lords adopted without provision a resolution by Earl Loreburn, that when honours are conferred on others than members of the Royal Family, the Army, Navy, and permanent officials, a statement of the reasons for which such persons are recommended should be made and that the Prime Minister should make the declaration that no payment of any party fund was associated with the honour.

There was some debate on the resolution, in which Earl Curzon of Keddleston, Marquis of Lansdowne, Viscount Bryce, and the Marquis of Salisbury participated. Most of the speakers contended that the British public lives cleaner than that of most nations.

Earl Loreburn said he recently had heard of many instances of the proposed bestowal of titles in consideration of payments to party funds. One gentleman, he said, had been approached with an offer of a baronetcy for £25,000, or a knighthood for £15,000.

LITTLE CHANCE OF FURLOUGH BEING GRANTED TO CANADIANS

LONDON, Nov. 1.—The Times' Sydney correspondent says that the Australian Minister of Defence has abandoned the proposal to permit the Australian divisions earliest in the field to enjoy a furlough home, as the Imperial Government was unable to agree to similar requests by the other dominions.

This apparently puts an end to any hope there may have been that the survivors still overseas of Canada's heroic first contingent will be allowed to return home for a rest.

Big League Team One Place Free From All Pull

Only Profession That Has No "Soft Snaps," Pipp of Yankees Says

Walter Pipp, the great young first baseman and slugger of the New York Yankees, thinks baseball is the greatest business in the world for a young man.

"The reason baseball is the best, fairest and squarest of all professions and callings," said Pipp, "is because it puts success up to the young man himself.

"Pull, family prestige, money, 'glad-handing,' lodges, fraternities, luck, a thousand things, may help the young man to success in the learned professions and in commerce.

"No one and no thing save himself can help the young man in baseball.

"A father may set his son up in a great business. Mr. Rockfeller has handed, or will hand, over his business to his son, who may conduct it well.

"Not all the wealth of Rockefeller could hold a job for his son on a major league baseball team.

No Soft Jobs.

"Take the great army we are getting up. I notice that some big politicians, statesmen, if you will, have tried to get soft jobs for their sons with the troops. No doubt the young men are capable and worthy, but father's 'pull' landed them on top at once.

"If President Wilson had a son he could not keep that boy out there in the field or up there at the bat unless the chap had it in him. And if he had it in him he would not need the help of his father.

"Friends, fathers, influence, pull, can all help a young man get business, fame, some success. But nothing but his own eye and foot and arm can hold a major league job for a ball player.

"You are out there in the field when a fly ball is hit to you with a man on third base and less than two out. You must get that ball to the plate to cut off the imminent run. If they played baseball in Germany, Kaiser Bill could not help Prince Eitel Friedrich to make that throw. It is up to the young man's arm to get that ball in here. If he can't do it some fatherless lad, whose father was killed in a quarry or in a coal mine explosion, will do it and get the job.

Where "Pull" Doesn't Count.

"When I was a kid I was offered a job in a bank. The president took me around and showed me the hard working gray headed bookkeepers and tellers, working in cages.

"'Do they ever get out of these cages?' I asked. 'Are they ever promoted to be presidents or cashiers?'

"'Seldom,' said the president banker, frankly. 'To tell you the truth, young man, the good jobs go to the sons of directors and big stockholders. It is unfair, for if those boys in the cages only got a fair show they'd run all the rich men's sons out of the bank. But we must humour our stockholders.'

Sticks to Baseball.

"'Me for that old baseball game, where the best man gets the job,' said I. "So I made up my mind to be a ball player, and here I am.

"Baseball is a grand business. I think the men who have succeeded in it are to be honoured, for they succeeded not through paternal pull or money, but purely through their own worth."

180,000 PRISONERS

Berlin Claims Also that 1500 Italian Guns Were Taken

Canadian Press Despatch:

BERLIN, (Via London), Nov. 1. — Austro-German forces invading Italy have increased the number of prisoners taken to more than 180,000. They have captured 1,500 Italian guns. The foregoing information was officially announced to-day by the German War Office.

LONDON, Nov. 1.—(Bulletin.)—On the Italian front, the German statement says the Teuton 14th army yesterday gained another great victory. Portions of the Italian retreating forces made a stand at Tagliamento river. Bridgehead positions at Dimenano Godripo were captured by the Germans, and the Austro-Germans penetrated the rear guard positions of the Italians to the east of the lower Tagliamento, where they cut off and captured sixty thousand Italians.

NINE KILLED IN AIR RAID

Twenty-one Others Injured in Attack on London

Canadian Press Despatch:

LONDON, Nov. 1. — Nine persons were killed and twenty-one others were injured in the German air raid last night, according to an official statement issued to-day by the British War Department.

Try Magnesia For Stomach Trouble

It Neutralizes Acidity—Prevents Food Fermentation.

Doubtless, if you are a sufferer from indigestion, you have already tried pepsin, bismuth, soda charcoal, drugs and various digestive aids and you know these things will not cure your trouble—in some cases do not even give relief.

But before giving up hope and deciding you are a chronic dyspeptic just try the effect of a little magnesia—not the ordinary carbonate, citrate, oxide or milk, but the pure bisurated magnesia which you can obtain from practically any druggist in either powdered or tablet form. Take a teaspoonful of the powder or two compressed tablets with a little water after your next meal, and see what a difference this makes. It will instantly neutralize the dangerous, harmful acid in your stomach which now causes your food to ferment and sour, making gas, wind, flatulence, heartburn, and the bloated or heavy lumpy feeling that seems to follow most everything you eat.

You will find that, provided you take a little bisurated magnesia immediately after a meal, you can enjoy almost anything and enjoy it without any danger of pain or discomfort to follow and moreover the continued use of the bisurated magnesia cannot injure the stomach in any way so long as there are any symptoms of acid indigestion.

MAXIMUM SPREAD PROPOSED FOR MILK

OTTAWA, Nov. 1. — The Milk Committee recommended to the Food Controller that the price of milk should not be fixed but that the maximum spread be fixed affective December 1. The recommendation provides that the difference between the price paid by the distributors, f.o.b. factory, and the price charged to the consumers should not be permitted to exceed five cents a quart in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec and in the Maritime Provinces. In British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba the fixing of a maximum spread of five and one-quarter cents is recommended.

The report is an exhaustive one and represents more than three weeks' continuous work by the committee. The full report is to be published and distributed widely.

THERE IS NO DEATH.

These lines were written by Sir Edward Bulwer-Lytton:

There is no death. The stars go down
To rise upon some fairer shore;
And, bright in heaven's jeweled crown,
They shine forever more.

There is no death. The dust we tread
Shall change beneath the Summer showers
To golden grain or mellow fruit,
Or rainbow-tinted bowers.

The granite rocks disorganize
To feed the hanging moss they bear;
The leaves drink daily life
From out the viewless air.

There is no death. The leaves may fall,
The flowers may fade and pass away;
They only wait through Wintry hours
The coming of the May.

There is no death. An angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread;
He bears our best-loved things away—
And then we call them "dead."

He leaves our hearts all desolate;
He plucks our fairest, sweetest flowers;
Transported into bliss, they now
Adorn immortal bowers.

The bird-like voice, whose joyous tones
Make glad these scenes of sin and strife,
Sings now an everlasting song
Amid the trees of life.

And when he sees a smile too bright,
Or heart too pure for taint and vice,
He bears it to that world of light,
To dwell in paradise.

Born unto that undying life,
They leave us but to come again;
With joy we welcome them—the same
Except to sin and pain.

And ever near us, though unseen,
The dear immortal spirits tread;
For all the boundless universe
Is life—there are no dead.

MORE MUTINIES OCCUR IN THE GERMAN ARMY

Serious Trouble When Soldiers in Belgium Refuse to Go to Front.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 31.—According to the newspaper, Les Nouvelles, a serious mutiny has occurred among German soldiers at the Beverloo Camp in Belgium. The men, it is said, refused to go to the front and demanded their own rifles in some cases, while others fired on their officers, several of whom were wounded. The mutineers were finally mastered and removed on cattle trucks.

The frontier guard at Bruochout, according to the same authority, deserted on Oct. 15.

BOWLING On Water St. Alleys

GROCERS WIN TWO FROM EKO CLUB.

Last night the Grocers won two of the three games from the Eko Club, in a fast and intensely interesting league match. The Grocers' best spasm was in the last game, when a total of 829 was rolled; while the Eko's best spasm was in the second game when they rolled 760. The total pinnage was: Grocers, 2,223; Eko Club, 2,100. Fitzpatrick for the Grocers, again was in stellar form last night, having to his credit a 3-game total of 626, which is a League record; also having high singles of 212 and 230. Cowles was high man for the Eko Club, with a 544 total, and a 218 count in the second game. The scores were:

Grocers—
Gillespie	155	101	148	394
R. Ross	150	139	184	473

RAIDER SEEADLER SANK 25 VESSELS

A PACIFIC PORT, Oct. 31. — Count von Luckner, commander of the German raider Seeadler, told Fiji Island newspaper correspondents, when he was captured near the Fijis recently, that the raider was destroyed by fire two thousand miles from land, according to officers of a vessel which arrived here recently with details of the count's capture. Previous reports were that the vessel was wrecked on an island.

The count also asserted, according to the steamer's officers, that the Seeadler destroyed 25 steamers and sailing vessels on its cruise. Five of the captured craft, all sailing vessels, were sunk in the Pacific, he said. All the crews were sent ashore.

A favourite plan of his, he was reported to have said, was to send out a wireless message asking for the time. Someone would oblige him, and often the ship supplying the time was traced and sunk.

WEDDING BELLS

ENGLISH—CARLOW.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at St. Joseph's, Douro, on Tuesday, Oct. 16th, when Ida Isabel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Carlow, Dummer, became the bride of Mr. Frederick English, of Asphodel. The bride looked charming in a suit of brown gabardine cloth, with hat to match, and was assisted by Miss Maye English, of Asphodel, sister of the groom, while Mr. Raymond Carlow, brother of the bride, performed the duties of groomsman. After the ceremony the happy couple motored to the home of the bride's parents, where a dainty wedding breakfast was served to a large number of guests, including Father McGuire, of Douro, and Father McCarthy, of Norwood.

The groom's gift to the bride was a handsome gold wrist watch; to the bridesmaid, a pearl necklace, and to the groomsman, a set of gold cuff links. The young couple were the recipients of many beautiful and costly presents, showing the high esteem in which they are held, and their many friends join in wishing them a long and happy life of wedded bliss.

Mr. and Mrs. English will reside in Asphodel.

CADIGAN—O'CONNOR.

St. Martin's Church was the scene of a pretty wedding at 9 o'clock on Tuesday morning, when Lillian E. O'Connor was united in marriage to John J. Cadigan of Ennismore. Nuptial Mass was celebrated by Rev. Fr. McCauley in the presence of a large congregation. The bride entered the church to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by Mrs. Alex. Geary, was handsomely gowned in a Rookie shade of gabardine with hat to match, and wore a corsage bouquet of Sunset roses. She was assisted by her sister, Miss Marie O'Connor, who was neatly attired in a blue taffetta suit and wore a bouquet of American Beauty roses. Mr. Patrick Cadigan, brother of the groom, officiated as best man.

At the conclusion of the mass the happy couple motored to the home of the bride's parents, where a dainty wedding breakfast was partaken of, and where they received the congratulations of the relatives and friends present. The groom's gift to the bride was a diamond pendant, to the bridesmaid a pearl ring, and to the groomsman gold cuff links.

The happy couple left on the afternoon (C.P.R.) train for Toronto, Hamilton and points west.

They will be at home to friends after November 15th.

OBITUARY

JACK O'LANTERN CAUSED FIRE

Hallowe'en celebrations at 32 Benson Street, the home of Mr. Cuffe, caused what threatened to be a serious fire through a Jack O'Lantern igniting a window drapery in the parlour. The Fire Department's timely arrival saved the situation, and the loss will be about $25.

The department was called yesterday to a chimney fire at 221 Princess Street, the home of Mr. B. Walsh. No damage was done.

Could a Gentleman Be a Private Soldier?

"Certainly," is the answer that thousands of American boys in the ranks are making to this question. And even in England, where lines of class distinction are more firmly drawn than they are in this country, the answer is "Yes." William J. Locke in his new serial, 'The Rough Road," now running in Good Housekeeping, throws an important sidelight on what happened to class prejudice in war-time England in the following paragraph.

"You talk of enlisting, dear," said Mrs. Conover. "Does that mean as a private soldier?"

"Yes, a trooper. Why not?"

"You're a gentleman, dear. And gentlemen in the army are officers."

"Not now, my dear Sophia," said her husband, the dean. "Gentlemen are crowding into the ranks. They are setting a noble example."

VITAL STATISTICS FOR THE MONTH

The vital statistics for October, 1917, show an increased number of births from the same month last year:

	1916	1917
Births	24	38
Deaths	30	30
Marriages	16	22

17 building permits issued in October, 1916, amounted to $5,890.

11 were issued this October, amounting to $217,875, indicating a distinct speeding up in building activities about the city.

IN MEMORIAM.

In ever loving memory of our dear Mother, Mrs. Robt. Stockdale Harvey, who departed this life, Nov. 1st, 1916, in her 59th year.—"Gone, but not forgotten."

Just one year ago you left us—
How we miss your loving face;
But you left us to remember
None on earth could fill your place.

From our childhood you had loved us,
In our sickness cheered our minds;
Now your thoughts of us are ended,
And your loved ones left behind.

Yet again we hope to meet thee
When the day of life hath fled,
And in heaven with joy to greet thee,
Where no farewell tears are shed.

SCHOOL REPORT

HONOUR ROLL FOR NO. 3 SCHOOL SECTION.

We honour the boys, who, from No. 3,
To fight for our land, have gone over the sea.
Mr. Thomas Perdue has sent three brave sons,
And two of them have had their turn at the guns.
John has come back with a wound in his hand;
Dennis is fighting in No Man's Land.
Vincent Curtin and Michael Perdue
Are helping the Yankees, thus helping us, too.
Bob Calvert went over and fought with the best,
But now is in England, taking a rest.
Tom Murray is home after doing his bit;
He is not very strong, but he has not been hit.
Gordon and Harold Harrison went,
While Mr. Nurse, his son, Harold, sent.
Pat. Phelan and John Gifford did not enlist here,
But still, No. 3, as their old home, seems dear.
Harry Branch, Larry Nembolt and Frank McCue
Went from homes in our section, as so many do.
Mack. MacDonald we name as the last on our list,
We'd be glad to know of any we've missed.

It is not only in Peterborough that we have continuacious candidates. In West Lambton a Conservative has had himself nominated in opposition to Fred Pardee, nominated as a Union candidate.

Premier Stakes All On Women Who Do Battle In Trenches

Two Hundred Russian Women Soldiers Participated in Charge and All But Two of Them Were Killed—Women Exchange Shot For Shot —Food Supplies Increasing.

NO WHITE BREAD

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Upon the women of Russia Premier Kerensky, the strong man of the revolution, depends for the restoration and preservation of military discipline, which slowly is being evolved out of the chaotic conditions which prevailed among the vast armies of the new European democracy in the first enthusiastic days of freedom from rule by the Romanoffs.

That is the message brought back to this country by Norton C. Travis, who has just returned to New York after several months spent in the first line Russian trenches as a motion picture photographer with the American Red Cross Mission to Russia. No task is too great for the women soldiers, Mr. Travis declared, and where discord, disobedience and even cowardice have marked the warfare among the Russian men soldiers, they have been shamed into following when the women, only meagerly clad and but slightly better equipped, charged across a shell swept section of No Man's Land on the central western front, carrying all before them.

Two hundred Russian women soldier participated in that charge, Mr. Travis said, and all but two of them were killed. It was a fight to the death with bayonets, in which the women soldiers, their long hair shaved, wearing men's boots and trousers, hauling their own ammunition and driving their own supply waggons up to the moment the charge began, spurred on the stronger, better trained men soldiers until the charging Teuton troops gave way and abandoned their effort to take by storm the section of Russian trenches "manned" by the Russian Amazons.

Women Exchange Shot for Shot.

In this one section of trenches 1,500 Russian women, most of them drawn from the upper classes of the country and all of them volunteers, are waging warfare shot for shot alongside the Russian men soldiers. Just behind the first line trenches in the same section 5,000 more eager women fighters are in training and have sacrificed home, family and luxuries for the stern realities of fighting. Many of them have been killed. More of them have been wounded, but they have borne their hardships with considerably less complaining than the thousands of men in the same armies, according to Mr. Travis.

"These women—some of them little more than girls—are doing their full share of the fighting," said Mr. Travis. "They are in the first line trenches. They are not mixed with the men, but are in separate sections, with men in the trench sections on either side of them. They pitch their own camps. They dig their own trench sections. They build their own barbed wire entanglements. They haul their own shells and other ammunition. They take care of their own camps. They conduct their own commissary departments, prepare their own food and carry their own dead and wounded out of the trenches. Their spirit is better than that of the men. They are real fighters.

"Although conditions have improved greatly, the same could not always be said of the men. They have received officers' commands by holding conferences to determine whether the commands would be obeyed. It has frequently happened that officers who tried to enforce obedience to their orders were killed by their own men. The men however, have taken on a new spirit as a result of the example set for the women fighters."

Mr. Travis said the charge in which all but two of two hundred women soldiers were killed occurred in June last, just after the first Russian women soldiers reached the firing line. They went "over the top," he said, in the most approved style, neither asking nor receiving quarter, and fought valiantly in the lead of the companies of men until the latter, taking courage at the task performed by the women, renewed the fight and held the enemy in check.

Food and Supplies Increasing.

Army supplies are moving forward rapidly in great volume in Russia now, Mr. Travis said. The railroads are being whipped into shape and slowly the discipline that almost entirely disappeared immediately following the revolutionary fighting is returning to make the great Russian machine a formidable quantity. Not less than 35,000,000 Russians now are under arms, he said, according to the latest estimates in Petrograd.

Russia's food problem is being relieved rapidly, although it is still serious, Mr. Travis declared. He said that the wheat supply is rigidly conserved, so that in the larger cities, like Petrograd, and Moscow, only a black bread made from bran may be procured. No white bread is being eaten there, he said. Neither milk nor sugar is being served in homes or hotels. Horse meat is a regular item on hotel menus, and vegetables are seen but infrequently, an occasional carrot or portion of cauliflower being considered a rare treat in all of the large centres of population.

Agitators of the I.W.W. type, and some of them men who actually were identified with that organization in this country, Mr. Travis said, have invaded Russia and are doing everything that they can to thwart the success of the democratic government. Many of these agitators went to Russia from America, Mr. Travis said, and are spreading their gospel of unrest in Petrograd, Moscow and all of the other large Russian cities. He said that, like local soapbox orators, they are misrepresenting conditions in America, are declaring the government here is a complete failure so far as the working classes are concerned and that the only purpose of America in the war is to obtain Russian territory for the capitalistic class of America, which, they are declaring, compelled this country to enter the war.

Dear Mary,

Do you ever think how fortunate we are to have a store here in our own city where we can go and buy what we need for our homes and who arrange the payments to suit us.

I'll bet there are lots of people who wonder how we fix up our homes so nicely when they know our husbands are not rich men. Mrs. S— asked me yesterday where we got our nic. furniture—she was wise, wasn't she?

Au revoir—Helen

P.S.—I told her she'd get good furniture and rugs, low prices and easy terms at

Thirty Thousand Germans Killed

Two Generals of Divisions Included in Casualties—Holding Enemy in Check

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2. — Thirty thousand German soldiers, including two Generals of divisions, were killed in the great battle of the Bainsizza Plateau, according to cabled reports received here to-day. Same report declares Cadorna is now checking the enemy's advance. The Italian forces in northern Italy have effected the withdrawal on the line of Tagliamento with a third army nearly complete. The Italians are still checking the Austro- German advance:

Must Lay Plans For Long War

Submarine Losses Have Been very Heavy—British Navy Increases in Power

LONDON, Oct. 2.—Speaking in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon the First Lord of the Admiralty, Eric Geddes, declared that Germany lost as many submarines in the last three months as in the whole of 1916. Between forty and fifty per cent. of the submarines operating in the North Sea, Arctic and Atlantic since the beginning of the war have been sunk. "We must lay plans for a long war," said Sir Eric Geddes. "I see no signs of its being a short one." The British Navy displacement has increased 71 per cent. in power since 1914.

GERMAN WARSHIP SUNK.

COPENHAGEN, Nov 2. — A German warship was sunk in the Sound by striking a mine, according to a despatch from Malone, Sweden.

"THE PAINTED WOMAN"
By FREDERIC ARNOLD KUMMER

CHAPTER XVI.

Ramona faced the triumphant glances of the Portuguese, and realized that his long pursuit of her had ended in success. Her gaze wandered helplessly toward Barton. The latter stood, his hands bound, his face distorted with grief and despair. The sight of the woman he loved, bargained for as one might have bargained for a choice bit of horseflesh, filled him with incredible rage, yet he could do nothing to prevent it, to save her from the fate which now confronted her. His anger bade him act, yet he well knew that any action on his part would be futile. Long Rodgers, Graves, stood close at hand, their hands upon the hilts of their swords. The instant death that would inevitably follow any hostile movement on his part could avail the girl nothing. Alive he might still in some way aid her. With his emotions ground between the millstones of self-control, he awaited the next scene in this heartbreaking drama.

Ramona, reading the hopelessness in his eyes, turned once more to the Portugee and beng upon him a long and searching glance. With quick intuition she comprehended both the lustful nature of the man, and beneath it, a certain quality of cowardice of which he himself was perhaps not aware. Upon these two she determined to play. Very quietly, very earnestly, she spoke to him.

"Wait Portugee," she said, drawing the knife from beneath the folds of her cloak. "I have something to say to you."

At sight of the weapon the buccaneer flamed into sudden rage.

"Put down that knife, girl," he cried. "Put down. I've bought you fair. You belong to me." As he spoke he made a quick movement toward her, as though to seize the knife and tear it from her grasp.

The element of cowardice upon which Ramona had counted caused him to pause. He looked at the gleaming knife, the burning eyes of the woman before him, and hesitated.

Her face was almost expressionless, in spite of her emotions. Her voice smooth and even, betrayed by scarcely a tremor the agitation of her soul.

"Not yet," she said, very slowly. "Better, Portugee, to listen to what I have to say or you will have naught to show for your doubloons but the dead body of me."

He realized her intention now for she had turned the point toward her own breast and he knew that to approach a step nearer would send it into her heart.

"What do you want?" he asked in haste. Her manner left no doubt as to her determination. He sensed that, knew that she was in bitter earnest. A great fear that he might lose her caused him to draw back. Tench and the others, amused by the spectacle, laughed aloud.

"First," said she girl, steadily, "tell me your purpose concerning these men." Her eyes swept the figures of the three Englishmen along the wall.

"To hang the scoundrels."

"For killing the Firebrand?" She asked the question without emotion, quite impersonally, in the manner of one judging.

"God's blood! What else?"

"They did not kill him. You will believe me, Master Tench?"

Her eyes sought the latter's gnarled face.

"Who did, then?" the old man asked. "Tell me that."

"I did." The words came very softly, almost in a whisper.

There was a moment of astonishment among the buccaneers. Barton's voice rose in protest, but his captors quickly silenced him.

"You?" asked Tench, incredulously.

"Yes. He would have beaten me. I killed him."

"Then, by my soul, you should die for it," Tench roared. "What say you, lads?" He turned to his companions; they came toward the girl with threatening gestures.

"But the Portugee," she said quietly. "He has bought me."

"Ay, One Eye. I've bought her, and paid you twenty good doubloons. You'll not touch the woman now. She is mine."

Long Rodgers fell back To his stolid mind a bargain once consummated remained a bargain.

"By, God, captain!" he exclaimed. "The Portugee's right."

Tench drove the cutlass back into its scabbard with an oath.

"So be it," he said. "I'll not go back on my word."

Without a momen't hesitation, Ramona turned to him.

"Master Tench," she said, "you'll let these men go free. Now that I have cleared them of any guilt, you'll let them go." She bent eagerly toward him, her eyes pleading.

"What matters a lean parson more or less" the Portugee muttered. "Let them go."

"Ay, let them go free, Portugee, or you'll have none of me." She pressed the knife still more closely to her breast; her eyes were those of a fanatic. The Portugee trembled.

"Stop, girl!" he cried. "What would you do?"

"Let these men depart in peace, or you'll know right well. You want me, Portugee. You want my poor body for yourself. In one way only shall you have me. Free these men, or I'll kill myself before ever you lay hands upon me."

Tench seeing his companion's confusion, burst into a hard laugh.

"A bad bargain you seem to have made, Portugee," he jeered. "'Fore God, the wench has the whip hand of you. Did I not say she had spirit?"

The Portugee was all for compromise now. He turned to Tench with a scowl of annoyance.

"What say you, One Eye?" he exclaimed. "Shall we let the psalm-singing rascals go?"

"Wherefore?"

"I want the woman."

"Then by heaven, why don't you take her? Do you need help in your wooing?" He slapped the Portugee heavily upon the back, roaring the while with laughter. "It seems that you sweet dove has claws."

Ramona turned to him with quick appreciation of his humor.

"Master Tench," she said very earnestly, "what I ask is fair and right. My body is my own, though this Portugal dog may think that his doubloons have bought it. I offer it to him to redeem these men out of their captivity. They are good Englishmen, like yourself, and loyal servants of the king. Henry Morgan, your leader, boasts that he draws no sword, save against the power of Spain. You have no private quarrel with these men. They had naught to do with the Firebrand's death. I swear it to you before heaven. Let them go, and I surrender myself. Otherwise"—she paused and with a significant gesture pressed the knife against her breast. Its point cut through the thin covering of her nightdress and pierced the tender skin beneath.

"By Saint Bartholomew, girl," the old man cried, "I like your spirit!"

"Let the blackcoats go," said Long Rodgers, sharing his leader's admiration. "The girl speaks truth."

"Well, Portugee, what say you?" Tench asked, regarding his companion with a certain amusement.

"Let the woman swear to do as she says, and I agree."

"Ay, I doubt it. Swear to yield to me, and we let them go."

"By the blessed Virgin, I swear it," exclaimed the girl, her eyes wet with tears.

"The risk is yours, Portugee," remarked Tench, with a laugh.

"Has not the girl sworn?"

"I put no faith in women's oaths, but so be it." He turned toward Barton and his companions. "Buzzard," he cried. "Let the snivelling parsons go."

Graves, sword in hand, proceeded to cut the ropes that bound the captives' wrists.

"Out with you," he cried, urging them toward the gate. "Lose no time as you value your lives." His sword thrusts were rather more than half in earnest.

Willoughy and Cotton, glad to thus escape with their lives, lose no time in making their way out of the garden. Barton, however, hesitated. It seemed to him contemptible to take his life at such a cost.

"Ramona," he cried and would have addressed her, had not Tench interrupted him with a roar of anger.

"Out with you!—out I say!" he cried, "and the Lord help you if you tarry on the way. Out!" With thrusts of his cutlass he drove them through the gate. Even then Barton would not have gone, had not his companions fairly dragged him away. Grasping him by the arms, they almost carried the heart broken man from the garden. They realized, if he did not, the futility of further resistance.

Tench drove his cutlass back into its scabbard.

"A good riddance by my soul! he cried. "These dry rascals have given me a noble thirst. Come, Portugee; let's inside and crack a bottle of rum.

"Presently One Eye," said the latter, his eyes upon Ramona. "Just now I have business here."

"Suit yourself. I wish you luck." He grinned at his companions. "Come—lads. Shall we leave the lovers to themselves?" His roars of laughter filled the garden. A moment later he had disappeared within the house, with Graves, Long Rodgers and De Rocheville at his heels.

The Portugee felt easier now. He believed that he had handled a difficult situation with resource and skill. He turned to Ramona—even took a step in her direction. His manner of hesitation was gone, his scowl replaced by a self-satisfied smile.

"Now, girl," he said, "hold to your oath. Put down your knife. You belong to me."

She had not moved. With cat-like wariness she observed his every movement.

"Yes," she replied, her voice exhibiting so silk-like a quality that a wiser man might well have hesitated before approaching her. "I belong to you. Yet you would do well to think twice before you take me."

He was much astonished by this, having thought the matter settled.

"Think," he exclaimed. "Carramba—I can think of nothing but the beauty of you, which I mean shortly to hold in my arms. Down with the knife, I say."

Again he started toward her, but some curious prescience of danger caused him to hesitate. "Do as I bid you, girl!" he commanded.

"Softly, Portugee. I have yet more to say to you."

"Santa Maria! What is there to say?" His voice was troubled, uncertain.

"You had better let me alone, Portugee. I warn you."

"Warn me," he muttered. "Of what?"

"Of taking me in your arms, as you have a mind to do. It were better for no man to touch me now, save him I love."

"You have sworn——"

"Ay. I have sworn, and I shall hold to my oath. I shall yield myself to you as I have bargained. You can take me—you can take my poor body, as you wish it. See—it is beautiful, is it not?" In a flash she cast from her the scarlet cloak and stood before him in the clinging silk of her nightdress, very beautiful, very alluring. "You can take me, Portugee, and do with me as you will. I have sworn and I shall hold to my bargain." With a

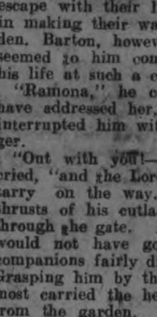
WOMAN A PHYSICAL WRECK

Tells in Following Letter How She Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.



Milwaukee, Wis. — "Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was a physical wreck. I had been going to a doctor for several years but he did me no good. A friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I decided to give it a fair trial, and it gave me relief from bearing down pains which had been so bad that I would have to lie down. I also used the Sanative Wash and it has done me a great deal of good, and I am not troubled with a weakness any more."—Mrs. P. L. BELL, 1299 Booth Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

The most successful remedy for woman's ills is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It has stood the test for forty years, which would be impossible if it did not have genuine merit.

FAMOUS CHURCH BURNED.

Huns Looted Beautiful Cathedral of St. Quentin.

While not of such world-wide fame as the Cathedral of Rheims, and although it lacks the spectacular historic associations of the great structure which saw the culmination of Joan of Arc's efforts, the Collegiate Church of St. Quentin, so recently ravaged by the Germans, is one of the finest Gothic structures in all France. The St. Quentin structure was burned after it had been stripped of its art treasures by the invading vandals.

Situated to the east of the Hotel de Ville, the Church of St. Quentin suffers from the fact that it is (or was) closely surrounded by numerous smaller and unattractive buildings, making it impossible to gain a comprehensive view of the structure. Unlike the cathedral at Rheims, whose west facade was its chief glory, the Church of St. Quentin has no west facade, but terminates in this direction with a tower and a portal of Romanesque architecture. The statues which formerly decorated the portal have disappeared.

One of the odd features of this great structure, which is 370 feet long and 130 feet high, is its double transepts, rarely found in Gothic churches.

The choir of the church closely resembled that of the Rheims cathedral, and was quite elaborately decorated with polychromic paintings, while in bas relief on the beautiful choir screen was depicted the story of the martyrdom of St. Quentin.

It took four centuries to complete the St. Quentin Cathedral and perhaps four hours to destroy it. Work began in 1114, and the choir was completed in 1257. The nave was finished 200 years later, and the south portal in 1477.

Strikingly beautiful features of the building were the seven apsidal chapels and the wonderful stained glass windows in the principal transept.

In the eleventh century crypt (rebuilt in the thirteenth century) were the tombs and stone sarcophagi of St. Quentin and his fellow martyrs, Victoricus and Gentianus. Until Caius Quintinus came to preach Christianity here in the third century and suffered death at the hands of the prefect Rectius Varus the town was known as Augusta Veromanduorum.

In destroying the church the Germans in all probability also razed Lenglet's splendid statue of Quentin de la Tour, which stood immediately in front of the church. De la Tour was the famous pastelist, a native son of St. Quentin, who received the title of "Painter to the King" in 1750 and who retired to this city at the age of 80 to spend the remaining four years of his life in the distribution of his fortune to the worthy charities of the community. This La Tour was no relation, however, to that matchless soldier, La Tour D'Auvergne, whose singular bravery and modesty won from Napoleon the title of "First Grenadier of France," and whose memory is still kept alive in his regiment of the guards, the Forty-sixth, by having his name called at all parades when a non-commissioned officer answers, "Mort au champs d'honneur." This is in compliance with a decree issued by Napoleon more than a century ago.

Platitudinous Ponderosity.

In promulgating your esoteric cogitations, or articulating your superficial sentimentalities, and amicable, philosophical or phychological observations, beware of platitudinous ponderosity.

Let your conversational communications possess a clarified concisiveness, a compacted comprehensibility, a coalescent consistency, and a concatenated cogency.

Eschew all conglomerations of flatulent garrulity, junjune babblement and asinine affectation.

Let your extemporaneous descantings and unpremeditated expatiations have intelligibility and veracious vivacity, without rhodomontade or thrashonical bombast.

Sedulously avoid all polysyllabic profundity, pompous prolixity, psittaceous bacinity, ventriloquial verbosity and vaniloquent rapidity.

Shun double entendres, pestiferous profanity, obscurant or apparent.

TO CURE DYSPEPSIA
IT ISN'T NECESSARY

The sufferer from dyspepsia and indigestion who has to pick and choose his food, is the most miserable of all mankind.

Even the little he does eat causes such torture, and is digested so imperfectly that it does him little good.

What dyspeptics need is not dieting, or artificial digestants, but something that will put their stomach right so it will manufacture its own digestive ferments.

For forty years now Burdock Blood Bitters has been making weak stomachs strong, and curing severe cases of dyspepsia and indigestion that other remedies were powerless to reach.

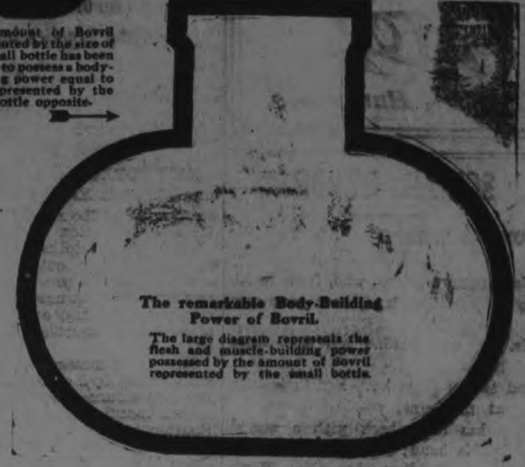
It restores the stomach to a normal healthy condition so that the food no longer causes distress, but is thoroughly digested and assimilated, and goes on its way making rich, red blood.

Mrs. Henry Shaw, Campbellton, N.B., writes: "I was for five years troubled with a weak stomach, and could not eat any food that would agree with me. I tried different medicines, but could not get cured. A friend advised me to take Burdock Blood Bitters. I took four bottles, and now I am in perfect health."

B.B.B. is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

The remarkable
Body-Building Power of BOVRIL
as proved by the independent physiological feeding experiments reported to the British Medical Association.

The amount of Bovril represented by the size of this small bottle has been proved to possess a body-building power equal to that represented by the large bottle opposite.



In every case
an addition of Bovril to the regular diet showed the body-building power of Bovril to be from 10 to 20 times the amount taken.

Bovril, therefore, not only nourishes, but makes other foods nourish when without it they would fail to do so.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

FRIDAY, NOV. 2, 1917

EVERYBODY CONCERNED.

At the Win-the-war League meeting, Mr. Ben Gould, of Toronto, declared: "Unless we win the war nothing else matters," a statement substantially true in that all our interests, all our welfare, all our liberties, ad all our democratic institutions are at stake, and demand all our efforts for their protection. This is a paraphrase of the sentiment enunciated in Parliament by Sir Wilfrid Laurier—"if Germany wins nothing else matters." Words cannot picture the conditions that would obtain in Canada if Germany won in her ambition of "world domination." The spirit of brutality and oppression and suppression she declares and has carried out where she has had the power, shows what is to be expected were she to obtain the controlling hand, which she will do unless her plans are thwarted.

At the beginning of the war, Germany declared that she was fighting for her "place in the sun," for "the freedom of the seas." As her spirit flashes out these times, her aims are amplified; "a place in the sun" means monopoly of the sea for autocracy; and "freedom of the seas" means "domination of the seas." Rule by right of brute force is the German method and it will be applied whenever and wherever Germany gets the power to apply its diabolical spirit. The fortunes, the happiness, the freedom of the humblest person in Canada, is at stake. They will disappear and be replaced by German ruthlessness and German atrocity, of oppression and the crushing of individual and collective freedom.

This condition brings into active interest and concern in Canada's war-waging every element of our people. Our success in helping win the war is imperilled by a few miserable politicians, who while the liberty and welfare of Canada and the world are trembling in the balance are throwing their whole souls into scheming for personal and partizan advantages, deluding themselves, as they are trying to delude the world, with the belief that they are the only true patriots, and that unless they and their party win "nothing else matters."

This war winning is the concern of everybody, and everybody can, and is called upon, to do his or her share in helping win the war. Every Red Cross bandage rolled, every dollar contributed to the Red Cross Fund, every dollar subscribed to the Victory Loan, is an aid in defeating Germany, and saving Canada and civilization. In this view, and in these circumstances, there is no exemption from war service. Everybody, even the newsboy, with his $1.00 contribution, helps. With this idea fixed in our minds, there should be universal concentration of effort to do everything possible to add to war-winning work.

More falls to the people, for at present the activities of the politicians are, in large degree, centred upon the winning of personal and party advantage rather than upon winning the war. The Union Government is not rapidly producing the unity of sentiment and effort that its name should imply. So much more, therefore falls upon the people.

If fusion efforts to reconcile candidates continue to fail, as they are doing, very obviously we shall have political confusion.

MORE ABOUT MARGARINE.

The chief object, it is to be assumed, of removing the prohibition of the import of margarine, and permitting its manufacture in Canada, is to provide those who cannot afford to, and will not, buy butter at present prices, access to a cheaper and wholesome and satisfactory substitute. A great deal of opposition is shown to this action by farming and dairy interests, or by persons assuming to speak for them.

It seems that there is little fear that the interess of either will be seriously injured. If margarine proves to be as wholesome, clean, palatable and cheap as it is represented to be, the sale of it, if the prices are markedly below that of butter, will possibly have the effect of reducing the price of butter. Those who can afford to buy butter will probably continue to buy it and there will be no loss from the purchase of margarine by those who cannot afford to buy butter. Besides we are told by experts that in the manufacture of margarine a large proportion of milk is used. It is assumed that this may in part be skimmed milk, for the fats in margarine are animal fats apart from butter fats. So that there will be a new market for milk and more cream will be released for the market.

J. HAVELOOK WILSON, C.B.,
General President of the National Sailors' and Firemen's Union of Great Britain and Ireland.

There does not seem, if the facts are as represented, any great danger to the farming and dairying interests suffering from margarine. It will not be a serious competitor for it will be chiefly bought by those who cannot afford to buy butter. Stringent precautions surround the manufacture and sale of margarine—it must be made under government supervision; must not be handled by creamery men; the Food Controller is to regulate its price; packages must be plainly marked; public eating houses, who serve margarine must state the fact on prominent placards, and contravention of government regulations is punishable by fine and imprisonment.

There appears to be a suspicion of a political element in the introduction of margarine. A writer in the Farmers' Sun says strong deputations representing dairy interests, were "turned down" by the government, and concludes that "some powerful interest was behind the scenes pulling the strings." This cannot possibly be. We have a new government, a Union Government, organized to cut all political strings and to administer national affairs with a single eye to the public welfare, without fear, favour or affection.

We must expect situations that demand some sacrifice. The farmers are getting, what city folks consider, high prices. Indeed the price of butter is so high that thousands cannot buy it. If the introduction of margarine helps these persons to have even a substitute for butter on their bread, which must otherwise be butterless; and if margarine makes a trifling difference in the price of butter—with a new market for milk—then what is the farmer's loss will be the poor man's gain. And in this terrible conflict of human interests, in this period of universal sacrifice, if the obligations of mutual helpfulness and slight sacrifice are not recognized, then is the fight for human justice and human right and right relations, being waged in vain.

The Germans, who expected a winter lull of hammering, so that they could concoct new schemes of peace, will have to face the ceaseless hammering o Haig and Currie, of Petain and Joffre, and Pershing—"move on" is the motto.

HARKING BACK.

The Canadian Northern deal was one of the dark sins charged against the Borden Government, and trustful optimists thought that with a new Union Government hypothetically non-partizan, partizan ambitions and schemes would be left behind. It was to be a case of "old things have passed away; behold all things have become new."

Yet we have the new Union Government still standing by the friends of the "big interests," as some farming and dairy interests opposed to margarine assert. We have the new government carrying out in Senate appointments the partizan promises of pap to party favourites made by the late government.

Now we have the old government bogies come back. Thousands were spent by the old government on a commission to investigate railway conditions. The commission reported that the sixty millions C.N.R. stock was worthless—"with no value in equity of redemption." Now we have the new Union Government passing an order-in-council fixing a maximum possible value for a stock which out value, thus taking the matter out of the hands of the Royal Commission, obligingly appointed in the interest of Toronto "Big Interests," to discover, if possible a value for a stock which two capable and intelligent railway experts had declared had no value. Isn't the Union Government backfiring a little too much for a strictly non-partizan win-the-war government, which is asking everybody to sink the party, they still cling too in spots?

HEALTH AND HOUSE SCREENS

One Effective Way to Foil the Flies and Mosquitoes.

It is a duty to protect the health of the home and to fight any peril that may menace it. You may have doubts or become discouraged when it comes to cleaning up and keeping so clean that you won't have flies, or when you try to keep them down by poisoning or trapping, but there's one means of protecting yourself against flies that is safe and effective. This is thorough screening. Doors, windows and porches, upstairs and downstairs, should be thoroughly screened in summer for the comfort of the home and the health of the family. Mosquitoes are a health menace as well as flies, and thorough screening protects against both.

A few years ago screening was considered almost as ineffective as a means of protecting against flies as poisoning, disinfecting and a few feeble efforts at cleaning up. None of these methods prohibited flies. They apparently continued to come in their usual large number. But the trouble was we did not know how to properly use screens. Then only the kitchen and dining room doors and windows were screened, while the doors and windows of the other part of the house were left unprotected.

Later we found that not only all the openings to the house must have screens in them, but that they must fit and be made so fly tight that no fly could enter. This was found more effective. But not until the porches were screened, particularly the back porch, where most of the food was handled, did we come to know the real safety and comfort that lay behind screened doors, windows and porches.—Exchange.

Fruit Acids as Mouth Cleansers.

Unless the teeth are very badly damaged or eroded the acids of fruit, such as that contained in grapes, oranges, lemons or apples, will be found to be a saisfactory mouth wash. The advice of a dentist should be sought, however, to determine the condition of the teeth and to decide whether an alkaline or acid wash is preferable for the individual case. But there is no question, according to the Popular Science Monthly, as to the efficacy of the food acids in removing quickly and entirely the mucous films that are the first stages of dental decay.

An apple eaten in the evening will cleanse the teeth mechanically and chemically and if followed by vigorous brushing will protect them from bacteria during the night.

Automatic Cooking Boxes.

Automatic cooking boxes were in general use among the Hebrews nearly 2,000 years ago. The Greek and Roman writers frequently refer to them. In his edition of "Juvenile," for example, Friedlander cites a commentator who refers to "the Jews who a day before the Sabbath put their viands hot into the cooking boxes, the pots being covered with napkins and wrapped about with hay, so that they may have warm food on the Sabbath."

London Woman Preacher.

The interesting fact that the City Temple in London is to have a woman as pulpit assistant was announced at a recent meeting of the congregation. In stating that Miss Maude Royden had accepted an invitation to occupy the post, Dr. Fort Newton, who only recently arrived in England from the United States to take over the charge of the City Temple, said that a new day had dawned for women. She had a new outlook and new obligations, not only because of the war, but because of her approaching political enfranchisement. We want the woman point of view, he said, the woman insight, the woman counsel. And he added that he looked forward to the help Miss Royden would be able to give, more especially to the young women of the congregation. Miss Maude Royden was at one time an active member of the National Union of Women's Suffrage Societies, and was a familiar figure on suffrage platforms; she also for some time edited The Common Cause, the organ of the N. U. W. S. S. In her views, which she has put forward in several books, she is pronouncedly democratic. She is also an eloquent and persuasive speaker and has a saving sense of humor.

How Many Bonds Will You Buy?

Every Canadian's conscience will shortly be on trial. Figuratively speaking, there will be looking on the eyes of the world; but even more important, there will be looking on the eyes of Canada's Soldiers—and wives, widows and mothers with faces hallowed by sorrow's impress.

Comes up a salaried man. I'll take $1,000. I was going to buy a car for the family, but Canada needs money more than we need the car, so I'll subscribe $1,000.

Comes up a storekeeper. Give me $2,000. It seems only right for me to back up the workers by loaning my "bit" to the Government, who, as I understand it, will pay it out again, through our farms and industries, to the workers.

Comes up a manufacturer. I'll subscribe $10,000. I was going to extend the plant, but it can wait. My boy's "over there," and I guess he'd rather I backed him up this way than have acres of plant when he comes home.

Comes up the wage-earner. I'll buy $200 worth. Not much, I know—but it's all I have—and Canada is welcome to the loan of it.

Here comes a farmer. Give me $1,000. Canada helps me to sell my crops, so here's where I return the help.

Comes up the young man. Give me $150. Wish I hadn't been so thoughtless as to spend most all I have earned. Here's where I really start saving!

Comes up the stenographer. I'll subscribe $100. I was going to take music lessons this winter, but—oh, never mind—I'll subscribe $100.

Comes up a maid. I'll take a $50 Bond. I was going to buy some furs, but—well, my sweetheart's over in France, and I think he'd be happy if he knew I was doing this.

The sums suggested may be a misfit in your case—but yours is the conscience which must be on trial, and which must answer. Be sure your self-denial will not appear little compared with that now being made by your sons and brothers in France and Flanders. Get ready to buy Canada's Victory Bonds, and—

Buy to the Limit

Sunday School Lesson Questions

Nov. 4, 1917.

Defeat through Drunkenness: — (World's Temperance Sunday) — I. Kings, 20:1-21.

Golden Text: Let not him that girdeth on his armour boast himself as he that putteth it off. I. Kings 20: 11.

1. Verses 1-3: What motives for the most part have causer the great historic wars of so-called civilized people?

2. When a strong nation wants to put neighboring nations under tribute and takes years to prepare to conquer them, why is it right or wrong for the other strong nations of the earth to quietly stand aside, and see it done?

3. Verses 4-11. When a weaker nation has made many humiliating concessions to an aggressive and strong nation and its territory is being invaded, what is the duty of the weaker nation and that of the other strong nations?

4. Verse 12. Benhaded was drunk when he decided to carry out his threat to sack the city of Samaria; what ruler of a nation who has ever declared an unrighteous war has not been under the spell of some evil influence? Give your reasons.

5. Why is a king or a president, or a business man, when under the influence of drink, in no fit condition to wisely decide on vital issues?

6. What is the general effect of drinking on kings, princes, and presidents?

7. What battles can you mention that have been lost, or wars jeopardized through drink?

8. Verse 12. Would this war, which was so disastrous to Benhadad, likely have taken place if he had not been influenced by drink?

9. Verses 13, 14. How did this prophet know in advance that Ahab was going to conquer the powerful Benhaded?

10. Which army is more likely to win in a battle, and why, one of ten thousand with its officers partially drunk, or one of five thousand with its officers sober, other things being equal?

11. What part does God, or the laws of God, play in modern warfare?

(This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by the members of the club.)

12. Verses 15, 16. What forces were working in favour of Ahab, and what forces working against Benhades?

13. What are the chances for a man founding a happy family, conducting a successful business, or winning in war, if he "drinks himself drunk," and consorts with men who drink?

14. What proportion of sensuous men attain distinction and hold the love and confidence of the community?

15. Verses 17, 1c. Wherein were the instructions of Benhaded worthy of a drunken man?

16. If Benhaded had been sober, what would have been his probable instructions?

17. How does drink influence the judgment, the motives, and the ambitions of men?

18. Verses 19-21. What would you say was the chief cause of the defeat of the Syrians?

19. There are many foes to-day which conquer and defeat men, including strong drink. Say which you consider the most dangerous, and why?

20. How many do you know who have been defeated by strong drink, and how many do you know who have been injured by total abstinence?

PETAIN TO MAKE ATTACK?

Bombardment in Laon Sector May Be A Preliminary.

NEW YORK, Oct. 31.—The Associated Press war review says: In the Aisne region, on the French front, General Petain apparently is preparing to renew his attack southwest of Laon, where he scored his recent brilliant advance. Berlin yesterday reported a concentrated fire of "powerful proportions" from the French guns in this area, while today Paris announces an artillery battle in progress there. In the Argonne a German surprise attack was repulsed.

CONSUMPTION OF BEEF PROHIBITED BY SPRING.

Dr. Robertson Predicts it—Says he will Try to have Ice Cream Banned.

Calgary. — Dr. J. W. Robertson, chief adviser to Food Controller Hanna, speaking in the Central Methodist Church, predicted that before next spring the consumption of beef would be prohibited. He also promised to use his influence to secure the prohibition of the manufacture of ice cream, although at the same time he predicted that to abolish ice cream would increase the price of milk. He gave as a reason why the killing of young animals was not forbidden that it takes two years for them to grow, and will not affect the quantity of meat now.

STUDENTS TO DIG ROOTS FOR FARMERS.

Kingston. — Students of Queen's University and the Kingston Collegiate Institute, are going out into the rural districts around here on Saturday to help the farmers gather in their potatoes and other root crops. The farmers are to meet the students early in the morning with autos. The help problem is being solved by the Board of Trade, in conjunction with the local Agricultural Representative. Fields of potatoes in this district yet remain undug.

DOING SHARE OF FIGHTING.

British in France Are Six to One, as Compared With Overseas Troops

It has been a favorite device of German sympathizers to assert that the British were not doing their fair share of the fighting and were, in fact, compelling others to fight for them, notably the colonial troops. That this was a lie, like the sneer that England would fight to the last Frenchman, anyone with a knowledge of population statistics could see.

It is the habit of the British to overdo the contempt with which they regard anything that, like this, looks like foul fighting, and it is satisfactory to find they have at last published trustworthy figures on the proportions of the forces contributed by the various parts of the empire. From these figures it appears that at the present moment the British troops in France are six to one, as compared with all overseas troops and this includes Canadians, New Zealanders, Australians, and South Africans, with small but useful contributions from the crown colonies.

And the charge that the overseas troops are being used for the most dangerous work is flatly contradicted by the casualty statistics. In this case the proportion is still higher. Throughout the war on the western front, the casualties have been in the proportion of 6.5 British to 1 overseas. It is forgotten that there is a romantic association and a news value about the Canadian volunteer forces; and that their operations, therefore, are far better advertised than those of battalions from Shropshire or Norfolk. No one doubts the gallantry of the Canadians least of all the Germans, but the figures tell their own tale.

Bearing in mind the proportion of casualties throughout the war, it is of record in the Ypres-Lens fighting since July 31 that the casualties have been nine British to one colonial. Moreover, if it be suggested that the Scotch and Irish, admirably as they have done their work, are being used as a screen by the English, it is only necessary to compare the population figures of the United Kingdom and to remember that conscription does not apply to Ireland, while it does apply to Great Britain.

The Death of "Minnie."

"Minnie" is a very forward young lady who lives as a rule in German front-line trenches. She has no pretensions at all to beauty. She is for use, not for ornament. She is a trench gun, and her projectiles remind one of plum puddings attached to sticks. They fly very irregularly, but burst very regularly in that part of No Man's Land farthest removed from Minnie's temporary lodging.

Just before the latest push around Ypres there was a particular Minnie located a few miles from Ypres which was more than usually a nuisance. The British trench was not well sited, nor very well protected. Consequently, when Minnie was active she made things very uncomfortable for the occupants of that British trench. Moreover, she had no regular habits, she worked on no plan, lady-like she did just about as she wished.

The young British subalterns hated her with a persistent, pervading hatred, and concocted many schemes for her undoing, but to no avail. But one night chance brought into the trench a very irritable old artillery officer, just as Minnie was active. One of Minnie's puddings soiled his boots, and thereby aroused in him a grim determination to devote himself to her destruction.

He stayed in the trench all that night, studying Minnie's location and characteristics, and on the morrow he returned, followed by his orderly, uncoiling wire as he walked. At the trench end of the wire a temporary telephone was fixed. The far end of the wire led back a mile and a half to a battery of field artillery.

Along about noon Minnie opened up for her midday strafe. Promptly the artillery officer verified his observations of the night before and spoke a few figures into the telephone. A minute later a loud boom announced the arrival of a British shell just across on the other side of No Man's Land. The British officer swore softly, and spoke again into the telephone. The first shell had been at least 30 yards off.—The second was perhaps 20 yards on the other side. Again the officer spoke into the telephone, and for the third time the gun spoke. "Bullseye," sang the officer into the telephone, and packed up his belongings in business-like fashion. Minnie was deceased.

The Stones of the Pyramids.

There are blocks of stone in the Pyramids which weigh three or four times as much as the obelisk on the London Embankment. There is one stone the weight of which is estimated at eight hundred and eighty tons. There are stones thirty feet in length which fit so closely together that a penknife may be run over the surface without discovering the break between them; yet they are not laid with mortar. English builders have no machinery so perfect that it will make two surfaces thirty feet in length which will meet together in unison as these stones in the Pyramids meet. It is supposed that they were ribbed backwards and forwards upon each other until the surfaces were assimilated.

The Prussian List.

The Fortnightly Review has published an article by the late Henry James in which he portrayed his feelings at the outbreak of the present war. This sentence should be remembered. "It would have been hard really to give the measure of one's dismay at the awful proposition of a world squeezed together in the huge Prussian fist and with the variety and spontaneity of its parts oozing in a steady trickle, like the sacred blood of sacrifice, between those hideous knickly fingers."

POWER OF MONEY.

And the Danger That May Come With Undue Love of Wealth.

It is convenient to have money. We all see many ways in which we would like to use it. But when we have money we are all apt to wish it just a little more. Who is to say what is the exact amount it is right that we should possess? Wishes, tastes, desires, differ. We ourselves do not know what our limit should be.

With too much money one is likely to become conceited, to lose sympathy and be hard hearted and more than likely regardless of the means he takes to add to his store. If he has too little he may be envious of others, embittered toward society, tempted to dishonesty, or there may be real suffering for need of what money can buy. No one, not even the man in a prison cell, can live in any degree of comfort without money. It is necessary to life.

Yet there are many things of greater value than money, things that money cannot buy, that are necessary to our welfare. Undue love of money is a poison in the soul, eating out what is of most worth. We may pay too high a price for its acquisition. We should judge our desire for money by our purpose, our motive in wanting it. Money is a power for good or evil, as we choose to use it

THINK BIG THINGS.

Give Your Imagination Play and Try to Live Up to Your Dreams.

Isn't it true that the only thing which makes it possible for us to perform the daily drudgeries of life is the hope for better things which blooms in our hearts?

Hope is romance. Ambition is romance. All the fine, true inspirations of life are romantic. Romance leads to achievement, unless it blossoms in the mind of a lazy, shiftless creature who is incapable of action.

The man who leads a forlorn hope is romantic. The hero who gives his life fighting a dread disease to which he succumbs, but against which he has insured humanity, is romantic. Romance is the thing which makes it worth while for men to sacrifice material comforts and die on strange fields of honor.

In a materialistic world, where we have to deal with the facts of earning our living and fighting for place and position, the thing which lifts us above blind instinct is romance. Cherish your dreams, for they give you a glimpse of beauty and make you willing to struggle over cruel mountains and harsh plains to the pot of gold at the rainbow's end. Dreams give respite from dreary reality and urge on to all that is big and fine.—Exchange.

When Lafayette Was In Jail.

After our Revolutionary war, while Lafayette was trying to reach Holland to escape enemies at home, he was seized by the Austrian government and imprisoned as a dangerous character. His wife also was imprisoned at Paris during the reign of terror, but succeeded in getting to Vienna and pleaded with the emperor for her husband's release. Lafayette's friends in this country did what they could in his behalf, and finally, on the 25th of August, 1797, he was set at liberty after five years' confinement in a dungeon. During this imprisonment two American friends of Lafayette—Francis K. Huger of Charleston, S. C., and Dr. Eric Bollman—made a daring attempt to liberate him, for which they both were imprisoned.

Horses Have Quick Ears.

The horse is really one of the best listeners in the world. He is always on the alert for sounds which concern or interest him. When he looks at anything he turns his ears toward it to observe the better whether any sound comes from it. If a horse is particularly interested in your driving of him he aways turns his ears backward toward you, but if he has no concern on that subject or if he sees anything ahead that interests him he keeps his ears pricked forward. A horse hears the whinny of another horse at a greater distance than the average man can hear.

Vegetable Cutlets.

Try the following recipe on your "meatless day:" Take equal quantities of carrots, turnips, parsnips and onions and sufficient potatoes to form half the mixture. Slice the onions and brown in a little butter. Boil the other vegetables and chop them up finely, mixing them with the potatoes, which should be mashed. Season and add some chopped parsley. When cold form into cutlets and fry in egg and breadcrumbs.—London Answers.

The Real Wonder Workers.

"Do you believe in fairies?" asked the sentimentalist.

"Fairies!" grunted the practical person. "What did they ever do? It took us human beings to put over things like locomotives and telephones and electric lights."

Glaciers Are Brittle.

The substance of a glacier is brittle, though solid, and its descent down a valley is caused by its constant fracture, produced by gravitation and the sliding forward of the whole mass.

Palpitation of the Heart and Nerve Troubles

WERE CURED BY

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills

When the heart begins to beat irregularly or intermittently, palpitate and throb, skip beats, beat fast for a time, then so slow as to seem almost to stop, it causes great anxiety and alarm and the least excitement or exertion seems to affect it.

Many people are kept in a state of morbid fear of death, become weak, worn and miserable through this unnatural action of the heart.

To all sufferers from heart troubles we would advise the use of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, which by their action in strengthening the heart and regulating the beat remove all the distressing conditions, and impart vigor and vitality to the system.

Mrs. Thomas Davidson, Mount Brydges, Ont., writes: "I have been a great sufferer in the past with nerve troubles and palpitation of the heart. I tried several remedies, but without any good results. My son came in one day and advised me to take Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. After using one and a half boxes, I am fully recovered, and am in a perfect state of health, thanks to your valuable medicine."

INFANTRY REINFORCEMENTS

from all other troops, comprise, when up to their establishment, about 75,000 men. Including pioneers, there are 54 battalions of infantry, or some 55,000 men; there are more than 10,000 artillery, from 3,000 to 4,000 engineers, some 3,000 medical troops, perhaps 2,000 army service corps and and other troops, making about 20,000 troops of other arms than the infantry. The Cavalry Brigade has an establishment of some 3,000. So that the troops which we ordinarily think of in connection with our Canadian army, the four divisions and the cavalry force, mean something a little short of 80,000 troops.

PLUS THE CORPS TROOPS.

But this is only one item in the total. Sir Arthur Currie has at his disposal a mass of corps troops, and also a great number of troops used on and for the lines of communication. The fighting corps troops amount to some 11,000 more; the bulk of these troops are artillery, some 5,000 or 6,000 strong—siege artillery, aircraft artillery, trench mortars, corps field artillery, trench mortars, corps field artillery troops for maintaining the supply of ammunition, etc. There are over 2,000 engineers, tunnelers, telegraphers, telephonists etc. More than 3,000 men are found by machine-gunners and cyclists.

All told, Sir Arthur Currie's strictly fighting troops have establishments of some 90,000 men.

THE AUXILIARY SERVICE.

As for the lines of communication they absorb not far short of 40,000 more. Army Service Corps and hospital services account for more than 8,000. The Forestry Service, railway troops and Labour Corps in France number more than 28,000, and it should be added that these formations render extremely valuable services. The railway troops, for example, have revolutionized conditions of supply and transport, have been the means of great saving of life in the rearward services, and by bringing up huge quantities of munitions have enabled the British army to repeat its attacks at ever-decreasing intervals.

HOW FORCE IS MADE UP.

Thus, the Canadian troops now in France, if up to establishment, mean a force of approximately the following numbers:

The four Divisions and the Cavalry Brigade	78,000
Fighting Corps, troops	11,000
Total fighting troops	89,000
Army Service Corps and Medical Services	8,000
Railway, Forestry, Labour, etc., Services	28,000
Total lines of communication.	36,000
Grand total	125,000

INFANTRY MOST IN NEED.

This is not a statement of actual numbers in the field. Regiments may not be up to their establishments; and, in addition, there may be in France at some given moment a considerable number of recruits who have been brought over from England and are either being given their final training or are waiting to be moved up to the corps for which they are destined.

These several sorts of troops are exposed to varying degrees of danger; still of all arms, the infantry stands most in need of reinforcements. As ever, it remains the queen of battles, and pays for its honour with its blood. In some respects it is less attractive than other services—the actual labour involved, in marching, for example, is severe—and under the voluntary system, especially in its later phases, there was a tendency for other services to get rather more recruits than were needed to fill vacancies, and for the infantry to obtain fewer than were needed.

PROBLEM ENGLAND PRESENTS.

It is not in France, but in England, where the reinforcement problem exhibits its perplexities. As recruits are obtained in Canada they are given preliminary training, and then are passed over to England. In the training camps there they are given further training, and are sorted out into an organization adapted to the smooth reinforcements of the forces in France.

There also is a flow to the English base of men back from France — wounded, sick and on leave. Some of the wounded can be nursed to health and return to France; others must be sent back to Canada; and thus there is present in England a mass of men, some training, some in hospital, some convalescent, and in all stages of readiness for service.

The troops in England may be divided into the following categories:

The 5th Division—Reserve units of the other four divisions. Administrative troops. Men in hospital.

FIFTH DIVISION HELD UP.

The Fifth Division is a fair example of the situation which has been created by the drying up of the stream of recruiting under the voluntary system. It was hoped to increase the Canadian army in France to five divisions, and this formation was organized. But it proved difficult at one and the same time to bring it up to establishment and to supply the needs of the four senior divisions for men; then very heavy fighting caused a very heavy increase in the reinforcements needed, and the Fifth Division had to send drafts to its elder sisters. Its artillery, which had not been depleted, got across to France as a body, but the infantry and other arms became draft-producing corps. At present the Fifth Division numbers only some 12,000 or 13,000 men, of whom some 10,000 are infantry. Here is a clear example of the way in which the uneven flow of recruiting—more gunners than were quite needed, fewer foot soldiers—frustrated a project of increasing our forces at the front.

HOSPITAL AND ADMINISTRATION.

In hospital there were on a certain day recently some 15,000 men. These vary, of course, from the helplessly ill to convalescents.

The administrative services absorb some 15,000 to 16,000 men. Of these not far short of 10,000 are men who are physically unfit for service at the front, and are being used in various capacities — in training recruits, in hospital work, in the forwarding of supplies and stores, etc. Only some 4,000 are physically fit for general service.

RESERVE CORPS IN ENGLAND.

This leaves to be noticed the category of reserve units. Here there is involved an increasing measure of reorganization which will be noticed in a succeeding paragraph. For the moment it will suffice to state that the general plan is to have in England a reserve or depot corps for each corps in France. For example, the Central Ontario Regiment has a fighting battalion in one of the divisions at the front; in England there is a corresponding Central Ontario Reserve Battalion, and the recruits, or recovered wounded, who are serving and training in it, know that when they are needed in France they will, normally, go to their Central Ontario fighting battalion; they thus are interested while in England in the performances and fame of their destined corps.

INFANTRY LACKS REINFORCEMENTS.

In these reserve units, of infantry rank and file, there were a while ago not far short of 40,000, but of these rather fewer than 22,000 were available as infantry reinforcements; the remainder were not available, some because they were not physically fit, others because their training was not complete. In the other arms and services—cavalry, artillery, engineers, medical corps, railway troops, etc.—there were more than 25,000, of whom some 15,000 or 16,000 were fit and could be used, but not as infantry. Of the remainder, some were physically unfit, some had not completed their training. Thus there are in sight rather more of the other arms and services than will be needed for some months, and an uncomfortably small number of that invaluable and most necessary article, the Canadian infantryman.

THE NEED FOR CONSCRIPTION.

Coming to Canada, it may be stated that in round figures there are some 20,000 officers and men of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, of whom only 6,000 to 8,000 are infantry. Here we see the weakness, to remedy which the Military Service Act was needed. The infantry recruits in Canada are fewer than the month's losses in the Canadian infantry in France. Every month a certain number of thousands of infantry recruits must leave the reserve battalions in England to go to France; every month a smaller number comes to these battalions from Canada; so the reservoir in England becomes smaller; and so we must contemplate either the disappearance of the reserves in England, or the procuring in Canada of a greater number of recruits.

MORE RESERVE BATTALIONS.

It is to be observed that it is proposed to extend to Canada the system of corresponding reserve battalions which exists in England. The Canadian infantry now is divided into a certain number of territorial regiments, each of several battalions. Each territorial regiment will have one or more fighting battalions in France in one or other of the four divisions. Each will have a certain number of reserve or training battalions in England. Each will have its recruiting depot battalion in Canada. A given recruit lives, let us say, in Central Ontario; he joins the Central Ontario Depot or Recruiting Battalion and gets his preliminary training in it. From his first day he is of the Central Ontario Regiment, and is taught to feel that he is one of an historic regiment, that one battalion of his regiment fought at the second Ypres, another at the Somme, and so forth. When he crosses the experience of breaking up the experience of breaking up his battalion, of losing all his battalion pride, of forming a new regimental loyalty, he will find himself simply in another battalion of his home regiment, with neighbours serving in it; when he goes to France it will be to join the front line battalions of what has been his own regiment from the beginning; and when in future years in his Central Ontario home he, as a veteran of the Great War, tells his children of his soldiering from first to last, it will be of the old regiment that was raised in the very town in which those children live. Such is the ideal at which present measures of reorganization aim.

Spreckles declared the neutral's owning this sugar were willing to have it sold here, but they had as yet failed to get the consent of the Food Administration.

KICK TURK OUT OF EUROPE THEN RACES CEMENTED

ATHENS, Nov. 1—If the Turk is to leave Europe, as the Entente Allies have required in their war terms, then there is a well-defined belief in the Balkans that two results will occur of high importance to Greece and all Europe:

First — The Greek inevitably will succeed the Turk throughout Thrace, and in the whole region down to the Dardenelles and the Bosphorus.

Second—That a new zone of territory friendly to the Entente will thus be stretched horizontally straight across the Balkans as a barrier to the German dream of making the Balkans a German highroad to the Orient.

Prof. Andreade, of the University of Athens, one ow the foremost authorities on international affairs relating to the Balkans, holds this view, and in the course of a talk to-day he explained how these two results would naturally come about in the final peace adjustment, by reason of the principle of nationalities now accepted by the Entente Allies as a basis for territorial readjustment.

Prof. Andreade, who is a specialist on the extent of Greek citizenship beyond the Greek frontiers — in Macedonia and the other Balkans, in Turkey, Syria and Asia Minor — pointed out the great predominance of the Greeks in the regions to be evacuated by the Turks, if they are to leave Europe.

The whole vilayet, or province, of Adrianople, extending from the Balkans down to Constaninople, he declared, is as much Greek as it is Turk, and with the Turks out it is practically all Greek." Even Constantinople," he said, "is a Greek city—the largest of Greek cities — with a population of 350,000 Greeks. That gives an idea of the extent of Greek citizenship in all this section down to the Straits, which will have to be considered, on the basis of nationality and race, when the Turk leaves Europe.

RACE PARAMOUNT.

"That is why I say," added Prof. Andreade, "that if the Turk is to withdraw, the principle of nationality which recognizes the racial condition of a community, will lead to the recognition of Greek paramount influence in that section. Thus far, the principle of nationality has been ignored and violated in all Balkan settlements, and force has prevailed. Austria and Bulgaria have not occupied any of the territory annexed in recent years by reason that their race or nationity prevailed in these sections, but solely by reason of their military force. That has been because of the endless wars in the Balkans, for people are never satisfied when their race is ignored, and they are attached to a foreign conqueror by force."

Prof. Andreade, referring to the Balkan map, showed how the readjustment of Balkan boundaries based on nationalities, would interpose two barriers to Germanic expansion, toward Asia Minor and the Orient, one—the Greek zone across Thrace, and the other the Serb-Rumanian link of territory which lies as a dam between Hungary and Bulgaria. This Serb-Rumanian link is only fifty miles across, but with Rumania getting the Banat region, to which Prof. Andreade says she is entitled by the principle of nationality, this Entente link will be 150 miles across.

"And thus Entente Europe can accomplish what it chiefly seeks in the Balkans," said Prof. Andreade, "friendly Entente zones intercepting the natural route of Germanic expansion toward the Orient, and this can be accomplished, not by force, but by the principle of nationality now accepted by the Entente powers."

Omemee Items Of Interest

OMEMEE, Oct. 31.—The anniversary services of the Presbyterian Church, were held on Sunday and Monday, Oct. 28th and 29th. Rev. Mr. McKay, of Milton, delighted the congregations with his eloquent discourses. Many from the Methodist and Anglican were present at each service. The church was prettily decorated for the occasion with ferns and cut flowers.

The choir rendered special music, also solos by Miss Mabel Boyd and Mr. Chester Best, at the morning service, and in the evening, Mrs. A. C. Hodgetts sang in her usual pleasing manner "The Lord is My Strength."

On Monday evening a fowl supper was served in the basement of the church, followed by a choice programme given by Mrs. MaCarthy and Miss P. Merrifield.

Mr. Doaney and Mr. Lapp, all of Port Hope; Messrs. C. Hornby and Melville Earle, of Omemee, also addresses from the resident clergymen. Rev. Mr. McCulloch, of Port Hope, acted as chairman in his usual able manner, and a good time was enjoyed by all present.

Though the weather and roads could not have been much more disagreeable, yet the people seemed to sympathize for those who had endeavoured to make the supper a success and they turned out in fairly good numbers, making the proceeds amount to $65.00, the collections on Sunday being $125, which were most gratifying.

SAGE TEA KEEPS YOUR HAIR DARK

When Mixed With Sulphur it Brings Back its Beautiful Lustre at Once

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray and looks streaked, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the recipe at home or get from any drug store a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which is merely the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients. Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully, besides, no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, its natural colour is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years younger.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure mitigation or prevention of disease.

The Auction Sale

A Purchase That Proved a Prize Package

By ETHEL HOLMES

The scene was not a new one to city people, but to a person from the country it was not only interesting, but amusing. At least so thought Sam Walton as he stood among the crowd in the office of the express company, for they were holding an auction sale of unclaimed packages. It was a case of buying "sight unseen," and there were much laughter and good natured ridicule over the worthless purchases that fell to the lot of some bidder who had calculated that bulk must necessarily increase the value of the hidden contents.

There were large packages that when opened proved to contain nothing save printed handbills of some long past entertainment or bargain sale. Others had samples of patent medicine within, and in one case an eager purchaser had paid $2 for a tiny box wrapped in white paper that contained liver pills. There were bundles of old clothing, packages of newspapers, boxes of cutlery, cases of samples of everything under the sun. Occasionally there was a real bargain, as in the case of the man who paid 15 cents for a battered and tightly locked suit case which proved to contain a brand new suit of clothes worth a hundred times the price he had paid for it. Another individual paid a dollar for a ragged bundle that contained dozens of pure linen handkerchiefs, and still another found himself the possessor of a five pound box of chocolates for the price of 25 cents.

Shouts of laughter followed the pulling out of a box of a very dainty pair of woman's bed slippers by a young man.

Sam Walton paused in the doorway and watched the fun going on within. Every time a package was opened by its eager purchaser there was a burst of laughter from the good natured crowd. Sam fingered the few silver coins in his pocket and turned to go away. Some fortunate individual had become the possessor of a fine shotgun as the result of a fifty cent bid on a narrow burlap wrapped bundle. It might be that an investment of his money would double it. It was a gamble.

"What am I offered for this perfectly good traveling bag?" sang the auctioneer as he swung above the crowd a rather shabby Russia leather bag. "It is tightly locked and from its weight must contain valuables of some kind. You can see from the labels that this bag has traveled abroad, and—25 cents? That's a joke, of course. I am offered 25 cents. Who will make it 35? Very good, sir," and so on.

Sam stood palpitating, his hand on the two lone dollars in his pocket. He was strongly tempted to enter the competition for the bag. It was a handsome one and showed signs of much travel.

"One fifty!" sang the auctioneer.

"One seventy-five," bid Sam Walton hastily, and to his surprise it was knocked down to him at that price.

To the great disappointment of his companions in the crowd he did not attempt to open his purchase. He paid the price and then made his way into the street and turned uptown toward his boarding place. As he strode on, swinging the bag easily, he gave little thought to its contents. His mind had immediately flown to the one topic that always lay uppermost.

That was Leona Denman.

Three years before the opening of this story Sam's father had received a letter from an old college chum, saying he had lost his wife in a recent railroad accident and he himself had been badly injured. He realized that he could not live many months longer.

His terrible anxiety was the fate of his little girl. He and his wife were without relatives, but the letter went on to say: "Walton, you know how I feel toward you. I believe you to be absolutely trustworthy and as splendid a friend as ever man was blessed with. Now, I will ask of you a great favor. Will you take my little girl into your home and be a father to her? She has ample means, and in my will I am constituting you her sole guardian."

And so six months later Leona Denman became a member of the Walton household, where she soon won her way into the hearts of all by her winning ways. But to Sam Walton's heart she did the most damage of all, for he fell violently in love with her, the "little girl" of the letter turning out to be a winsome young girl of nineteen.

She was very young in her way, and Sam, who was ten years her senior, had felt himself too old to allow a girl of her years to pledge herself to him. Living in the same house, it was impossible for him to keep from paying her many attentions, and he became much more lover-like in look and actions than he himself realized.

Leona, girl-like, had noticed it all and was very much in love with this rather shy, reticent man who was so honorably keeping his love for her in obeisance.

Many times she hoped he would break down the barrier and speak out, but she could only wait patiently and by refusing the attentions of other young men show to him that they had no attraction for her.

He became entirely engrossed with his thoughts of the young girl and his home.

The lights of Broadway faded away, and he saw the cool, dim length of a village street. He opened a white gate in a white painted fence and went up the path between prim rows of sweet-scented boxwood. There would be a light in the dining room, and he could see his father's pale, sad, intellectual face, his mother's gentle countenance with tear dimmed eyes, and opposite the empty chair (that was his) Leona Denman would be sitting, pale and beautiful.

They would look at his empty chair and in their hearts blame him for bringing disgrace upon them. His father was Leona Denman's guardian, and when one night a few weeks previous there had occurred a robbery of some of Leona Denman's securities some people had said that Sam Walton had stolen and sold them and spent the money on himself. They even described the details of the robbery, which were interesting to poor Sam, as he had been quite innocent of the whole matter.

Unfortunately two circumstances of the past year gave some substance to the theory that Sam Walton must be the thief. During the past year he had been spending money very freely on a new business which he was starting most successfully, and the jealous ones of the town were very ready to nod their heads and say, "It is easy to see now where the money came from."

To make matters still more suspicious, he had been putting a younger brother through college, and many had been the surmises as to where he got the money.

He had completed the circumstantial evidence against himself by going away suddenly. He was proud, too, and he had thrust aside Leona's soft hand and had lashed himself with the belief that his parents and the girl he loved also thought him to be a thief. There was only one other on whom suspicion might rest, and that was Jeremiah Lakely, the elder Walton's confidential clerk in the country banking house. But Jeremiah had proved an alibi and was so open and frank about the whole matter and told with such reluctance of the evidence against his employer's son that Sam in a frenzy of anger had rushed away.

He had been in New York three weeks and not even glanced at a newspaper. He dreaded to see his own name in startling letters across the front page. Most of his time had been spent in a search for work, and he had not yet found it. He had secured board at a quiet uptown hotel and paid for it in advance. His last week would be up the next day, and he knew not where to go. He now had a lonely silver quarter dollar in his pockets—and the leather bag, his prize package.

In his room at the hotel he tossed the bag on the bed and gave himself over to thoughts of what must have happened at home in Ferndale. What of his father, his mother, of Leona? Did they really believe that he was guilty of such a low down trick as stealing, and from the girl he hoped to marry?

After awhile Sam pulled the leather bag toward him and deftly unfastened it with a trick of his penknife. He opened the bag and stared at the contents.

There in the bottom, fastened together with a rubber band, were the missing securities for which he was now under suspicion of having stolen from his father's safe.

A half hour later Sam grasped his hat and went down to the nearest newsstand to buy copies of the evening newspapers.

He scanned them eagerly and found no reference to the affair of the stolen securities. Very likely it was an old story and had been replaced by some newer scandal. It did not occur to him that it had never reached the newspapers.

He must go back to Ferndale, and his money was spent. There remained his gold watch. That he pawned and took the first train for home. As the miles whirled backward under the wheels of the train his heart grew heavier. He was glad that it was midnight when he arrived at the village. It was the last train.

He crept down the familiar road from the station, and his heart beat faster as he neared his father's house. As he expected, everything was dark, but he pushed open the gate and strode up the path unashamed, for he knew he was innocent, and now he had ground pride under foot. He must make them believe that he was innocent.

As he reached the front door a light appeared in the front hall. He could see it shining through the fanlight over the door. Somebody was coming.

The door opened, and his mother stood there, tall and straight in her white gown. Behind her was Leona Denham in a loose wrapper. Coming down the stairs was his father.

"We heard your step Sammy," half sobbed his mother as she took her in his arms.

"Then—you—wanted me to come back?" he stammered as Leona seized one hand and his father the other.

"Yes. We could not understand why you went. The matter had not been thoroughly investigated. Your father suspected Jeremiah, and finally Jeremiah confessed that he had placed the securities in a bag and expressed them to the city to a fictitious name and address. We shall endeavor to recover them, and the case against Jeremiah will be dropped if they are recovered. Leona wants it that way."

As she spoke Mrs. Walton was leading the way to the sitting room, and as they reached it Sam Walton placed the bag, which had proved to be a prize package indeed, on the table and bade them open it.

And as the old people looked and exclaimed and wondered he took Leona into his arms and kissed her.

You cannot retrace crooked steps. The path of reform is straight.

THE SECRET OF ZAM-BUK'S POWER

This diagram represents a type of ordinary ointment, which contains only a small proportion of medicine.

The secret of Zam-Buk's power lies in the fact that it is all medicine. Ordinary ointments contain about 5% medicine and the balance animal fat. Seven important qualities combine to make Zam-Buk a unique balm.

1st. The Healing quality—which you will see from the diagram predominates. By comparing the diagrams you will see that one box of Zam-Buk contains more healing power than a great many boxes of ordinary ointment.

2nd. The Soothing power of Zam-Buk is very great. Almost immediately it is applied it ends the pain and irritation of a wound or sore. It then draws out the inflammation and reduces the swelling.

3rd. The Antiseptic power of Zam-Buk is three times as great as is commonly met with. This is the quality that prevents the growth of injurious microbes, and thus prevents festering.

4th. Zam-Buk is Germicidal. That is, it is capable of destroying all germs in a wound or sore, while its antiseptic power prevents their spreading. These two qualities, combined, make Zam-Buk a certain preventive of blood-poisoning.

5th. The power of Penetration which Zam-Buk possesses is extraordinary. This quality makes it invaluable in the case of deep-seated troubles, such as rheumatism and sciatica, and also for chronic skin diseases. Zam-Buk gets to the "root" of the trouble.

6th. The Stimulative quality of Zam-Buk is very important, as it enables the balm to act as a tonic on the surrounding tissues and hastens the healing process.

7th. As a Deodorant Zam-Buk is unequalled for discharging sores, bad legs, ulcers, wet eczema, etc.

It is obvious that in buying Zam-Buk you get the best possible return for your money, which is always—and particularly at the present time—a matter of great consideration to a good housekeeper. All dealers or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto. 50c box, 3 for $1.25.

FREE—Send this advertisement, name of paper and 1c stamp (for return postage) to Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, and a free trial box will be sent you.

Money.

If money is the root of all evil there are undoubtedly times when it is possible to secure a medicinal extract from the root

The Prompt Answer.

YOU feel almost like shaking hands with a man when he comes to his telephone the moment the bell rings.

¶ If he answers by saying at once "Mr. Blank speaking" instead of using the time-wasting "Hello" or "Well" you are still further pleased for you have saved valuable time and perhaps avoided a whole series of unnecessary questions to find out to whom you are speaking.

¶ To always answer promptly and to announce yourself at once instead of saying "Hello" "Yes" or "Well" will go far toward keeping up the quality of your telephone service.

20,000 Valuable German Patents Are Confiscated

Washington Arranges to Turn Them Over to American Manufacturers —Inventors Will Be Reimbursed, But Public Will Get Benefit of German Research.

IMPORTANT MEDICAL FORMULAS INCLUDED

WASHINGTON, D.C., Nov. 2.—The vast store of German scientific information in this country has been opened to American manufacturers in regulations issued by the Federal Trade Commission, under which enemy-owned patents and copyrights will be licensed for manufacture by citizens of the United States.

When the regulations had been made public, the Commission met a group of medical men to consider licensing the manufacture of certain drugs, principally salvarsan, used in virulent blood diseases, and non-toxic substitutes for local anaesthetics, of which the supply in this country has run dangerously low since the war interrupted commerce.

Approximately 20,000 patented and copyrighted articles are said to be affected by the Commission's order. These include dyestuff formulas of vital importance to American industries and mechanical devices of wide use, though the humanitarian effect of the order attracts the widest attention. German thought for many years has been in the forefront of medical research, evolving remedies for disease and for alleviation of pain, all of which patented in the United States, will now become available to end suffering in this country.

Could Not Collect From America To Pay Germany's Bills

Herr Naumann Admits the United States is Indemnity Proof—The Speaker Said Germany's Opponents Must First Drop the Phrase About the Re-establishment of Belgium.

THE DOGMA OF PEACE

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 2.—Friedrich Naumann, Radical, member of the German Reichstag, author of a book on the Middle European commercial union and a leading protagonist of the Reichstag peace resolution, revealed in a speech delivered on Saturday what he termed the insincerity of the dogma of peace without annexations or indemnities as interpreted even by the German radicals.

Herr Naumann explained that the phrase "without annexations" did not exclude practical suggestions regarding the relocation of frontiers, and that, while readjustment of the frontier as far as Northern France was concerned, was impossible; there was nothing to prevent the extension of a "zone of security" at Belgium's expense. The control of Belgium's coal and iron resources, the speaker added, also could be made the subject for discussion, though this was not worth a day of war, because it could be obtained through purchase of shares of the stock.

The speaker said Germany's opponents must first drop the phrase about the re-establishment of Belgium before further discussions were possible. He added that a war indemnity could be paid only by the United States, and he defied any one to show how the United States could be compelled to pay.

The speech was delivered at Dantzig, the stronghold of the Fatherland party, and was intended to check the drift toward that party. Taken with similar statements from prominent centrists, like Herr Fenrenbach, and with Dr. Michaelis' qualification, "as I interpret it," the speech is considered to show what dependence may be placed in the Reichstag's peace resolution as a basis for peace negotiations.

ITALIANS AND ALLIES PREPARING TO ATTACK

Counter Offensive is Being Prepared and a Great Battle Based on the Line of the Tagliamento River is Forecast---Russian Situation Causing Great Concern in England and the United States.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

ROME, Nov. 2.—(Official).—Italian and Allied troops are preparing for a counter offensive, and a great battle, based on the line of the Tagliamento River, is forecasted.

The text of the statement reads: "There has been reciprocal artillery firing over the Tagliamento River. Enemy patrols which had advanced to the bank of the river were repulsed by our machine gun fire. On the rest of the front there was no event of importance."

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS, Nov. 2.—Ten German airplanes were brought down yesterday by the French or compelled to land in a damaged condition, the War Office announces. The artillery battle continues on the Aisne front. German attacks at several points were repulsed. Seventeen French aeroplanes dropped two tons of bombs on the town of Offenbury, in Baden, as a reprisal for German raids on French towns.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, Nov. 2.—(Official).—In minor operations yesterday evening the British slightly improved their positions south and west of Passchendaele and south-east of Poelcapelle, the War Office announces. Prisoners were taken.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, Nov. 2.—There is unrest in political circles in Helsingfors over the agitation in the Swedish press of the possibility of the taking by Sweden of the Aland Islands, lest they be captured by Germany. Finnish newspapers declare that in no case will Finland give up the islands, which constitute Finland's chief defence.

WINTER WILL SERVE AS RUSSIA'S DEFENCE

Kerensky May Be Able to Secure a Fighting Machine by Next Summer However, It is Realized That Britain and France and Later America Must Bear the Brunt of the War.

(Special to the Toronto Star and the Peterborough Examiner).
(By Ed. Kean).

LONDON, Nov. 2.—Russia will not fight this winter. She may possibly be able to fight next summer. It depends entirely on whether Premier Kerensky, now gaining strength over his Bolsheviki enemies, will be able to remove the Russian domestic structure. From now until next spring at least, Russia will rely on Nature's defences of snow and ice and cold to hold back the Teutonic invaders. This epitomized the official feeling here to-day. It was the main lesson which the Foreign Office saw in the Italian catastrophe. The Foreign Office was not talking for publication, but officials privately emphasized the view that more than ever from now on Britain and France—and later America—must bear the brunt of the war on the Western front.

Counted Russia Out.

England has counted Russia out as a factor of military strength since the Bolsheviki movement forced the Moscow Conference. Certain official circles to-day did not hesitate to add that the victory which the German propaganda service scored in thus paralyzing Russia's military activities was greater than that which Mackenzen's armies have scored in a temporary military defeat of Italy. As England now sees it, Russia must replace her tottering Government at the foundations before she can exert the smallest balance of military powers. Premier Kerensky, officials privately pointed out, has realized this also. He has fought and delayed a crisis, until now, when winter's snows will soon be coming to barricade his new domacracy. Not only that, but Petrograd despatches to-day indicated that out of the crisis he had emerged with a new strength over Bolsheviki in votes cast in the first general municipal elections throughout Russia. The defeat of Bolsheviki candidates and an overwhelmingly pro-Government majority exhibited in these returns gave profound satisfaction in Government circles here. The Russian constituent assembly meets on December 5. Premier Kerensky has indicated he will urge the speedy despatch of the business of forming a complete governmental machine. In the meantime, with the cold Russian winter setting in, the Provisional Government proposed to centre every ounce of its energy on supplying he people with food and uniting Russian spirit. Millions of Russian soldiers on the front have been doing nothing for several months buut eating at the Government's expense. They have not fought, and the transportation of enormous food supplies to them has tied up Russia's railways. The civilians in the cities have suffered and will suffer more this winter. It would not surprise officials here if Kerensky, realizing this, were to withdraw millions of soldiers for active work in remoulding Russia's internal structures. Germany has withdrawn practically all her troops in the Northern fronts, and the snow and ice could be relied upon to stop a drive if Germany should suddenly shift her troops now on the Italian lines back to the Russian theatre of war. There was a quiet undertone of confidence to-day in the situation on the Italian front. General Cadorna has reformed his army and successfully reached his selected defence line. The Italian fighting spirit apparently is unimpaired.

TOTAL RESULTS SO FAR.

Number examined	1390
Fit for the trenches	842
Fit for non-combatant service overseas	93
Fit for duty in Canada	86
Unfit for any service	369

The percentage of A category men dropped appreciably yesterday, when out of 55 Class One men examined by the local Medical Board only 29 were marked fit for the trenches. The decrease is accounted for by the fact that a number of candidates had minor physical defects which barred them from A Category, but not serious enough to place them in the rejected class. Nine were graded in B Category and six in the C class. There were eleven rejections throughout the day.

The figures for the afternoon session were:

C Category	1
E Category	6

At night the results were as follow:

Miss Pollard, stenographer to the Medical Board at the Armouries, has recived official word from Ottawa that her brother, Pte. Wm. Pollard, of the 256th Railway Construction Battalion, has been invalided from France and is now in hospital in England. No particulars have been received as to the nature of his illness.

SENTENCED ON SERIOUS CHARGES

TORONTO, Nov. 2.—Roy Davis was sentenced to three years in the penitentiary for a serious offense against a young girl, and Wilson Loews to eighteen months for seduction.

FRANK JENNE says:

I think I have one of the noisiest Shirts you ever saw in your life. Yet it has some subtle grace in its colouring, and I'll venture to say that it will appeal to some young chap who wants to startle his friends with what Broadway thinks is just right. We have quieter tastes as we grow older and sedate. But for real nice Shirts—"Come to me."

RUSSIANS ARE THROUGH?

Torn by Internal Dissension and Worn Out by Financial and Economic Drain of the War Russia is Withdrawing From World Struggle

SITUATION SERIOUS

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)
(By Robert J. Bender.)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.— Russia, torn by internal dissension, and worn out from the financial and economic drain of the war, and mismanagement, is withdrawing from the world struggle.

While repeating that it has "absolutey no information as to developments in Russia," the Russian Embassy here to-day answered only evasively the persistent reports that Russia is through. No doubt exists in Allied quarters that the first great Allied power to enter the war, is quitting.

Whether she will make a separate peace or merely remain inactive until spring, information here did not make clear. Russia's decision to cease active participation in the war is believed to have been reached some time ago.

GERMANS KNEW IT.

There have been veiled intimations in some allied quarters for several days that Russia had decided to quit, and that Germany knew it before the Kaiser swung his legions from the Russian front to Northern Italy to support the Austrians in the great drive against Caderna, it is now believed the Kaiser's spectacular demonstration at Riga, landing German troops on the Vardar Peninsula, and his naval operations in the Baltic served to quiet Russia definitely.

Recent indications of a collapse of the Russian military power were:

The laying down of arms by thousands of Russian troops and their return to their homes during the last week.

The voluntary withdrawal of Germans from the Riga sector when the Teuton general knew of the demoralization of the Russian troops there, and the German ability to advance any time they chose, is pointed today as clear indication of Germany's understanding that Russia would no longer carry on an offensive struggle. The completeness of the Teuton blow against Italy is believed to have hastened the collapse of Russia. Embassy officials here made no effort to conceal their fear lest a victory against Italy would be followed by an overwhelming assault upon Russia when she was at the ebb of her resisting power. These officials maintained, however, that Russia's action would not be altered and that as long as Kerensky and Tereachenko remained at Russia's helm she would not withdraw from the war. From a military standpoint, Russia long since has been eliminated as a factor of offence by the Allies. Her presence in the struggle, however, has forced Germany to retain more than a million and a half men on the Eastern front.

HORDES WILL BE RELEASED.

With Russia out of the war entirely, these Teutons will be released for other fronts — vast hordes of Austrian troops included—and Italy's situation will become immediately more critical. Russia's elimination releases thousands of Turks fighting on the Southern Russian front, for operations against the British.

That the Entente and the United States are now passing through the most critical parts of the war thus far is officially admitted. Between the Russian and Italian situations the veneer has been cracked. It is plainly evident that there is the gravest concern over the success with which the Kaiser apparently is carrying on his campaign to definitely eliminate the so-called "Eastern Menace."

East Peterboro' Liberals Nominate W.H. Johnston, Laurier Candidate

Rousing Convention at Norwood Yesterday Promises a Real Contest for J. A. Sexsmith—Not a Whisper of Union Had Been Previously Heard and Liberals Strike Out Alone.

WIN THE WAR FIRST THOUGHT

At one of the most enthusiastic conventions in the history of the East Peterborough Liberal Association in Norwood yesterday, Mr. William H. Johnston, of Belmont township, was unanimously chosen as the party candidate under the leadership of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Mr. Johnston is an elderly man and a practical farmer, who is widely known throughout the eastern riding, and has also many friends in Peterborough. For a number of year he was clerk of Belmont township and has a strong and influential following throughout the constituency.

His nomination yesterday was the decision of the largest gathering of East Peterborough Liberals in many years. The attendance from the northern townships was rather light, but Otonabee, Belmont, Asphodel, Douro, Dummer, Havelock, Norwood and Lakefield, were all largely represented. Not only was there the encouraging evidence of numbers, but more impressive was the renewed spirit of unity, confidence and enthusiasm welded and directed above all other considerations to winning the war. Declaring that the Liberal leader had stated that the Military Service Act was now in force and would not be repealed, Mr. Johnston pledged himself not only to support that law, but also the conscription of wealth, of Canada's natural resources in her mines and forests, and last, but not least, of the profiteers. His emphatic promise was roundly cheered, indicating the desire of East Peterborough farmers that the contributions of this Dominion in wresting a conclusive victory shall not be limited to battalions of its best manhood.

Addresses were given by Mr. Gordon Waldron, K.C., of Toronto, editor of the Farmer's Weekly Sun, Mr. R. R. Hall, Mr. F. D. Kerr, ex-Warden Darling, and the candidate.

Mr. D. Munro, of Warsaw, president of the Association, conducted the convention in a most commendable manner. He spoke of the principles at stake in the approaching elections and of the responsibility resting upon the people in the choice of their representatives.

The Nominations.

The following nominations were then received:

W. H. Johnston by A. Primrose of Havelock, seconded by W. T. Curtis, of Havelock.

C. J. Darling, of Dummer, by M. Walsh, of Douro, seconded by J. P. Leahy, Douro.

F. D. Kerr, of Peterborough, by W. Anderson and Jos. Armstrong.

R. R. Hall, of Peterborough, by Chas. O'Reilly and C. J. Darling.

Dr. Munro, by Fred A. Eason and F. Walsh.

Dr. Munro, Mr. Hall and Mr. Kerr requested that their names be withdrawn, leaving ex-Warden Darling and Mr. Johnston for the ballot. The ensuing vote returned Mr. Johnston, and immediately Mr. Darling moved that the nomination be made unanimous. Mr. Chas. O'Reilly seconded the motion, which was passed with a flattering demonstration for the new standard-bearer of East Peterborough Liberalism.

"I promise Mr. Johnston that I will give him all the support I can," said the quiet, kindly ex-Warden and Reeve of Dummer. "I hope that everyone at this convention will do the best he

$30,000 IS THE NEW OBJECTIVE OF RED CROSS DRIVE

Peterborough is Making a Magnificent Response to the Appeal, $26,767 Having Been Subscribed Up to Last Night—Grand Showing Made by Employees of Different Factories.

Peterborough has made a magnificent response to the appeal of the Canadian Red Cross Society. $20,000.00 was the sum asked for, and when the canvassers compiled their returns last evening, at the end of the third day, the grand total of $26,767 was announced amid general rejoicing. The universal appreciation of the splendid work being done by the Red Cross and the readiness with which those approached by the committee responded to the appeal, coupled with the fact that it had proved impossible to cover the whole city in the time limit set, have led the committee to unanimously decide to extend the campaign to the end of the week, and to increase the objective to $30,000.00, half as much again as the original sum asked for.

That the new mark will be reached seems certain. The committee started out this morning with a total of $26,767 already pledged, and by to-morrow night it is confidently hoped that they will be able to report that for the coming year the magnificent sum of at least $30,000.00 will be available to take care of the Peterborough boys who are prisoners in Germany, as well as to look after the comfort of their other comrades from this city who may be in hospital in France or Britain. The work is a noble one—the money is needed. If you have not already subscribed, drop into headquarters next door to the Examiner Office, or sign the coupon in the papers. If cards have been left with you, the committee would appreciate your signing them and returning them to headquarters.

SOME SIDELIGHTS ON THE CAMPAIGN.

Every employee in the Matthews-Blackwell Co.—man boy, and young lady—contributed to the fund, making the magnificent total of $1,000.00 from the employees alone. Mr. Matthews asked that the plant be shut down for ten minutes, when he addressed the employees, with the above result.

When it is realized that a parcel can only reach a Peterborough prisoner of war when sent through the Red Cross Society there is little wonder that this department of the Society's work appealed so a great many people when making their contributions.

President Roland Denne and the members of the Advisory Board lunched at their own expense last night and were all just as pleased as a bunch of school-boys over the success of the campaign. Before the total was given out an estimate was made by each one present as to the probable amount to be reported at the meeting. The number which won the guess was only six dollars away from the total, and the team which the lucky guesser is on, starts off with $3.25 to their credit in the effort to make the total $30,000.00.

Employees of all the factories supported the campaign in a practical and liberal manner, and it is to them that a great deal of the credit of the success of the fund is due.

There never was a more hearty or sympathetic response to the demands of any previous campaign. Nearly everybody appeared to do their best and this, too, in view of the fact that hundreds are sending individual parcels overseas to relatives at the front, at no small cost.

Over $300.00 has been collected at the headquarters from people dropping in and giving amounts all the way from $1.00 up to $25.00, and with the exception of five or six cases, none of the people had at the time been asked to contribute.

One of the most unique individual factory campaigns in the whole canvass was put on at the DeLaval Co. plant. Mr. W. R. Wren, sales manager, was given the responsibility of organizing the departments together with the departmental heads.

The principles of salesmanship were injected into this particular campaign, and so enthusiastic did both the organizers and contributors become that they did not stop giving until over $1,700.00 was realized from employees alone. To Mr. Wren, his co-workers and employees generally there is a great deal of satisfaction and pleasure at the results obtained.

Messrs. T. F. Matthews and W. G. Morrow, who were the committee to wait on the manufacturers and financial institutions, in one day realized $6,800.00, and exceeded the estimated amount from this source by over $2,000.00.

The Business Girls' Club of the city many members of which are giving as well through the institutions in which they work, gave, unsolicited, a contribution of $60.00.

The employees of the Henry Hope Co. practically contributed ten times what they did last year. Their efforts this year will result in about $900.00 being contributed to the fund.

Messrs. F. D. Kerr, G. O. Cameron, C. H. Pennefather, and A. L. Killaly addressed a very good-hearted crowd at the Salvation Army Temple last night. All the addresses were much

IT WAS NO ACCIDENT

Sometimes unexpected things happen, and we think they came by accident. By following that line of reasoning, we are likely to find in some cases that the strange things were brought about not by chance, but as the result of somebody's careful plans. For example a business man comes into a place and his methods at once make a stir that we do not all understand, but which is only the result of a well-thought-out policy.

This is what has happened in the New Lundy Block, where B. Chesler has revolutionised all ideas by selling Ladies', Misses' and Children's wear at astonishingly low prices. He says it's his buying facilities that enable him to do it—and they must be most exceptional, judging by a comparison of his goods and prices. The store is not large, but contains a remarkable stock of Ladies' Furnishings, kept new by his quick selling methods. Just now the place is crowded with a fine lot of Ladies' Coats, Suits, Dresses, Skirts, Blouses in a great variety of styles and grades, and all marked at Mr. Chesler's remarkably low selling prices, which will certainly dispose of them quickly. For Saturday, even the usual low prices will be greatly reduced.

Also, for to-morrow, with every purchase he will give free a beautiful hand-painted 1918 Calendar. Find the store sure, at 289 George Street, New Lundy Block.

Premier of Newfoundland Takes Glowing Account to London.

LONDON, Oct. 31.—Sir Edward Morris, Prime Minister of Newfoundland, has arrived in England with news of vast preparations now going on in America for "Kanning the Kaiser," which the Daily Mail describes as "most heartening news." "I know that the Americans' reputation in Europe, with those who do not know them, is that of money grabbers," he said. "Well, they are doing their best to become the biggest money spenders in human history." It was impossible until one had been on the spot, to grasp the magnitude of the efforts the United States was getting ready to make in democracy's cause.

can to elect the Liberal candidate in East Peterborough, and if we do, if we work steadily during the next month, I believe the people will elect Mr. Johnston. The Conservative party has tried to create the feeling that their policy is for winning the war. This is the policy of every loyal British subject and belongs to no party."

The Candidate's Address.

"I don't know how to thank this convention for the honour it has conferred upon me," said Mr. Johnston, after the announcement of his nomination. "I am in the field to win, but I can't do it without your invited support. I want the help of every Liberal and Conservative, too, to win this election. The question many men are asking is this, "If Sir Wilfrid Laurier is returned to power will he rescind the Conscription Bill?" I was recently in Ottawa and I was never better pleased to see the "grand old man." To that question of the Conscription Bill he said: "No, I will not rescind it." His only nephew is in the trenches, does that look as if he was disloyal? I am pleased to stand as a follower of Sir Wilfrid."

Mr. Johnston discussed the ineffectual efforts the Conservative government had essayed to obtain greater production and a few of the extravagances and unnecessary expenditures which they have recklessly pursued at a time when Canada's wealth should be conserved as much as possible.

"The Government has come out with the "win-the-war" cry as if they were the only party that desired victory. There is not a man here to-day but will go as far as they to win this war."

For Conscription.

Mr. Fred Eason of Otonabee, asked Mr. Johnson to state again his position on conscription. The latter replied that he had already clearly declared that he favoured not only the conscription of men, but of wealth, especially the usurious gains of the profiteers, and of the country's natural resources. Furthermore, Sir Wilfrid Laurier had said that conscription was now a law of Canada and would not be repealed.

Betrayed by Press.

Mr. Waldron dealt severely with a certain group of the Liberal press of Canada, asserting that after receiving the constant support of Liberals for many years the leading papers of the party had deserted and were striving to betray Liberalism in this grave crisis. The editorial columns carried insignificant comment, but, worse than that, the news was falsely treated and distorted for the purpose of misleading its trustful readers and defeating their party on this critical occasion.

"During the past three to five years they have been undermining the Liberal party by a campaign they have conducted for their own ends."

Have Had Union Government.

"I am pleased to be here or anywhere speaking for straight Liberalism," Mr. Waldron continued, "and I have been delighted at the expressions of the candidate for the Liberals of East Peterborough. From the beginning of the war we have had Union Government.

"The Liberal representatives gave their unquestioning support to every measure of the government for carrying on the war."

Mr. Waldron referred to the necessity of having a critical opposition to the government, exemplifying its service by the exclusion of Sir Sam Hughes and the correction of abuses in administration. The people ought never to forget the practices of popular government. In a crisis like this there should be in the House a critical and energetic Opposition, whatever the Cabinet might be.

The Liberals had been led into the present situation. They had been assured by Sir Robert Borden that this country would never have conscription. On that assurance Sir Wilfrid Laurier repeated the Premier's words. Then with the prospect of an election coming, Sir Robert Borden announced that conscription would be introduced.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier found himself in the most critical position he could have been placed. He would have had to abandon Quebec to the element of a revolution to the leadership of Bourassa, and in Ontario he would have gained not one vote. He would have divided the people into two classes, French and English, and precipitated the people into a conflict, the end of which no man could see. And it has always been a Liberal principle to desire and work for peace among the people and for the conciliation of their differences.

Outraged Popular Government.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier had every reason to believe that the situation had been created to embarrass him, to drive a wedge into the Liberal party and destroy it and him. From May until October, step by step, he fortified the position he took then to destroy our party and render it futile and useless. And the Toronto press tells you not to be partizan. I wish that partizanship may never have motives so vile as that press."

Mr. Waldron declared that Borden had wounded and outraged popular government. No one objected to the Soldiers' Voting Bill, giving the vote to young soldiers and nurses under 21, but they may vote for the Government or Opposition, and their votes may be parcelled by the government so many in this constituency to defeat the choice of the people in that constituency and so on throughout the length and breadth of the country. By this and the odious Disfranchisement Act, they believed they had so arranged their devices that th y could maintain themselves in power as long as they wished to remain. They are going in with the dice loaded. Let men who have learned self-government think of this. With the offer of a new cabinet these machinations, planning and contriving to defeat popular government, are not at an end.

Fixing Elections.

"Borden has given to the press, which daily distorts the political news that you may be misled, that Fred Pardee and "Jack" Reid forsooth, the arch party manager of the government, will arrange things in ridings so there may be acclamations. By this arrangement it is proposed to decide who will sit in the new parliament. Pardee and Reid thus become the electors in those ridings. Your functions will thus be arrogated and assumed by Jack Reid and Fred Perdue.

Mr. Waldron emphasized the necessity of the people protecting the rights and liberties their fathers had fought for. The press speaks of war time measures, but at the next election the government would not hesitate to use these measures and the people would have to tamely submit and suffer.

Imperialistic Schemes.

I live in Toronto, Mr. Waldron said, and near the professions and expectations of certain "cliques." They say: "We can put through great Imperial schemes in a parliament in which the people have no say." And these Imperial schemes will be carried, and we will be told that the people of Canada universally assented.

You do yourselves credit, said Mr. Waldron in referring to the trust and fidelity the convention had manifested toward Laurier. If any man is to be trusted, to whom is due the devotion of Canada, it is the Right Honorable Gentleman who leads the Opposition. He is the head of the Liberal party, notwithstanding the press of which I spoke, and if you appreciate the gravities of the situation he will lead the party into power. There is no man in public life who merits attention with Laurier in the crisis in which we are now engaged.

There never was an occasion in Canada, not since '67, and not since '37, when mere party advantage was so insignificant and when principle was so clear and important as it is to-day.

Mr. F. D. Kerr.

"If Union means submission, the Liberals will not have it," said Mr. F. D. Kerr in a short address that stirred the convention. The Liberals have nothing to be ashamed of in this war. The "profiteers," "munitioneers" and "baconeers" Mr. Kerr said, have made capital out of the distress of this country while so many others have given their lives in France and Flanders. These should be the repentant ones at this time and not the Liberals who have assisted the government in its war measures."

MR. R. R. HALL.

Mr. R. R. Hall, in the course of a very forcible speech, declared that there never was a time in the history of Canada when every elector should consider for himself the great issues before the country, and cast his vote according to the dictates of his own conscience.

It is for every elector to say whether or not he will pardon and condone the Borden administration for permitting the grafting and profiteering that has been going on under the nose of the Government to the great loss of the masses of our people.

During the Borden administration, Mr. Hall pointed out, there had been a most unseemly scramble on the part of the camp followers of the administration.

Army supplies were purchased at retail prices that should have been purchased at wholesale prices.

Inferior binoculars were purchased at $30.00 a piece and sold to the Government at $58.

Bandages were indirectly dealt in by W. F. Garland, M.P., through his clerk, on which a profit was made of 30 per cent., and the Liberals forced him to resign his seat in Parliament.

Madam Plamondon, sister of the Hon. Albert Sevigny, the Minister of Inland Revenue, in the so-called Union Government, sold drugs and medical supplies to the Government to the amount of $23,300, at a profit from 70 per cent. to 300 per cent. over the cost.

Rotten boots which could not stand wet weather for ten days, were supplied by the Borden Government to the Canadian troops, who were fighting in the field of Flanders and General Alderson, who was then in command of the Canadian troops, had to re-fit the Canadian soldiers in British made boots.

In the supplying of motor trucks the Borden Government insisted upon buying them retail with as many delays and disadvantages to our troops so as to give some grafters an opportunity to make a profit running into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Every one of these facts have been established beyond doubt in parliamentary enquiries on the sworn evidence of unwilling witnesses.

FRIEND TO FRIEND.

After the battle of St. Julien, in which the Canadian soldiers suffered casualties to the extent of ten thousand men and when thousands of homes in this country realized for the first time that Canada was really at war we find that Sir Sam Hughes, who was then Minister of Militia, wrote a letter to Sir Robert Borden, wherein he protested against the way in which our Canadian soldiers were being equipped and supplied.

Mr. Hall said that no matter what the faults or shortcomings of Sir Sam Hughes were, he had his heart and soul in assisting and equipping our noble soldiers who were fighting at the front, and therefore, as a friend writing to a friend, he wrote to Sir Robert these truthful words, which have never been contradicted by Sir Robert Borden, viz.:

"The contract branch (of my department) has been very much hampered, and practically blockaded; delays have been very prolonged; the cost has been greatly enhanced, and the goods supplied have been in many cases, inferior. Indeed the most ardent agents of the German Government could scarcely have been more successful in holding up the proper equipment of our forces had they been in control."

"I feel myself personally responsible," said Mr. Hall, "for enducing many of our young men from this country to go to the front, and many of those young men have lost their lives, and so far as I am concerned I shall never vote for or assist to maintain and keep in power Sir Robert Borden as the head of the Canadian Government. He is unworthy of the position that he occupies, no matter whether it is in a Conservative administration or in the administration that is forced to go to the people under an assumed name.

PAPERS CONCEAL TRUTH.

"It is sincerely to be regretted that our Toronto newspapers during this last few months have most industriously concealed the truth, and the most regrettable fact is that the Toronto Globe has been one of the chiefest of sinners in suppressing public news regarding the conduct of the Borden administration."

Mr. Hall also dealt with the Borden Government's unseemly transaction in connection with the Canadian Northern Railway, which furnished one of the most disgraceful episodes that has ever taken place in parliament, and in which many of the leading public men in the cities of Toronto and Montreal have taken a most ignoble part with the connivance and approval of Sir Robert Borden, and the present misfits that surround him.

Confidence in Laurier.

The following resolution was then passed:

Moved by Reeve William Mathison, of Havelock, and seconded by Mr. Charles O'Reilly, of Norwood:

Whereas, Sir Wilfrid Laurier has been for over forty-five years in public life and has been honoured in every part of the British Empire and was worthy of the confidence reposed in him during the fifteen years he was Prime Minister of this country;

And whereas, his high character, his great experience, his patriotic devotion to Canada and the Empire and his love to the true Liberal principles of justice and liberty commands us to put our trust in him;

And whereas, during the whole of his public career he has in both victory and defeat sought to unite our people in a common effort for good government.

Now, this convention of Liberals of East Peterborough records is confidence in him as the safest guide in these times.

The meeting closed with cheers for the King and Laurier, and the singing of the National Anthem, which Mr. Primrose of Havelock, led in a difficult, high key.

AIR RAIDS ARE BAD WRITES PTE. ROBINSON

When Fritzie's Machines Come Over Troops Have to Take to the Trenches

Mr. I. Brock, of the Brinton Carpet Company, has received the following letter from Pte. C. Robinson, a former employee of the company, who went overseas with the 93rd Battalion:

October 7, 1917.

Dear Sir,—Just a few lines to let you know I am still alive. Since writing last, I have been moved around a little. I have been sent to a place called Ashford, and now I am at Dibgate (Shorncliffe). I am keeping in the best of health, but they won't send me to France because of my eyesight. I may get there yet. It seems rotten to be here all the time and see the other boys coming back wounded. We get Fritzy over every night now, and he comes pretty close, I can tell you. The only thing that worries us is getting out of bed at two in the morning and taking shelter in the trenches. We can hear the shells from the anti-aircraft guns coming just over our heads, humming like an electric fan. A fight in the air is a wonderful sight, and, believe me, those fellows up there have wonderful courage.

I see by the papers we are going to hit back at last, and I guess by the time you get this letter Germany will be squealing like a pig. Our fellows are sure pushing along just now, and I believe these pushes are only just "feelers," and later on we shall make Fritzy retreat right through Belgium. How I would like to see the boys out of the trenches for Christmas.

I often think how lucky the people in Canada are. They can go to bed each night and sleep comfortably, while over here we are always expecting Fritzy to come over. Everyone seems to have no use for the poor old moon now, because all the time the moon shines Fritzy comes over. The warning we get of a raid is this: There is a kind of goal post affair stuck up in the camp, and hanging from it is a piece of old railway line, and as soon as we get word of the raid, the man on duty keeps hitting this old line and all lights go out, and everyone has to go to the trenches. But if there is any chance of getting out of it, we roll up in the blankets; and if we are lucky we stay there. I tell you, if Fritzy was where all of us wish him, he would have a very hot time.

Well, I guess I had better ring off, as the candle is almost burned away, and I'll crawl in to get some sleep before Fritzy comes. Wishing the Brinton Carpet Coy. every success, not forgetting the employees,—Sincerely, C. Robinson.

THE GREATEST PICTURE EVER SHOWN AN THE EMPIRE

"The Masque of Life" Is One of the Most Spectacular and Sensational Films on the Screen

"The Masque of Life" has been booked to play at the Empire Theatre to-night and to-morrow. Without a doubt this seven-reel spectacular film has created more comment than any other picture of the year, and being so absolutely different from anything ever before seen in America, its success has been natural. The thing that most people talk about in the picture is the work of Pete, the monkey star, who provides so many of the thrills. One of his stunts is to climb to the top of the 360 foot chimney with a real live baby under his arm. At the top of this chimney there is a thrilling fight between the monkey and the heroine of the story, who goes up the chimney on a guide rope to rescue the child. With the roofs of a city plainly visible below and the always imminent danger of baby, girl or monkey going down into the slanting chimney, this is a scene that makes every audience hold its breath. If you miss this picture you miss the treat of the year. Admission: Nights, 25c. Matinee, 10c, for this picture.

LAURIER'S MANIFESTO MONDAY

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

OTTAWA, Ont., Nov. 2.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier contemplates visiting the west in about a fortnight's time and will probably speak at some of the most important points. His manifesto to the electors will be made public in Monday morning's paper.

Packard's Gain In The Auto League

Y. M. C. A. Physical Department Notes

Last night in the Auto League, the Packards made a sensational climb in the standing. Up till last night this team has been trailing along in last place with 67 points separating them from the Cadillacs in third place. As a result of winning against the Reos and scoring highest number of points in the 60 yard potato race, the Packards are now only 5 points behind the holders of third place.

The Cadillacs took the leadership of the League by defeating the Fords.

Result of the 60 yard potato race: Team scores—Packards 67, Cadillacs 50, Fords 37, Reos 23. J. White won the event in 15 seconds flat.

Team standing: Cadillacs, 171 points; Fords, 152 points; Reos, 133 points; Packards, 128 points.

Elementary Grades Well Represented

The elementary grades of the Peterborough Sunday School Association came in for special commendation at the Sunday School Convention which closed last evening.

The work of this branch of Sunday School room was located in a special room in the basement, with Mrs. E. D. Lewis, Superintendent of the Elementary Division, in charge. The elemetary grades take in all children up to twelve years of age. The grades are divided in four sections, namely, the Cradle Roll, the Beginners, the Primary, and the Junior grades. The exhibition of work performed by the Elementary Division of St. Paul's Church was particularly good, and reflects credit on Miss Scott, the teacher in charge.

Sir J.: Same to you, Mr. G. My word, I've just been reading the paper. What a genius we have for food controller.

Mr. D. G.: Yes, he's a clever fellow. That was a clever move, the cereals to be sold only in 2-lb. packages.

Sir J.: Yes, that's so. People will be so busy thinking about that, that they will never notice if we make an extra million or two on bacon or eggs.

Mr. D. G.: Gosh, no! And what a chance for the potato speculators. I've got a friend who bought about 100 cars for 90c. a bag, when the retail price was set at $1.25, and now he's settin' back and waiting for $3.00, or as much as he can get.

Sir J.: Well, that's where our controller is so smart. He draws a red herring across the trail when anybody is likely to get on the track of something good for us. If he didn't somebody might suggest that he make these poor fellows sell at an ordinary profit. By the way, I guess that fellow Paskin is scared off, he didn't advertise last week.

Mr. D. G.: Oh, Lor! don't make that mistake. I heard he was so busy selling hams that he didn't have time for ing hams that he didn't have time for of his for this week.

Conscriptionist Liberals Are In Convention

Resolution Pledged to Union Candidates Chosen at Fusion Conventions

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

HAMILTON, Nov. 2. — Men and women delegates from all parts of Ontario gathered here to-day for the Provincial Convention of Conscriptionist Liberals, which opened this morning in the Royal Connaught Hotel. This convention promises to be one of the most important political conferences since the formation of the Union Government, and there seems to be no doubt that it will endorse that government practically unanimously. Sir John Gibson called the organization meeting to order and the delegates immediately elected G. G. S. Lindsay, K.C., of Toronto, as chairman, and Alexander Stuart, of Guelph, as secretary.

Mayor Booker welcomed the delegates, pointing out with emphasis that the convention was for Canada as against party, and for conscription. He strongly denounced machine rule and slackers, and favoured the conscription of wealth.

This afternoon the following resolutions were introduced: (1) In favour of the enforcement of the Military Service Act and conscription of wealth and resources. (2) Expressing approval of the action of Liberal members of the Government in entering the same. (3) Pledging support to Union candidates nominated by joint or fusion conventions.

Hamilton's win-the-war delegation, headed by Lieut.-Col. McCullough, then presented a resolution of confidence in the convention and was given a hearty reception. Hon. N. W. Rowell and Hon. Frank Carvell will speak both this afternoon and to-night, and Hon. Sidney Mewburn will make his first public address as Minister of Militia to-night.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION CLOSED LAST EVENING

Two Instructive Addresses by Staff Members of the International Sunday School Association—Resolutions of Appreciation

The big three-day Sunday School Convention came to a close last evening. Mr. R. A. Waite, of the International Sunday School Association, had the honour of closing the convention with an address in which he emphasized the fact that there is a point of contact in every life, and not every person could find the path that leads to the citadel of every heart.

Mr. Waite was preceded by Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner, who gave a striking presentation of the work in the Sunday Schools and some of the pitfalls to be avoided. Altogether it was a fitting close to a big event in the lives of the several hundred Sunday School workers who were present.

The meeting opened with a song service conducted by Mr. John H. Renwick.

Mrs. Bryner's Address.

"Our Wants or Their Needs" was the subject of Mrs. Bryner's address. The need of the child should be the law of the teacher, said the speaker. Shall the Sunday School be a general mass meeting because some of the old folks want it that way? What the Sunday School needs is as many departments as there is room in the church building.

The speaker dealt with the matter of prayer and hymns in the Sunday School. "There is not one child under nine years of age that can follow a long prayer," said Mrs. Bryner. "The children should be kept in separate classrooms and facilities provided for hanging up their outer garments. Who would ever think of teaching children in a public school with their wraps on? When the children are asked to sing, give them something they know and can understand. The simple hymns are just as worshipful. They should be taught to sing more hymns about God and fewer hymns about themselves." The speaker mentioned one book that contained hymns which characterised the children as four different kinds of sunbeams, two different kinds of pilgrims, and others of a like nature. In conclusion, Mrs. Bryner made a strong plea for the use in the Sunday Schools throughout the Province of the graded lessons in preference to the uniform lessons.

Mr. R. A. Waite.

"Blessed is the boy that is preserved in his God-like image," said Mr. R. A. Waite during the course of a forceful address. The speaker deprecated the idea that a youth is expected to sow his wild oats before he can settle down to a more serious and practical understanding of life. "Let us keep the boys and girls from the fire so that we will not have to pluck them from the burning. There is a point of contact in every life; a path into the citadel of every heart. I believe that most thoroughly. It is not given to every person to find that point of contact, neither can any one person make an appeal that will reach every heart."

Resolutions expressing the appreciation of the Convention officials for the hospitality shown by the Convention church and the other churches of the city in which meetings were held, also members of the local Sunday School Association, the Y.M.C.A., those who provided the music, the International Sunday School workers present, the Peterborough Street Railway, and others who in any way assisted in the work, were unanimously endorsed by the meeting.

Rev. E. W. Halpenny, eneral Secretary of the Ontario Sunday School Association, introduced to the meeting Miss Bertha Laine, Mrs. Palmer Burgess, and Miss Mabel Haggart as members of the Association staff.

"REDEMPTION" A POWERFUL DRAMA.

(From N. Y. America, by "Zit.")

Probably no girl or woman in the world has received the amount of newspaper publicity given Evelyn Nesbitt since the day of her teens, and that sort of publicity which does not always cast the best impressions upon readers, for they form an opinion and are ever ready to condemn or praise, and I think in Miss Nesbitt's case she has been condemned, for very few seek to analyze two sides of a story.

"Redemption," as produced at the George Cohan Theatre last night, is a redemption for Evelyn Nesbitt. I defy any living souls to see this picture and refrain from getting a lump in their throat and keep the eyes from watering, even if they do not cry. It is unbelievable that a vaudeville dancing artist, as Miss Nesbitt has been, with her partner, Jack Clifford, could throw herself into the hands of Julius Steger, the director of motion pictures, and have him turn her out to be one of the greatest dramatic actresses on the screen to-day.

"Redemption" is based on the life of Evelyn Nesbitt, but is worked in so cleverly and so beautifully that one would hardly realize it is her life. The picture brings in her little son, Russell Thaw, and her husband, Jack Clifford, for a moment, and although there is a suggestion of the Standford White-Harry Thaw affair, there is only a passing glance which works into one of the most powerful dramatic stories that has been told on the screen. People who have read and read the life of Evelyn Nesbitt and have formed their opinion, will change it for the benefit of Miss Nesbitt after they see this marvellous, gigantic, stupendous production called "Redemption."

Every exhibitor will not only do a big business because of Miss Nesbit's name, but they will do four times big business because of Miss Nesbitt's picture, beautifully told, beautifully taken and artistically directed by the master hands of Julius Steger and Joseph A. Golden. It is one of those long lingering remembering kind.

"Redemption" will be shown at "The Grand" for three days with daily matinees, commencing Monday, Nov. 5.

TWELVE ALARMS DURING OCTOBER

During October 12 calls were made for the Fire Department to fires, two of which, that of the lumber mill and yesterday at Mr. Cuffe's home, Benson Avenue, were serious, the rest chimney fires and crossed wires. The pulmotor was called once during the month.

GERMANY HAS FOOD

Potato Crop Is Over 4,000,000 Tons Above the Estimate.

BERLIN, Oct. 31.—Speaking to a congress of Workmen, Herr Braun, Under Secretary of the German Food Department, told the delegates that the subsistence of Germany again had been assured for the fourth winter of the war. The German potato crop, he said, was between 4,000,000 and 4,500,000 tons above the estimate, and the corn supply had been fully secured.

Hallowe'en Tea Of 57th Chapter A Great Success

A Hallowe'en tea marked the reopening of the tea room of the 57th Regiment Chapter, I.O.D.E., in the Masonic dining hall Thursday afternoon, Nov. 1.

The officers of the Chapter were the hostesses and were assisted by Mrs. Gillespie and the Misses Robinson, Myers and Austin, while Mrs. Vincent Eastwood and Miss Flora Davidson presided at the tea table.

The visit of Mrs. Bruce, the National Treasurer of the Order, was an unexpected pleasure. Having only a short time in the city between trains, she was the guest of the Chapter at the tea room. It is interesting to note that Mrs. Bruce organized the 57th Chapter about five years ago.

During the afternoon, Miss Gladman gave several piano selections and Miss Florence Scott delighted the guests with two vocal solos.

The room was artistically decorated in a colour scheme of yellow and black, with witches, black cats and jack o' lanterns to give a festive touch.

The Chapter is very pleased with the proceeds of the afternoon, which amounted to over $25, and desires to thank its many friends who have always done so much to make the tea room successful and popular.

Some beautiful ferns, kindly loaned by Mr. Denne added greatly to the decorations of the room.

Muffins.

1-4 cup sugar, 1-4 cup butter, 1 egg, one cup milk, 2 cups flour and 3 teaspoons baking powder, a little salt. Bake in very hot oven.

Mutiny On Two Enemy Battleships

Canadian Press Despatch:

LONDON, Nov. 2.—Another mutiny on two German battleships at Kiel early in September is reported in a despatch received in London from Amsterdam. The men revolted against being drafted into the submarine service, and it is said threw overboard Admiral Schidt, who was saved, but had to leave Kiel later. Fighting occurred on the battleships Kronprinz and Schleswigholstein. Three officers and a number of sailors were killed on the Kronprinz.

Press Comment Not Wholly Favourable

British Papers Criticize Conduct of Submarine War and Ship Construction

Canadian Press Despatch:

LONDON, Nov. 2.— The maiden effort of Sir Eric Geddes, First Lord of the Admiralty in the House of Commons yesterday is not received wholly favourably by the newspapers in their editorial comment. He is praised, however, for his frank and business-like statement which drew cheers from the commoners and it is admitted that he said much which is satisfactory and reassuring.

The Daily Mail, which has been opposed to the present policies of the Admiralty, says the speech on the whole deal fairly and straightforwardly with the criticisms, but it complains that when all is said the fact remains that the Germans are forcing the fighting at sea.

The bulk of comment accepts and endorses Sir Eric's explanation that the British fleet did not try to enter the Baltic, and also his statement on the convoy incident. Criticism is directed chiefly against the conduct of submarine war and ship construction.

The Times regards his statement concerning submarine warfare as candid and encouraging and says that his report of construction is reasonably satisfactory. On the other hand the Daily Telegraph, the Daily News, the Daily Chronicle and the Daily Express are dissatisfied on these points.

The telegraph complains that past ministerial optimistic estimates on production have not been realized and that the shipping situation is becoming graver and graver.

Grand Jury's Presentment

Comment Favourably on General Conditions Found in Institutions Visited

The Grand Jury at the Fall Assizes made the following presentment:

Peterborough, Oct. 31, 1917.

To His Lordship
Mr. Justice Latchford.

In accordance with your explicit instructions and illuminating advice we, the Grand Jurors, have endeavored to carry out the duties imposed upon us with expedition, having in mind due measure of our responsibility, both as to the expenditure of public monies as well as the all-important present necessity of the utmost regard for the spirit of public institutions.

NO FEMALES IN GAOL.

We have, therefore, inspected the County Gaol, and are pleased to report favourably on conditions generally.

We found therein two unfortunate persons, mentally unbalanced, but who have been only a short time so detained preparatory to some better arrangement for their proper care. We found also two aged men, who had been inmates of suitable institutions, but who were so quarrelsome that, for the sake of, and the comfort of other inmates, it was considered better to have these men placed in the County Gaol, failing further better arrangement. We were gratified to note that there were no female prisoners.

THE COUNTY BUILDINGS.

We were pleased to observe that the reconstruction of that portion of the County Buildings destroyed by fire in December last were rapidly approaching completion.

The plans decided upon by the County Council in this way, appear to have been well thought out, having regard to the value and usefulness of the undestroyed portion and also in the matter of public economy, which is of great moment at this time, and the building when completed promises efficiency and ample accommodation.

THE HOSPITALS.

We inspected the Nicholls and St. Joseph Hospitals, and were impressed with the wholesome and attractive appearance of every detail. We also visited the House of Providence. This institution is evidently all that could be desired in every respect.

In order to economise in time and expense, we did not continue our investigations further, inasmuch as we were given to understand that all other public institutions in the County not referred to herein had been inspected once during the current year by the Grand Jury.

ABSENCE OF CRIME.

Permit us to offer our appreciation of your opening remarks regarding the absence of crime in our midst, as shown by the docket presented to you.

In conclusion may we express our hope that health and strength may be long continued to you in the discharge of your important task and duty to the State.

Man to Man--- We Say Our Suits & Overcoats are Downright Good Value

The maximum of quality at the minimum price. That's a fair proposition for any man. "Seeing is believing," you say. Then it's our ardent wish that you see — that you give our stocks a personal inspection. If our statements are false, this advertisement will cost us more than the price of this newspaper space. It will cost us the goodwill and confidence of scores of men who have faith in the Cressman Clothes Shop. But it's no gamble men, we know whereof we speak.

SPEAKING OF OUR SUITS. We do not say "bushels of style and a pinch of quality." We say—and justly so—"an equal distribution of each." They are obtainable in a wide range of styles, qualities, and materials; for the youth who is in his first suit of long jeans to the old man with faltering step. They are priced from $15 to $30.

IT'S HIGH TIME TO DON A WARMTH-GIVING OVERCOAT. We have them in the most fashionable and conservative styles. Heavy ulsters and single-breasted models; in tweeds, Irish frieze and blanket cloths; in dark browns, dark greys, deep greens, tartan mixtures and black. Name any price from $15 to $30 and we'll meet your demands.

BECAUSE OF RED CHEEKS HE SENDS DONATION

"Because our Jackie has bright red cheeks, because he is full of life, and is everything one could want a man-child to be."

This was the reason given by an American contributing for the relief of Belgians.

Another man who sent a subscription, wrote that he had just completed the building of a little home, and the thought entered him that it would not be fitting to enter it if he did nothing for the homeless, starving little ones of Belgium.

In some places local committees have put boxes in public places, with an appeal posted over them telling of Belgium's need. In other places good work is being done by raising community contributions. It has been found that a good round sum is always raised in a community where influential citizens take the lead.

The Central Belgian Relief Committee here feels that these examples will be an inspiration to Canadians to come forward with greater help than ever for the relief of this afflicted nation.

No fewer than 10,000,000 persons are dependent for their very lives on the food which is sent from this continent. These ten million people are not allowed to be heard in their own behalf. They can only rely on the people who are conducting the Relief Commission.

Subscriptions will be thankfully received by the Belgian Relief Fund.

RUSSIANS ARE THROUGH?

DANGER TO ITALY.

The greatest danger from a Russian withdrawal is to Italy. If Germany and Austria are free to release additional hordes to pour through the Pic-ochen Pass in the Carnic Alps, they can outflank Gen. Cadorna's Italian armies on the Tagliamento, and force the General to retreat to the Plavo river it is feared. Following several days of an attempted show of optimism, the Russian and Italian situations were portrayed in their real dangerous light to-day by the Allied military authorities here. While this is the military view, the Russian Embassy and the State Department are endeavouring to get some official information on the situation through diplomatic channels.

Since April, 1917, the United States Government has loaned to Russia $325,000,000. Much of this money was advanced at the critical period when the new Republic was going through its initial post revolutionary crisis. The United States thus pinned its facts on the Kerensky [illegible] its hour of need.

"UNWARRANTED"—LANSING.

Any statement that Russia has quit the war is entirely unwarranted, said Secretary of State Lansing to-day. Lansing said he would later issue a formal comment on the Russian situation as covered by official despatches to the State Department. He deplored any impression that Russian had abandoned her allies.

SAYS RUSSIA IS NOT.

Canadian Press Despatch:

PETROGRAD, Nov. 2.— Russia is not out of the war, declared Premier Kerensky, following his statement that she is worn out by the strain and look to other allies for help. Kerensky says his country began the fighting and will continue to take an enormous part as it is, but the other allies should shoulder big burdens.

Business Girls' Club Parcels Bring Grateful Letters From Miss Bertha Mowry And Soldiers

A grateful acknowledgment of the generous gifts of the Peterborough Business Girls' Club has been received by the secretary, Miss Margaret Rae from Nursing Sister M. Mowry as follows:

No. 3 Canadian Casualty,
Clearing Station,
Somewhere in Belgium,
Oct. 22nd, 1917.

Dear Miss Rae,—The splendid box sent by the Business Girls' Club reached me safely two days ago in excellent condition.

I just do not know how to express my appreciation. Everything was so beautifully done up and not one thing that will not be of the greatest use to the boys. The selection shows you spent much time and thought on your work. I know it represents hours of hard labour. To me this is a great big work for the Club to do especially after spending hours at business as so many do. I have handled hundreds of property bags since I came to France but none were so well equipped or contained as many excellent articles as yours.

For my own personal parcel when I have said "Thank you," I have said all. The articles are all my favourite brand. Every time I use your gifts it will bring back pleasant memories of home. I am to-day starting on my third year of army work, sixteen months of which have been spent in France and Belgium. After all these weary months one does appreciate a parcel from "home" more than words can tell.

You know we are all so interested in the wounded, both at home and here, we sometimes forget those splendid fellows who work so hard in the hospitals. Most of them have been here over two years. Numbers of them married men with families. They live under active service conditions, often in great danger. To see them handle the poor war-broken bodies we have to deal with is something I will never forget.

I would like so much to tell you of our work here, but time and the censor forbid. We have had a very strenuous summer and will continue to be busy if the weather holds good. We are winning hands over, even if the price is terrific. There is no other way out now. We must be patient, and to quote the favourite expressions of Tommy Atkins "Carry on" and "Stick it."

Of course, we are very close to the heart of things here. Our patients are admitted straight from the trenches, a few pass through the field ambulances, but most of them come direct from the field dressing stations by motor ambulances. The system—I mean the medical part of it—is one of the most marvellous and perfectly organized now. Some day when peace has dawned over this crazy world, I will be glad to give your club a little idea of our work.

I have spent the past four months under canvas. Have spent eight of my sixteen months living in a tent. The greatest event of the summer occurred on Friday. I had a bath in a real tub—with plenty of hot water. Just think of it!

These beauiful moonlight nights are just what Fritz wants for his war from the air. We'll know now what Bairnsfather meant when he said: "This bloomin' binkin' moon will be the death of me yet." We have a big dugout for the sisters. It isn't a matter of pride, but speed to get there. Fancy, I hold all records. I always was a good sprinter.

Now I must close. Once more may I express my thanks for your wonderful bale? The person who packed it did the work so well. Everything was dry and as fresh as when it left Peterborough. Wishing the Business Girls' Club every success in their magnificent work and once more many, many thanks for my own parcel. Believe me, sincerely yours,

Bertha M. Mowry.

Thanks From Soldiers.

Also the following letter of thanks from one of the soldiers:

3rd Can. C.C.S., B.E.F.,
Flanders,
11th October, 1917.

To Miss Margaret Rae,
Secretary Business Girls' Club,
Peterborough.

Dear Friend,—It is with great pleasure I write to thank you for the lovely parcel I received from Nursing Sister Mowry on behalf of your Club. I take this opportunity to write thanking you for your gift, for I'm sure the knowledge that the good work that your Club is doing on behalf of the boys overseas, is so much appreciated by the boys themselves, that they are so over pleased with their parcels, as to be unable to thank you sufficiently. I was greatly surprised when Sister Mowry (whom I am pleased to say is doing great work out here) handed me your parcel and asked me to drop you a few lines, and more so when I opened it and found what the contents were.

Believe me, it is the best parcel of comforts that I have ever seen, and I can assure you will be put to the greatest use possible.

In closing I wish to propose the health and success of the Peterborough Business Girls' Club and trust that you may long continue your good work.

Yours gratefully,
Pte. J. Parkinson.

One of the special parcels of socks forwarded by the Business Girls was received by a Peterborough boy, Oscar Davidson, who sent the following appreciation:

France, Oct. 4th, 1917.

Dear Miss Rae,—Your letter and parcel of August the 21st was received a few days ago and I am taking the first opportunity of expressing my best appreciation and thanks to yourself and the young ladies associated with you for your kindness in sending me this parcel. It certainly is very kind of you for all your trouble and mere words are poor expression of our real thanks, however, we hope that at some time we may have the pleasure of meeting yourself and your friends and showing our appreciation in some more tangible form.

We are enjoying (?) some real mud and rain to-night, but up until the present have had beautiful weather, so I guess we have no complaints coming.

With best thanks.
Yours sincerely,
OSCAR S. DAVIDSON.

Football Togs Getting Scarce Across The Line

NEW YORK, Oct. 31.—Football authorities believe that 1917 will see more men in moleskins than ever before in the history of the game. This is because the National Army has adopted the gridiron sport for training purposes, while football also will be played at the Officers' Reserve training camps and the naval training stations.

It is feared now that there will be a shortage in football uniforms, and manufacturers are being urged to increase their supply. During a regular collegiate football season the greatest call for moleskins is at the outset, and the demand dwindles as the season wears on and men are eliminated.

With as many as ten or more elevens in a single training camp, with an Army League in process of formation and with fifty coaches volunteering to teach the navy recruit football, it is evident that a tremendous demand for uniforms is in order.

VON HERTLING IS CHANCELLOR

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 2.—Emperor William has relieved Dr. Michaelis of offices of Imperial Chancellor and Prussian Premier, and Foreign Minister and appointed Count Von Hertling to succeed him.

The Emperor has conferred the Grand Cross of the Red Eagle on Dr. Michaelis.

Grave of Duchess Robbed of Wealth

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 2.—The grave of Grand Duchess Alexandra Pavlovna of Russia, in Budapest, according to a despatch from the Hungarian capital, has been broken open and the body stripped of its jewelry. The chapel containing the grave was also robbed. The Grand Duchess was the first wife of Archduke Josef, Palatine of Hungary.

NEW LEASE OF LIFE FOR SHELL PLANTS

Rumours Say That Large Orders Are To Be Placed Here Shortly.

MONTREAL, Nov. 2.—The continuance of the production of war munitions, particularly shells on a large scale, in Canada seems assured for some time. Some developments of recent date strongly indicate this, and as the new orders which are about to be, or have been, placed are for a foreign Government, Canadian finance will not be confronted with the additional problem of providing the necessary credit. This will be done directly by the Government concerned.

EXTRAORDINARY VALUES IN BOOTS AND RUBBERS

We have been notified by the manufacturers that boots and rubbers will go up as high as 30 per cent. during this month. However we have prepared ourselves for this advance by increasing our stock at very low prices, and this Saturday are giving the public a chance to buy their Fall and Winter Footwear at prices which would have been considered cheap even last year. Take advantage of this opportunity and save money:

A GLORIOUS FEAT OF ARMS

Withdrawal of General Cadorna's Third Army Accomplished in the Face of Great Odds

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

(By John H. Hearley.)

ROME, Nov. 2.—The withdrawal of Gen. Cadorna's third army, practically intact, was achieved by the unparalleled heroism of Italy's dogged fighting men. Enough of this story of valour, unfaltering courage and supreme sacrifice, even to the death of the Italian defenders, reached here this afternoon to rouse the whole capital to a throb of patriotic pride and to make the conviction certain that Italy's men would stem the tide of invasion. The withdrawal of the third army was in itself a strategic feat not approached in any of the war's manouvres.

PRACTICALLY ENCIRCLED.

Practically encircled by the German-Austrian forces, the men nevertheless cut themselves out, fighting hour after hour and day after day, without complaint, and enduring an overwhelming superiority in arms and men at the disposal of the German command, in heroic resistance. Infantry, cavalry, aeroplane corps and motor cycle detachments magnificently faced the great masses of Austro-German troops and fought them to a standstill, delaying the advance inch by inch, until the main body of the third army could withdraw to pre-arranged positions.

A certain section of the second army held the Isonzo heights at a time when the approaches were literally alive with the enemy. When the pressure got too tremendous, detachments of the Italian soldiers volunteered to rush forward to their death, knowing their bodies and the shock of a charge from men determined to die in the defence of their country would temporarily slow up the enemy's progress and permit many more Italian soldiers to escape.

HOPE TO TAKE VENICE.

One other bit of news to-day served to arouse the public—a report received by way of Switzerland that the German invasion plan hoped to embrace the capture of Venice and the retension of the city of the Doges, as a bribe for a separate peace. This version declared that the Germans would threaten to ruin the city or to return it to Austria if Italy did not come to terms. It was received here with a renewed determination to hold back the invading armies.

PETERBOROUGH MEN AT LIBERAL MEETING IN NORWOOD YESTERDAY

In the audience at the Norwood convention yesterday were noticed, Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., Mr. J. J. Hartley, President of the West Peterborough Liberal Association, Reeve W. A. Anderson and Deputy-reeve Fred A. Easson of Otonabee, Reeve Walsh of Douro, ex-Warden C. J. Darling of Dummer, and others. On the platform were, among others, Mr. F. D. Kerr, Mr. R. R. Hall and Reeve Mathison of Havelock.

It was significant that the only reference to the Hon. N. W. Rowell was greeted with derision. Mr. Waldron's outspoken denunciation of the leading Liberals of Canada, especially in Toronto, which he charged were conducting a campaign of misrepresentation of Liberal thought and action, of misleading the electorate by garbed and false reports on the political situation, made a deep impression on the audience. He claimed the Liberal papers of Toronto were not only trimming the news for the wind of the Union government, but that many reports are not even printed.

In this connection it is significant that although a report of the Norwood convention was wired from Peterborough last night, there was not a line of it in the Toronto Globe this morning.

Mr. R. Skinkle, of Warkworth, was in the village a few days this week.

Military News

OTTAWA, Nov. 1.—Medical examinations under the Military Service Act to date reveal a high percentage of "A" men coming within Class 1. One hundred and twenty-five thousand men have in all now passed the medical boards, divided into the following medical categories:

"A" men, 62,063; "B," "C," "D" and "E" men, 63,739; total examined, 125,802.

There were in all 36,012 men examined last week, a figure which is regarded as entirely satisfactory. "The Defence of Canada," a pamphlet outlining the part of Canada in the war, will shortly be available at all post offices in the Dominion. It is now being translated into French for circulation in the Province of Quebec.

enjoyed, especially that of Mr. F. D. Kerr, who was the principal speaker of the evening. The band did well. The Songster Brigade did well, and looked well with the Red Cross caps and arm bands.

Adjt. McElheney made the appeal, and the result was $131 promised, with about $100 in cash, with more to follow.

The Temple Band, who are giving away all of the $300 obtained from the city last year for their services at the Park, gave $50 to the Fund last night.

ORLANDO'S SONS FIGHTING.

Three Have Been at Front Some Time, and Fourth Went Recently.

ROME, Oct. 31.—Vittori Orlando, the new Italian Premier, has three sons a the front. One was on the Bainsizza Plateau, from which the Italians were expelled at the beginning of the present Austro-German offensive, and it is not known what has become of him. A fourth son of the Premier, who was in training for machine-gun service, started for the front on the day the offensive was launched.

JGAR PRICE COMES DOWN

ntic Sugar Refineries Limited ake Important Announcement at Montreal

MONTREAL, Oct. 31.—A cleancent drop in the price of sugar was announced to-day by the Atlantic Sugar Refineries, Limited, which lowers the price of Lantic Sugar by ten cents per cwt., all grades. Furthermore, the company promises other reductions as conditions warrant them.

With no very large stock of sugar on hand for immediate demands, the company nevertheless expects no trouble in securing enough raw sugar to keep its refinery running continuously. It believes sufficient raw sugar has been ordered to meet the regular Canadian demand, if hoarding and speculating be eliminated.

The news that no sugar famine threatens will be received with joy by the average consumer, even if it does come as a blow to those who have been storing unusual quantities away and talking about the move as a proof of their smartness.

Stoney Lake Red Cross Had Busy Summer

Following is the report of the Stoney Lake Red Cross Association:

Officers—President, Mrs. L. H. Graham; 1st Vice-Pres., Mrs. L. B. Stewart; 2nd Vice-Pres., Mrs. W. C. Eddis; secretary, Miss Evelyn Robertson; treasurer, Miss Freda Cole; secy.-treas. for Peterborough, Mrs. Knapman.

The Stoney Lake Red Cross Association has finally closed its books for the season. Some of the work, having been left over from the summer, was given to various members to finish, and no report could be given until this was returned.

The list of finished articles comprise 18 T bandages, 84 towels, 49 hot water bottle covers, 12 stretcher caps, 22 wash cloths, and 66 pairs of socks.

Taking into consideration that fewer members were working, this compares favourably with last year.

These articles have been sent to the University Base Hospital Committee, from whom the material was received.

The sum of $500 has been collected through donations, fees, entertainments, and the net receipts of the regatta, the largest donation being a cheque for $25 from Mr. F. B. Archibald of New York.

A cheque for $400 has been sent to the head office of the Canadian Red Cross Society, Toronto.

An invalid chair and tables, costing $100, have also been presented to the Davisville Military Hospital by the Association.

Evelyn L. Robertson, Secretary.

WEDDING BELLS

CHESNEY—ALLEN.

Married, at 535 Aylmer Street, the residence of Rev. A. G. Doner, on Monday evening, at eight o'clock, Wm. J. Chesney and Lillian Maude Allen, both of Peterborough.

CADIGAN—O'CONNOR.

A quiet but pretty wedding was celebrated at St. Martin's Church, Ennismore, on Tuesday, 30th October, at nine o'clock, when Lillian E. O'Connor, daughter of Mrs. Patrick O'Connor, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to John J. Cadigan, son of James Cadigan, of Ennismore. Rev. Father McCauley, parish priest, sang the nuptial Mass, while the music was beautifully rendered by Mrs. Alexander Geary.

The bride was becomingly attired in a suite of rookie shade gabardine, with hat to match, and carried a bouquet of bridal roses and lily of the valley. She was attended by her sister, Miss Marie O'Connor, of Saginaw, Mich., who wore a pretty suit of blue taffeta, and carried a bouquet of Killarney roses. The groom was attended by his brother, Patrick Cadigan.

After the ceremony, the happy young couple, accompanied by their friends, drove to the home of the bride, where a sumptuous dinner was partaken of. A number of toasts to the welfare of the bride were proposed and responded to.

The groom's gift to the bride was a diamond pendant, to the bridesmaid a pearl ring, and to the groomsman gold cuff links, with sapphire setting.

Mr. and Mrs. Cadigan left on the 4 o'clock train for Toronto, Hamilton, Saginaw, and other points, the bride travelling in a suit of wine-coloured velvet, with fur trimmings. On their return they will reside in Ennismore, where they will be at home to their friends after 15th November. All join in wishing them future happiness.

OBITUARY

WALTER J. ENGLISH.

The funeral of the late Walter John English, 544 Charlotte street, will take place to-morrow afternon. A family service will be held at the house at 2 o'clock and a public service at St. John's Church at 2.30, both to be conducted by Rev. R. B. Grobb. Interment at the Little Lake Cemetery.

Deceased was born in Peterborough, 47 years ago, a member of one of the oldest families in this city, and has resided here all his life, save for rthirteen years spent in Chicago. While in the city, both previous to leaving for Chicago and after returning, he was engaged in press work and at the time of his death was City Editor of the Review. He is survived by his mother, Mrs. William English, and two sisters, Olive and Margaret both of Peterborough.

VIVIAN CAVELL AXFORD.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. D. N. Axford, 354 Downie Street, will sympathise with them in the death of their infant daughter, Vivian Cavell Axford, aged six months, who passed away yesterday. The funeral will take place on Saturday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock to Little Lake Cemetery. Rev. A. J. Thomas, of George Methodist Church, will officiate.

MRS. VARNEY WAITE.

Mrs. Amy M. Waite, widow of the late Varney, died Wednesday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. A. M. Paton, Lindsay. Mrs. Waite was in her 64th year. She was born in Conklingville, in the State of New York, on April 2nd, 1854 and was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Luke Kathon. Mrs. Waite has been a resident of Lindsay almost a quarter of a century. She had many friends, all of whom will regret to learn of her death. Mrs. Waite was a consistent Christian woman, devoted to her family and her home, and one whose advancing years endeared her to many friends. She was a member of the Methodist Church and as long as health would permit, was a regular attendant and took an active interest in its welfare.

The surviving relatives are four daughters and five sons: Mrs. A. M. Paton, Lindsay; Mrs. J. L. White, Minneapolis; Mrs. W. K. Barstone, Peterborough; Mrs. Amy Huntoon, Ontario, California; Chas. in France; George W., in Duluth; William of Lindsay, G.T.R. ticket agent Fredrick, in the West, and Arthur H., of Orillia. Also three sisters and three brothers, all residing in New York State. She had thirty-one grandchildren and seven great grandchildren.

An Army of Internal Bathers

Over half a million bright, keen, up-to-date Canadians and Americans have found that Internal Bathing is more essential to their well being than External Baths.

Have found that, taken occasionally at night, they fel like different people the next morning. No more of that bilious, tired, nervous condition—but, having by Nature's own cleanser, antiseptic warm water removed all the poisonous waste from the Lower Intestines, they awake thoroughly refreshed by normal sleep with all their functions acting in healthy accord, bright, happy, clear-headed, and confident, eager and capable for the duties of the day.

"Wholesale and Retail Men's Wear."

Why not learn more about this rapidly growing and natural practice? The "J. B. L. Cascade," the original and best appliance for this purpose, manufactured by Charles A. Tyrrell, M.D., is now being shown and explained at the Warne Drug Co., Peterborough.

There also may be obtained free on request, "Why Man of To-day is Only 50 Per Cent. Efficient,' a most interesting booklet on the subject. If you prefer write to Dr. Chas. A. Tyrrell, 165 College street, Toronto, for same.

An obedient horse and a loquacious Parrot should not be left together on a dock, for an accident might happen. A driver of a San Francisco transfer waggon drove down to a pier and stopped near a parrot in a cage. The driver left his horse and vehicle a few minutes. "Back," said Polly and the obedient horse back toward the edge of the wharf. Again the bird called out, "Back," and there was a splash and a crash as waggon and horse went into the bay. When several men succeeded in landing the horse and waggon Polly remarked: "Can you beat it?"

Bogus Military Police Officer Left Long Trail of Worthless Cheques In Eastern Ontario

TWEED, Nov. 2.—Eastern Ontario has been, during the past week the scene of as thrilling an outlaw escapade, as in the days of Jesse James. Only this party was more up-to-date and took an auto.

On October 15th, a "gentleman" styling himself James Henderson stole a car at Napanee and wth it certanliy saw the sights of our country and those adjoining. Henderson posed as a Military Police Officer and might have been one as he had the uniform and badge. He engaged S. McDonald to drive his car and agreed to pay him $5.00 a day and his board for his services. They started from Napanee and went to Belleville, and from there to Trenton. At Trenton, Henderson tried to borrow a pair of handcuffs from the police, but failed. Then they went on to Brighton and here, they were successful in securing a beautiful pair of wristlets. He had a couple of blow-outs along the way and bought a new inside tire, which he paid for by cheque.

Leaving Brighton, he went on up the front road claiming to be looking for deserters. At Castleton he arrested Ptes. Gill and McIntyre, who were deserters from guard duty at the Chemical Works, Trenton. After putting them in the city jail at that point and passing a few attractive "cheques" on the obliging merchants he left town.

Henderson had no authority to arrest these men and on Tuesday Sergts. Bayes and Bethune of the Garrison Police Force at Kingston came up and brought the prisoners to Colborne where they were taken to Kingston to be tried by Court Martial.

Henderson, before leaving town, said he would be back again, and left for Havelock. Leaving Mavelock, they struck north, Henderson claiming to be looking for another deserter. When they go about 10 miles north of Havelock, a front spring was broken, and McDonald started back to Havelock, where he was arrested. He claimed to know nothing about the car, and said Henderson had only hired him to drive it. Henderson was supposed to have started north for Coe Hill, when McDonald left him. He was next heard of at Eldorado, where he hired a horse from friend Jones and drove and Queensboro and Cooper.

Here Henderson hired a soldier who was home on leave and employed on Mrs. Kane's farm, to drive him to Flinton, using his employer's car. There he gave him a cheque for $25.00. Then the said to him. "You might as well drive me to-morrow, I want to go to Denbigh," so the soldier said he would, but first he took off his uniform, as Henderson said, "we won't be able to catch any deserters if we wear the khaki." Henderson had changed his uniform for a long black raincoat and cap.

Then they went on to Northbrook, where Henderson came upon a soldier, who probably had over-stayed his pass and he arrested him. He took $50 off this chap and let him go, saying he was coming back that way and would pick him up on his return.

The couple went on up through the north country and finally came to Renfrew. Here Henderson went to the local Police Station and wanted to enlist their help to arrest a deserter. The police were suspicious of him and asked him to show his badge, which he did. Finally he, with a policeman went out and captured a deserter, bringing him back to Renfrew. There he paid the policeman by cheque, signing himself "Sergt. McDonald."

The fellow he engaged at Queensboro was still with him and together they started out on their return trip. When about five miles back of Cloyne, the car broke down, the ball bearings in the front wheel being worn out. Henderson telephoned Felix Rashotte, of town, for repairs, and Mr. Rashotte sent his men back on Saturday morning.

The men fixed up the car and when finished, Henderson wanted to pay them by cheque. They said, they did not want a cheque, but would rather be paid in cash. "Well," said Henderson. "My cheque is all right, I have $700 to my credit in the Bank of Commerce at Madoc." But the men wouldn't take a cheque and finally, they got $23 out of him, with the balance of $2.00 still to be paid.

The men wanted him to come to Tweed and settle up his account, but he said he had no time to make Tweed, as he wanted to catch the train at Kaladar. So they drove on to Kaladar where Henderson also paid the driver by cheque. The driver didn't want to take it, but it was all that he could get. Henderson asked information at the station about the train to Renfrew, but the station agent, Mr. O. H. Dunn, who is supposed to know everything, said he wasn't sure which train he took, and it is just as likely, he came west.

The driver came to town on Saturday night and when told by the Chief Molyneux that his cheque was worthless, he became anxious and called up the Madoc Bank, where it was found that Henderson had never deposited a cent. The cheque was for $60.25. It is supposed Henderson had on his person $75 or $100, and is well armed, having two revolvers, and belt of cartridges, and two pair of handcuffs.

The authorities are still busy looking for the modern "artist."

CATTLE FIRMER, RECEIPTS NORMAL

Heavy Runs of Outdoors Cattle About Over—Now an Active Market For Choice Quality

The appearance of the market the past few days indicates that the heavy runs of outdoor stock usual at this season, before the setting in of winter, are nearing an end. The total aggregate of receipts for the week show a slight falling off from the previous week, while the proportion of fairly good quality butchers' has been slightly higher. The latter end of the week saw a revival of the usual demand for the choicer quality butcher cattle, accompanied with a slight stiffening of prices.

There is no boom on, nor is there likely to be, but from now on there is likely to be a steady improvement in the demand for choice butcher cattle, and a little better prices may reasonably be looked for. The feature of this week's markets has been the steady firmness and active demand for fat butcher cows and for canners and cutters. Not until the end of the week was there any noticeable change in the demand for the choicer quality steers and heifers.

Thurday's market saw a distinct improvement and a firmer tone to the market all round.

There was also a more active demand for the best quality feeders and short keep steers, prices for the latter in a number of instances going well over ten cents. For good to choice feeders prices were firm from $8.50 to $9. Rough, light Eastern stockers were not in such good demand.

Choice veal calves have been in good demand at firmer prices.

Choice milch cows in good demand, the market going as high as $160 to $170 for extra choice.

Sheep and lambs were firmer, closing strong at the end of the week.

Hogs showed strong towards the end of the week.

Cattle Receipts.

Union Stock Yards.—Total receipts for the week: 602 cars, with 8,867 cattle, 685 calves, 8,766 hogs, 7,570 sheep and lambs, and 689 horses.

Probably this joke has been pulled a million times, but we never heard it before. That's because we are so seldom around where people are talking of finance and big business affairs. May be the jest is a bromide of the banks and bond broking business — how are we to know. Maybe had we not been invited by a plutocrat to jump in and let him take us homeward, we would never have heard it.

Friend Plutt had a friend him him, and they were talking about an investment—as nearly as we could understand.

"Don't you think that stock was a good buy?" asked the one.

"Yes," sneered the other, "a goodbye to your money!"

VIOLENT CAMPAIGN THREATENED BY THE SINN FEINERS

Many Prominent Irish Priests Denounce Sinn Fein Campaign as "Morally Unlawful"

POLITICAL SITUATION

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, Nov. 3. — Concerning the political situation in Ireland the Daily Mail in its second edition today says:

"There is reason to believe that feeling to disquiet has developed in Dublin and some country districts over the Sinn Fein situation. Prof. De Valera's meetings fixed for Sunday at Newbridge and Kildare have been prohibited." Prof. De Valera is the member of Parliament for East Clare, but has never taken his seat. Many prominent Irish priests have joined in denouncing the threatened violent campaign of Sinn Fein organizations as "morally unlawful" and the De Valera supporters seem extremely apprehensive of ecclesiastical influence.

LIVER TROUBLE and HEARTBURN

CURED BY

MILLBURN'S LAXA-LIVER PILLS

When the liver is torpid and inflamed it cannot furnish bile to the bowels, causing them to become bound and costive. The symptoms are a feeling of fullness or weight in the right side, and shooting pains in the same region, pains between the shoulders, yellowness of the skin and eyes, floating specks before the eyes, coated tongue, bad taste in the morning, heartburn, water brash, etc.

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills gently unlock the secretions, clear away all effete and waste matter from the system, and give tone and vitality to the whole intestinal track, and are by far the safest and quickest remedy for all diseases or disorders of the liver.

Mrs. A. Cummings, Manchester, Ont., writes: "I have used Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills some time, and can faithfully recommend them to anyone suffering from heartburn and liver trouble. I tried a great many other remedies but they only relieved me for a time. I believe Laxa-Liver Pills to be a valuable remedy for all sufferers from liver troubles."

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills are 25c a vial at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

HENRY FORD MUST DISBURSE DIVIDENDS

Dodge Brothers Succeed in Suit Against Auto Man.

DETROIT, Mich., Oct. 31. — The suit brought against the Ford Motor Company and Henry Ford, by John F. Dodge and Horace E. Dodge, to compel Ford to disburse accumulated dividends to the stockholders, instead of using the money to increase the company's business, was decided in favour of the Dodge Brothers. The decision was announced to-day by Circuit Judge Hosmer.

The case was argued here several weeks ago, and witnesses testified at that time that about $60,000,000 was involved. The Dodge Brothers, who are stockholders of the Ford Motor Company, attempted by injunction to prevent Ford from using his company's profits to erect great blast furnaces at River Rouge, near Detroit.

"THE PAINTED WOMAN"

By FREDERIC ARNOLD KUMMER

hysterical laugh she extended her arms to him, the knife still gleaming in one of her outstretched hands.

The Portugee started toward her, a laugh crackling upon his dry lips.

"Dios!" he exclaimed and reached toward her. Then he saw the cold fury in her eyes, and hesitated once more.

"Wait," she said quickly. "I have still more to say to you, you dog. When you take me in your arms you shall know the price. All the flesh and blood you take you shall pay for with flesh and blood—with your own, Portugee, for I shall surely kill you."

"Ha! Not likely," he laughed, but his laughter held a note of uneasiness. The cowardly strain in the man betrayed itself in his shifting eyes, his tremulous lips. He laughed, without mirth, not knowing her purpose, and therefore fearing it the more.

"Laugh," she cried, her softness gone. Now that the fates had placed her so cruelly at bay, she seemed, in this last furious defence of herself to have become a tigress, more beautiful, more dangerous than the Portugee had dreamed. "Laugh, you fool!" she went on, "yet I shall surely kill you. Every hour of the day I shall wait and wait, and every hour of the night I shall watch and watch—I shall never grow tired, Portugee, for there will be hate back of my eyes—hate that does not sleep, and some day, some time, my chance will come. It may be when you lie careless at my side, sleeping—it may be when you come creeping to me, drunk with your wine—to-night, or a thousand nights to come—I shall be waiting Portugee, and then—I shall kill you. You will grow careless—you will come to me, asking for my kisses—you will want my arms about you in the night, and then you will forget. But I shall not forget, of that be sure. My kisses will be the kisses of death, Portugee, for then I shall kill you. Take me, take me, you Portugal dog. I am soft and warm and beautiful, you say. Take me with the red hate of you burning in my heart. I shall be waiting, Portugee, always waiting. There will come some moment—some little moment, when you will forget, and then I shall kill you. I swear it, as there is a God in heaven. Here is the knife!" With a sweeping movement she hurled the weapon at his feet. "Now, you scum of the Indies," she cried, drawing herself to the full height, "Take me, if you dare!"

Almost dragging Barton between them, Willoughby and Cotton made their way down the hill.

In spite of the clear futility of it, the young man begged them to release him, in order that he might offer some resistance, make some effort, he did not know what, to save Ramona from the fate which hung over her. It seemed to him incredibly wrong that he and his companions should accept their lives at her hands, knowing as they did that the girl had accused herself, given herself in fact, that they might go free. Yet to do anything under the circumstances was clearly impossible. To return, to attempt an attack upon the buccaneers would result in nothing, except certain death. The three did not speak, as they plodded heavily through the sand of the old Spanish road toward the town. Willoughby and Cotton were congratulating themselves upon their escape. Barton, his mind filled with the bitterest thoughts, scarcely realized their presence. Now that Ramona seemed lost to him he began to understand how deeply he loved her. He could not bring himself to believe that he would never see her again. His mind seemed numb—incapable of consecutive thought. One idea possessed him, revolved endlessly in his brain. He had deserted the woman he loved. How much better it would have been to have died with her.

As his mind gradually became clearer, other thoughts came to him. Was there no some way in which he might still come to her aid? He swept the harbor with impatient eyes. Amongst a clutter of masts and spars he made out The Thanksgiving, surrounded by a dozen or more vessels belonging to Morgan and his lieutenants. She was of inconsiderable size beside those lofty ships, Spanish built for the most part, captured and turned to the buccaneers' use, but upon her Barton knew there were half a hundred stout New Englanders, who slow they were to draw their swords, could use them lustily enough once they were drawn. He began to make vague plans; their purpose Ramona's rescue.

He spoke of the matter after a time to his companions but they gave him scant encouragement.

"There are a thousand bloodthirsty men in the town," Captain Willoughby said. "What could we hope to do against them?"

"There are but five at the house we have just left," Barton argued.

"They will not stay there, lad. Within an hour they will have returned to the town. What can it profit you to concern yourself further with this woman?"

"I will not leave her, Captain Willoughby, though I must go to her assistance single handed," Barton said. "Do not forget that to her we owe our lives. At least we must make an attempt to help her."

"I do not fail to realize what she has done. She is in a sad plight. Let us return first of all to the ship. After that we will take counsel as to what may best be undertaken."

To this Barton was forced to agree. At least it would afford him opportunity to arm himself. Afterwards he would come ashore and find out what he could concerning Ramona's fate. He felt a keen desire to try conclusions with the Portugee. It seemed to him inevitable that one or the other of them must die.

As matters stood the girl's case seemed hopeless enough. She had sworn by an oath he well knew she would not break to give herself in return for the safety of the three of them. What could be done now, to set her free? Barton could arrive at nothing, save a personal conflict between the Portugee and himself, and even that might be difficult, if not impossible, to bring about. And yet he resolved to try.

The little party went aboard The Thanksgiving in very low spirits. Cotton was all for getting up the anchor and making sail. He believed that could Barton once be gotten from this den of iniquity, as he characterized Port Royal, he would soon forget his mad infatuation. Willoughby, more human than his companion, was not so sure of this. He realized that Barton was very deeply in love, and sought in his mind for ways to help him, but found none.

The latter secured a cutlass from the ship's arms, and after an unsatisfactory conference with the two older men, once more made his way ashore. Cotton attempted by every means in his power to dissuade him from going but to no purpose.

"Would you have me desert the woman I love in her hour of need?" the young man asked bitterly.

"The lad is right," Willoughby interposed. "Trust in the Lord, my son. If you find that anything may be accomplished return here and as far as it lies in my power, I will assist you."

"I thank you, Captain Willoughby," Barton told him, his face very earnest and grave. "I will return, God willing, as soon as may be." Then he got into the small boat, and two of the crew rowed him ashore.

It was close to noon, now, and he wandered about the blazing streets of the town for hours. The heat of the sun was at its maximum; the place seemed deserted. The roisterers of the night before were sleeping off the effects of their debauch, while the townspeople as was their custom, dozed behind closely locked doors, in cool and shaded patios, until the fresh winds of evening should once more waken the town to its habitual activity. Barton made inquiry of a few slaves, but they could give him no information concerning the woman he sought. Even the taverns were for the most part deserted. A few bibulously inclined traders sat nodding over their wine glasses, but Barton had small hope of learning anything of interest from them.

He thought at one time of proceeding out the old Spanish road to the house where he and Ramona had parted, but it seemed a useless thing to do. Portuguese Joe and his companions numbered five; the odds were too greatly against him. In the town there remained always the opportunity to summon quick assistance from the ship. And then he felt sure that the Portugee and his companions must by now have returned.

As the afternoon wore on, he became well nigh distracted. The grave uncertainty, the fear that Ramona in her anguish might have killed herself, the greater fear that at Portugee Joe's hands she might suffer a fate worse than even death itself, all conspired to bring him to a state of desperation. At last, unable to learn anything concerning the girl in the town, he found himself in spite of all his arguments to the contrary, once more proceeding in the direction of her house. What he expected to find there he did not know, but his agony of mind drove him to action; he felt that he must do something—anything rather than remain longer in this dreadful uncertainty.

Having at last arrived at the turn in the road, he climbed the hill, and cautiously made his way through the underbrush towards the garden. Approaching the gate with the greatest care he peered within. There was no one in sight, nor could he distinguish the least sound to indicate that the buccaneers were still about the place.

Presently he entered. The garden presented a scene of the wildest disorder. Articles of clothing, utensils of various sorts were scattered about in confusion. Aparently the buccaneers had ransacked the house, carried away with them all that was of value and tossed the rest carelessly aside. In a far corner of the garden, a long narrow mound of freshly turned earth indicated the final resting place of him who in life had been called the Firebrand. Cold enough. Barton mused with the moist clay about him. At one end of the grave had been driven deep into the earth the dead man's rapier. It formed a fitting monument. By the sword he had lived—and died. There was a touch of irony, perhaps, in the cross formed by the hilt of the weapon. Ormiston had feared no God, nor worshipped any.

Barton turned towards the entrance to the house. On the threshold of the door lay a bit of ribbon. It had been Ramona's. That very morning she had employed it to tie up the masses of her hair. He picked up the bit of silk, tears crowding to his eyes, and kissing it thrust it beneath his belt. A great fear possessed him that this might be all he would find of the woman who had given her love, indeed her very life, into his keeping.

STANFIELD'S
Unshrinkable
UNDERWEAR

Owes its Popularity to the Very Best of Wool

Of the kinds of wool needed for the favorite lines of Stanfield's Underwear, we are the largest purchasers in Canada. This gives us command of the market, so that we are able to secure just what we want in weight and length of fibre—in fact, we get the pick of the kind of wool best suited to the many different weights and classes of Stanfield's Underwear.

Our practice is to buy our wool supply months ahead of requirements. This gives plenty of time to grade it accurately and clean it thoroughly. During the cleaning, and before it goes to the machines to be spun and knitted, a secret Stanfield's process takes the "shrink" out of the wool.

Made up into garments, this wool is delightfully soft, and so strong and durable that Stanfield's actually costs less per year of wear than the cheaper, less comfortable kinds. 18

For the growing child, Stanfield's new Adjustable Combinations and Adjustable Sleepers (with feet) are simply perfect. By moving the waist buttons each combination or sleeper can be kept just the right length till it is worn out, and the lower part of the garment can be quickly removed.

The man who has reported for service will be advised by Registered Letter as to anything thereafter required of him. He will not be required to report for duty or be placed on active service earlier than the 10th day of December, 1917.

How should claim for exemption be made ?

Claim for exemption may be made by any man in Class One, by his employer, business associate or near relative, but it is desirable that not more than one claim be made for any one man.

Forms of claim for exemption will be found in all Post Offices and will be transmitted free by the postmaster to the Registrar.

What are the grounds for Exemption ?

(a) That it is expedient in the national interest that the man should, instead of being employed in military service, be engaged in other work in which he is habitually engaged;

(b) That it is expedient in the national interest that, instead of being employed in military service, he be engaged in other work in which he wishes to be engaged and for which he has special qualification;

(c) That it is expedient in the national interest that, instead of being employed in military service, he should continue to be educated or trained for any work for which he is then being educated or trained;

(d) That serious hardship would ensue, if the man were placed on active service, owing to his exceptional financial or business obligations or domestic position;

(e) Ill health or infirmity;

(f) That he conscientiously objects to the undertaking of combatant service and is prohibited from so doing by the tenets and articles of faith, in effect on the sixth day of July, 1917, of any organized religious denomination existing and well recognized in Canada at such date, and to which he in good faith belongs.

(g) That he is exempt from combatant service because disfranchised under the War Times Election Act.

What is the last day for reporting for service or claiming Exemption ?

NOVEMBER 10th, 1917.

Issued by The Military Service Council.

HOME HEALTH CLUB

By DR. DAVID H. REEDER

HOME MEDICINE: Every bone, muscle, nerve, fiber and tissue, every drop of blood, every particle of your body is made up from the things that go into your mouth in the form of food and drink. Therefore every particle of your body is composed from your food.

Now, if you fully comprehend this fact then you should also comprehend the fact that the right food, eaten in the right way, should keep your body in perfect health, but right here we run up against a problem, and that is the problem of the mind. Is indigestion the cause of worry or is worry the cause of indigestion? Rather a startling question for you folks that are lean and nervous, for you that are easily excited and worry about nothing more than some people do about something. I have answered the question to my own satisfaction. It is one of the questions that works both ways. Worry, fear, shock, can cause indigestion, constipation, diarrhoea, cancer and many other diseases and indigestion can cause all of these sicknesses, and add to the ailments worry and fear.

By directing a very rigid and carefully planned course of diet, I have been able to take a thin, nervous, worrying, irritable sufferer, and transform them into a healthy, well-nourished, good natured and happy individual, and by another equally rigid course of diet I have transformed an almost helpless and hysterical fat woman into a very comfortable live and energetic body of proper proportions and a calm, sane and optimistic member of the family with whom it is a pleasure for their family to live, instead of a martyrdom.

One reason why so many are not able to digest their food is that they eat too great a variety of foods at the same time and the mixture is incompatible.

To illustrate: Oranges are an excellent food appealing alike to sight smell and taste. Lemons, strawberries, tart ripe apples, are all of them delicious and beneficial, likewise bread and cakes, mashed and baked or boiled potatoes or well cooked rice, and cereal breakfast foods. All are good and wholesome but when the excellent acid fruits are eaten at the same meal with the equally excellent and wholesome starchy foods you at once start trouble of a serious nature, for the two are incompatible and should not be eaten within two or three hours of each other.

There are many such things to learn about our diet that one must in order to be on the right side, confine each meal to a few well selected dishes that are well prepared and then make the teeth do their full duty before the food is allowed to pass into the stomach. Remember that the stomach has no teeth and you do not have a gizzard like a chicken, in which you can toss a lot of sand, pebbles, corn and refuse go be ground up while you sleep.

The best and most wholesome, and healthful way to prepare potatoes for eating is to wash and scrub them with a vegetable brush, wipe them dry and then dip them in cooking oil or take a small brush or cloth and rub the cooking oil over them and then bake them. You will enjoy eating the skins as well as the body of potatoes cooked in this way. If you do not like the skins you can save all of the vital principles or vitamines of the potato, and avoid the waste of pealing by putting them into boiling water for just ten minutes, then plunge them into cold water until cool enough to handle and you can take off the thin outer skin, just the same as from cold boiled potatoes, after which you can bake, brown or French fry or scallop them according to your desires.

Those of you who really want to help save the food supply should send at once to the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D.C., and get all of the bulletins on the subject. Especially those on canning, drying, salting and pickling vegetables. They are sent out free of expense to you. I would also suggest that you discontinue altogether the use of lard in cooking, for two reasons. Almost all or any of the prepared vegetable cooking oils are much more easily digested and wholesome, and besides after using them awhile you will find the food more appetizing and attractive, as well as more economical.

Those of you that are fond of egg plant will find that summer squash or tender young pumpkin cooked in the same way are even more delicious than egg plant, and much cheaper.

CLUB NOTES.

I will gladly answer all inquiries for information on health subjects from readers of this publication if the same are addressed to Home Health Club, 5039 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago, Ill. Send full name and address, with four cents in postage.

Dear Doctor: I want to first thank you for your letter which I received from you some time ago; and I want to thank you for the information you furnished me. You said that you thought that I lay with my head too low; and in this I have found that you were right. I have two more pillows under my head now and am free from the jerking that I had in my body. That is why I delayed writing you but now I am real well. I thank you a thousand times for your trouble.

(Answer) In a very large number of cases one can gain relief, even a cure, by making the necessary changes in one's method of living. The advice I gave you in regard to using more pillows seems to have been all that was needed in your case. In other cases there may be something else just as simple that is necessary to gain the desired result. The Home Health Club methods are so simple and practicable that one should never hesitate in following them whenever necessity demands it.

AUTOINTOXICATION OR SELF-POISONING

The Dangerous Condition Which Produces Many Well Known Diseases.

HOW TO GUARD AGAINST THIS TROUBLE

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" — The Wonderful Fruit Medicine — will Protect You

Autointoxication means self-poisoning, caused by continuous or partial constipation, or insufficient action of the bowels.

Instead of the refuse matter passing daily from the body, it is absorbed by the blood. As a result, the Kidneys and Skin are overworked, in their efforts to rid the blood of this poisoning.

Poisoning of the blood in this way often causes Indigestion, Loss of Appetite and Disturbed Stomach. It may produce Headaches and Sleeplessness. It may irritate the Kidneys and bring on Pain in the Back, Rheumatism, Gout, and Rheumatic Pains. It is the chief cause of Eczema — and keeps the whole system unhealthy by the constant absorption into the blood of this refuse matter.

"Fruit-a-tives" will always cure Autointoxication or self-poisoning — as "Fruit-a-tives" acts gently on bowels, kidneys and skin, strengthens the bowels and tones up the nervous system.

The Latest in Ladies' Coats And Dresses

NEW YORK, 27th Oct.—This is the harvest season; the watchful waiting and the hard labour of the summer months are being rewarded. Despite the predictions of the pessimists, the unusual condition of the weather, and the shortage of labour, here has never been so wonderful a crop of wheat, of corn, or of fashions. The matter has been so carefully systematised that the grade of efficiency reached in these patriotic endeavours is almost unbelievable. Speaking from the fashion standpoint, one can safely say that there never has been a time when the styles were so universally becoming and satisfactory. The Paris openings have brought out charming things. One hears of the marvellous materials, and one sees the models brought over by the intrepid buyers, and they are so interesting and wonderful that they seem too good to be true—almost!

The Narrow Way of the Skirt.

Yes, indeed, skirts are narrow, and there is a very good reason for their being so. The Government has asked that wool be conserved, and the patriotic designer and the fashionable woman alike cry, "Well, we can help by wearing skirts that are not too wide; let them be narrow." And narrow they are, too, and short, though perhaps not quite so short as last year. It is not comfortable to walk in a tight skirt that is long, and so once more we find commonsense aiding fashions. One must, however, not go to the other extreme and have the skirt too narrow for beauty.

The Fall Coat.

One of the big Paris houses has decided that the fall would not be fall without the coat suit, and so they are declaring, with all their might and main, that the smart thing is the suit, wrist-length coat, and short tight skirt. Another equally famous house forswears all allegiance to this old standby, and designs nothing but coats and dresses for street wear. So, there in a nutshell you have it, and the advanage is with you, for you are American and can decide for yourself this all-important question. There can be no doubt that the top coat has a place of its own in the wardrobe of the smart woman. If the coat be stylish and becoming of line and colour, the dress of last year can be worn with perfect confidence. (That is, if you don't take off your coat!)

A splendid example of an all-embracing, all-covering coat is illustrated here. It is made of fur cloth, with the square collar that is considered so unusually smart. The pocket sections, which give the wide hip effect, can be omitted, thus giving a coat built on straighter lines. As you see, it is full length, and is comforable in every respect. The large buttons and the contrasting fur cloth for the collar ad cuffs are the only trimming necessary.

The Coming-Out of Tucks.

There is nothing more attractive than the tiny tucks you find on everything. They are taking the place to a great extent of the hemstiching so much used for the past three or four seasons. Georgette crepe dresses have clusters of these tiny hand-run tucks, in the waists, sleeves, and skirts. They group themselves on satin collars, near you have it, and the advantage is satin frocks, sometimes completely routing all other trimming. They must be hand-run, and they must be very tiny; otherwise they may be used, at discretion, whenever and wherever you please, and the more the merrier. Wider tucks can be found on dresses of serge and satin, running around the skirts, one, two, three, and even four and five of them, placed several inches apart. They are usually from one to four inches wide.

Braid is a close second this year, and it is used in all widths. Black is preferred, or the color of the suit. One does not often see braid of a contrasting shade on the really distinctive costume. You see, everything is so simple this year, and all the more attractive on account of this simplicity.

Dated August, 1917.

News from the suit front declares that coats vary in length from the very short Eton jacket to the long three-quarter length coat. This coat-suit has all the earmarks of the last word in smartness. The long coat, thirty-nine inches in length, has a straight front in one with the shoulder yoke and deep hip pockets. The skirt is two-piece, comparatively narrow (measuring only two yards at the lower edge), and it has a high waist-line. Warm in colour, it is a real joy, and will appeal to women of taste all over the country.

To Dry Tomatoes.

Wash and slice into pieces one-fourth to three-eighths inch thick.

Place on trays in one layer.

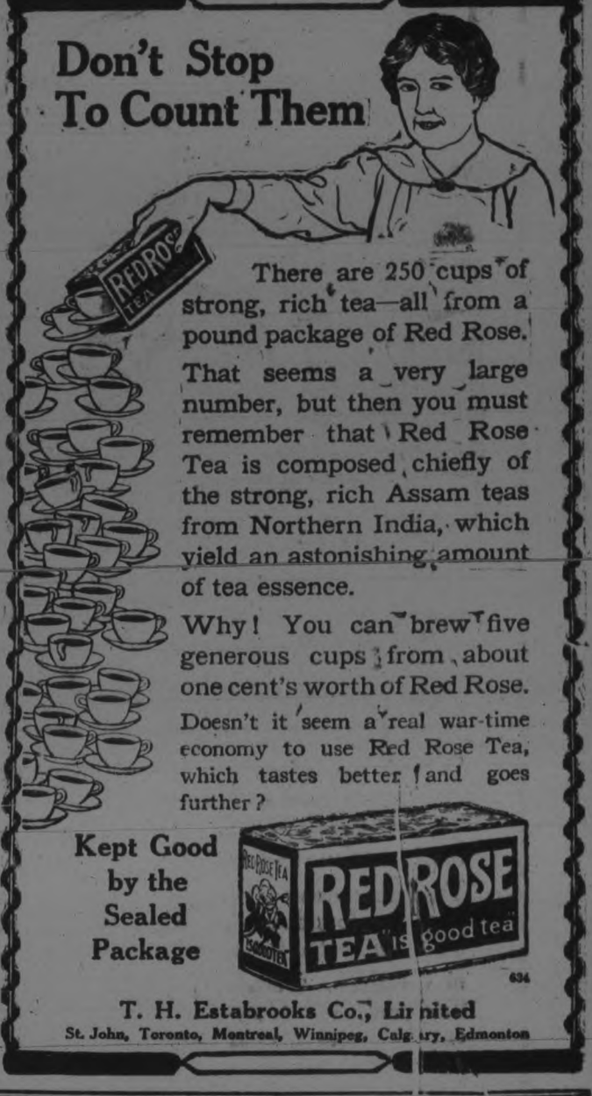
Dry in sun, in oven, over kitchen stove or before electric fan until leathery.

Ginger Bread.

1 cup sugar.
3 tablespoons molasses.
4 tablespoons melted butter.
1 even teaspoon salt.
1 dessert spoon cinnamon.
1 teaspoon mixed spice.

Stir and rub together. Then add 1 beaten egg and 1 cup sour milk. Sift 1 even teaspoon soda with 2 cups flour and sift into mixture and beat about 2 minutes. Sprinkle sugar on top and bake 20 minutes.

Don't Stop To Count Them



There are 250 cups of strong, rich tea—all from a pound package of Red Rose.

That seems a very large number, but then you must remember that Red Rose Tea is composed chiefly of the strong, rich Assam teas from Northern India, which yield an astonishing amount of tea essence.

Why! You can brew five generous cups from about one cent's worth of Red Rose.

Doesn't it seem a real war-time economy to use Red Rose Tea, which tastes better and goes further?

The desire to accumulate something for one's children is a commendable one; but it is well to bear in mind that the best things are to be given to the children personally, in good examples, kind words and thoughtful teachings. A very sensibl writer recently said about this important subject: "Children must be taught what the parents wish them to know. Teach them truthful, gentle ways and they will be true and gentle. If a boy learns bad habits from his father, he will repeat it just as certainly as he has a tongue in his mouth, and if a little girl hears her mother gossip she will gossip just as soon as she meets a playmate. People who devour their food like cattle must not expect their children to have good table manners. Gentlemen and good women are home made. There is nothing on earth for which one ought to be more thankful for than having been brought up in the atmosphere of a pure home. Such a home may be narrow and even hard, it may be deficient in material comforts. A man sturdy as an oak once said, "I was the soon of poor parents and from my youth up was innured to self denial and hardships but I do not remember of ever hearing a word from the lips of either my mother or of my father that was not as it should be. Better such recollections than a great inheritance."

Do we not, we children of a larger growth, know of pleasant words and endearing terms used only between husband and wife when they wish to impress outsiders with the felicity of the relations which assume a very different place as soon as the door is closed and there is no one around to see the averted gaze and the indifferent air which mark their natural behaviors. Why can't we wear our company manners with our everyday gowns instead of hanging them away out of sight only to be brought forth on occasions of ceremony along with our best bib and tucker?

* * *

Wouldn't life be richer and sweeter if more of the little courtesies were shown when there are no eyes to behold them save those that are sure to brighten at the unusual demonstration. Is there anyone in the world as sweet and true and devoted as the home folks, yet are there any in the whole wide world treated with the scant courtesy these dear ones receive? Bring the company manner into the intimacies of home and life and see how much brighter and sweeter will seem the world at large for the knowledge that you are giving your best to those who deserve it the most.

* * *

If charity covers a multitude of sins so does the love and obedience of a man for his mother. There are no virtues more highly applauded by grown men and women. And yet they are not common. Reverence for holy things is not uncommon and one of the holiest on earth or in heaven is a man's mother.

* * *

We are persuaded in our own minds that the cause of a great many disasters and ruined homes is owing to lack of concord between husband and wife in the management of family concerns. We could mention a score of women whose husbands have failed in business, or died insolvent, who did not have any idea of the state of his financial affairs, until the cruel blow came which turned them out to wrestle with poverty for the remainder of their life's day. Then oftener than otherwise, the world would say, "It was her extravagance that ruined him." Such an astute judge of things is the world!

* * *

Fathers now basking in the sunset of life may not readily recall all their early experiences in life, their struggles and triumphs of their childhood homes, the playhouses they helped their sisters build are photographed upon the heart's tablet and will never fade away. The golden light of eternity will not dim the brightness of this picture. One will never forget the place of his birth, the little broken cart, the sled, the kite, and the older brothers who led the way to the hill-side where the fairest wild flowers bloomed. These sacred memories will never grow less bright or dim with age.

* * *

There are many sins we can and must forgive, but disloyalty to father, or mother, sister or brother, is the act of a traitor and should be despised as such. If those who belong to us have faults let us hide them in our hearts that the world will not find them out. If misfortune comes to the one member of the family let all share it and help the unfortunate one to keep a proud face to the world. Let us be true to our own. Loyalty in friendship has been the theme of poets, but loyalty to the home and household is the fairest of virtues and covers a multitude of faults and follies.

* * *

There is no such thing as man's rights and woman's rights separate and distinct from each other. Woman's rights are simply human rights. The sexes belong to each other; what benefits one helps the other; what elevates either uplifts both. Man is the outdoor and woman the indoor partner in the firm of humanity.

* * *

If you want to be happy forget yourself and think of someone else, and if possible do something for someone else. Read to an old lady; send a bunch of flowers to a sick friend; dry the tears of a lowly child; say a kind word to a poor discouraged washerwoman; speak with a voice which

Inheritance Tax Argument

Inheritance taxes are very heavy. Unlike Fire hazard they are not merely possible, they are absolutely certain.

They deplete your estate at once, and to your heirs represent a specific and definite loss of money.

In New York a $250,000 estate would pay a combined Federal and state tax of about $12,000. If left to a friend or distant relative, about $22,000. The John Jacob Astor estate paid $3,150,000. J. P. Morgan has insured his life for $2,500,000 to cover a similar loss.

Thus the estate is provided promptly with the ready cash to pay this tax and other expenses without the need of hurriedly disposing of securities or other assets, perhaps at a loss, to meet such needs. The logic of the situation urges immediate action. Premium rates, however low, advance with age and so does the possibility of entering the physically impaired group and losing the opportunity to secure this protection.

Knowing that this loss is actually coming, it is simply a matter of ordinary business prudence to guard against it. The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada offer you a plan to do so at very low cost.

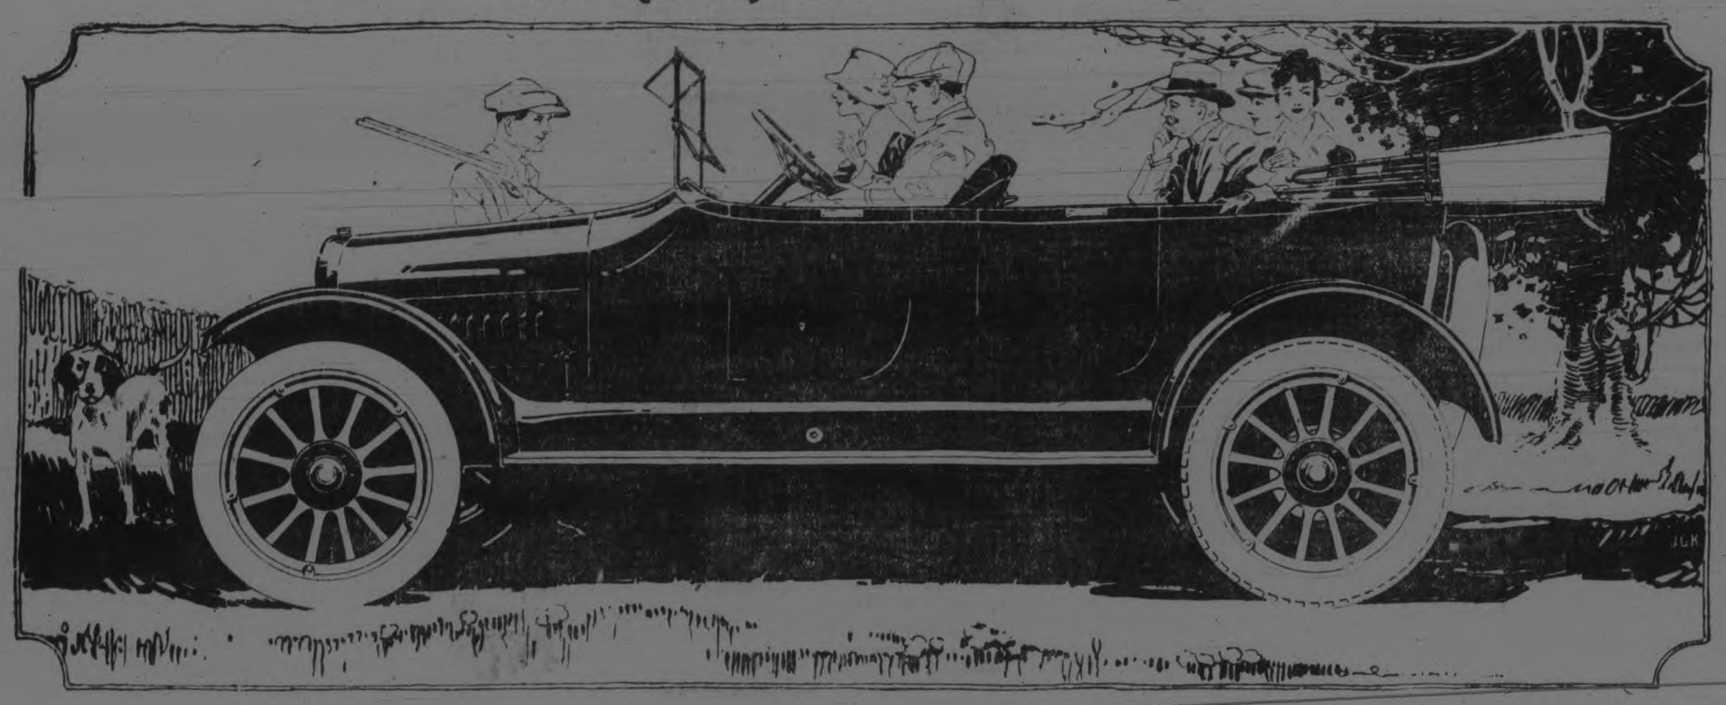
"The Quality Goes Clear Through"



THE DOUBLE GUARANTEE

TWO reputations guard your investment when you purchase a Gray-Dort.

Two liabilities are your assurance of doubly-satisfactory use and service.

Two institutions striving in united effort to maintain the foundation on which they have been built—full value to you, the purchaser.

In Chatham, Ontario, the Wm. Gray & Sons Company and Gray-Dort Motors Limited—the one hale and solid at sixty-two, the other strong and lusty in two years.

In Flint, Michigan, since 1885, the Durant-Dort Carriage Company; since 1915, the Dort Motor Car Company.

Gray—the Industry and its Builder

Our fathers and grandfathers rode in Gray Carriages—and found them built on honor and character.

In 1855, William Gray built the first of them—built them so well that Gray quality became proverbial.

Growing up in this atmosphere of big business, of successful enterprise, of worthy endeavour, was Robert Gray.

Under his guiding hand the Gray institution has been builded solidly on its original foundation—value and service to the purchaser.

When others rushed into the motor car industry, Robert Gray bided his time.

Others experimented—on the motorist.

Others gained the reputation of a day—and lost it.

Robert Gray knew that the car bearing his name must have the same underlying qualifications as the Gray carriage—so he waited.

Dort—at the Same Time, in Flint

Paralleling the growth of Gray in Canada, was a similar institution in the United States.

Blue Ribbon Buggies were to Americans what Gray Buggies were to Canadians.

J. D. Dort, too, was building in Flint, as Robert Gray was building in Chatham.

J. D. Dort, too, was analyzing the motor car industry.

In 1915, Robert Gray decided that a good motor car could be built and sold at a reasonable price.

In 1915, J. D. Dort, studying the situation from the same angle, came to the same conclusion.

The two men met. Their identical views and aspirations inevitably attracted them to one another.

They chose as the engineering groundwork for their organization, Etienne Planche, designer of the world-famed Pugeot motor. They surrounded him with men of equal calibre, who round out an institution unique in its man-power.

After Such Preparation—

With two institutions so solidly founded the first Gray-Dort was built.

Is it any wonder that in three days the entire 1916 output was sold?

It was to be expected that a doubled output for 1917 was heavily oversold.

The output for 1918 is doubled again—and may be inadequate.

OLD JAIL HORRORS

When Imprisonment For Debt Was the Law of the Land.

TORTURE FOR ITS VICTIMS.

Poor Wretches Unable to Pay the Trifle They Owed Were Flung Into Prison to Starve to Death Unless Rescued by Charity or Their Creditors.

In the early part of the last century there was started an earnest effort to entirely abolish or at least to regulate the old colony law of imprisonment for debt. The movers in this abolishment felt that no class of the community deserved consideration more.

It had been the inhuman rule that for the smallest debt possible to contract, though it were but a cent in value, the body of the debtor, whether man or woman, would be seized by the creditor and cast into jail.

Each year poor wretches had been dragged to prison by thousands on what were truly called "spite actions." Once behind the prison walls they were consigned to a fate harder than that which awaited worse criminals.

Murderers and thieves, forgers and counterfeiters, real criminals of all kinds, were fed, clothed and cared for at the expense of the state, but for the unhappy man whose only offense was his inability to pay a trifling sum of a few cents no such provision was made. The food he ate, the shreds that covered him, the medicine he took—nay, the very rags he wrapped about his sores—were provided, if provided at all, by his friends, by the public or by some humane society.

The room in which he was confined with scores of other offenders was utterly without furniture of any sort. In it were neither beds, nor tables, nor chairs, nor so much as a bench or stool. He sat on the floor, ate off the floor and at night lay to sleep on it like a dog, and this misery he endured until he died or his debt was paid or his creditor released him.

Against this at length humanity revolted, and in 1794 a change for the better was ordered. It was stipulated that the inspector should provide fuel and blankets for such debtors as, by reason of their dire property, could not get them and should make an allowance of 7 cents a day for food and charge this against the creditors. If any creditor refused to pay after ten days' notice his debtor was to be discharged.

For twenty-two years the community seemed to have thought that this mild concession was all that humanity required, for no further change was made until 1814. Then was passed the "bread act," under which each prisoner whose debt did not exceed $15 was entitled to a discharge after an imprisonment of thirty days.

From documents presented to the senate of New York in 1817 it appears that the keeper of the debtors' jail in New York city certified that during 1816 1,984 debtors were confined and that upward of 600 were always in the prison. The sheriff of the county certified that 1,129 were imprisoned for debt under $50, that of these 729 owed less than $25 and that every one of them would have starved to death but for the assistance of the Humane society.

One man remained, it was noted, in the New York jail for three years, who was only indebted to the extent of $50, before death ended his misery and during the entire time was fed by the Humane society. Another unfortunate had been imprisoned six years and was supported by charity. In the face of such striking evidence the legislature of New York state relented and in 1817 forbade the imprisonment of debtors for sums less than $25. This led the way, and state after state followed.

When the new states in the west framed their constitutions they ordered that no one should be imprisoned for debt. The old statute was finally stricken from the laws of the eastern states until today none of our states has a law requiring that a debt is punishable by imprisonment, unless it has been contracted under some fraudulent misrepresentation.—Philadelphia Press.

When Death Cools His Sting.

There is a curious superstition in Jamaica that if a death occurs in the house all the water in it is poisoned at once and must be thrown away, the reason given being that Death cools his "sting" after destroying life in the first water he finds, and as no one can tell—death being invisible—what jar he may choose it is safest to throw it all away. Careful people to save trouble even carry all water out of the house immediately before a death is expected.

DISCHARGE DEPOTS ARE FLOODED WITH MANY FAKE TELEGRAMS

"Home casualties" keep the wires hot and the messenger boys on the run when the transports land at the eastern ports with their loads of discarded warriors, returned to Canada unfit for further service.

The homecoming boys might be a plague descending upon Canada judging the effect upon the health and longevity of their relatives. Telegrams pour in from every section of the Dominion to the Discharge Depots of the Military Hospitals Commission, urging that John be sent home at once. His mother is dying; his father is dead; his wife and children have been evicted from their home; he has just become the proud father of twins—no misfortune in the whole category of calamities has been overlooked in the endeavour to free John quickly from the red tape of discharge and restore him to his family.

Job For Clairvoyant.

Picking up the trumped up messages from those based upon fact is the business of the O.C. and staff and deciding how dead a man's father is after 75 out of a hundred messages have proven fake is a test for any man's intuition.

"These boys have had pretty tough luck overseas in some cases," declared Lt.-Col. Mariott, O.C. of the Quebec Discharge Depot, "but it's nothing in comparison to the line up of troubles that greet them when they land in Canada if you were to judge by the telegrams we receive."

"They are anxious to get home, and their people are just as anxious to have them, and the nearer they get the harder it seems to wait. In many cases we have found that the boys have sent telegrams asking their relatives to wire for them.

Get Benefit of Doubt

"In many cases they have put it over on us, but we catch most of them. In case of death you can't be too sure even though there is a lot of dramatic talent loose in the place, for you'd rather be on the safe side and fooled, than hold a man up to the regular routine and find out too late that the wire was authentic.

"We try to get the fellows off with all the dispatch we can muster. Not a man is held over a day longer than is necessary and once they have been here a day or so they realize that, but when they first land, all they want is to get home, and every man thinks that he is the first one who ever thought of wiring for himself." (4)

MAKING THE MOST OF THE WAR.

Let us all see what we can of this war while we are in it. Every one who can should see the soldiers' training camps, and know what is going on. Most of us need to get more vivid impressions than we have now. We are having a great national experience, such as we can not afford to have often, and we ought all to try to take it in while any of it is in sight, and think out what it means. The great end of war is to make people think; to get them out of ruts of habit and take-for-granted, and drive necessary new ideas into their heads. We don't want to miss any of the necessary new ideas that this unprecedented war is bringing to mankind. We don't want to suffer so many pains of heart, do such a lot of work, and spend such an unconscionable amount of money without getting out of the effort every spiritual and mental benefit there is in it. This war, above all things, is education. Let us learn from it; learn far more than geography and foreign politics; learn self-sacrifice, co-operation, temperance, thrift, human fellowship.

Sunday Sermon For Those Who Do Not Go To Church

(By JAS. SUTHERLAND)

Genesis, 24th chap., 4th verse: But thou shalt go unto my country, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son Isaac.

The effect of good example, good instruction, and the worship of God in a family will generally appear in the piety, faithfulness, prudence and affection of the domestics. To live in such families or to have such servants, both are blessings from God which should be highly valued and thankfully acknowledged. No concern in life is of greater importance to ourselves, to others, or to the Church of God than contracting marriage. It therefore ought always be undertaken with much care and prudence, especialy with reference to the will and appointments of God and with prayer to God for His direction and blessing. It is an important part of a parent's duty to direct assist, and counsel children if this matter, and young persons who are wise will avail themselves of such an advantage where such parents are not consulted and regarded. The blessing of God cannot be expected. Abraham's pious care concerning his son was that he should not marry with a daughter of Canaan, because he saw that the Canaanites were degenerating into great wickedness and knew by revelation that they were designed for ruin. Parents, in disposing of their children, should carefully consult the welfare of their souls and their furtherance in the way to Heaven. Those who through grace have escaped the corruption which is in the world through lust, and have brought up their children accordingly, should take heed of doing anything by which they may again be entangled and overcome (2nd Peter, 2-20. Beware that you bring them not thither again. (Heb. 11, 15). See the charge Abraham gave to a good servant, Elizer of Damascus, one whose conduct, fidelity, and affection to his master and to his family he had long experienced. This matter was settled with a great deal of care and solemnity, making oath being an ordinance not peculiar to the church, but common to mankind, is to be performed by such signs as are the appointments and common usages of our country for binding the person sworn. He must be clear of this oath, if when he had done his utmost he could not prevail. Oaths are to be taken with great caution, and the matter sworn to should be rightly understood and limited. See also the confidence Abraham had in God, who, he doubts not, will give his servant success in this undertaking. He remembers that God had wonderfully brought him out of the land of his nativity by the effectual call of His grace; and therefore doubts not but He will succeed him in his care, not to bring his son thither again. Those who carefully keep in the way of duty and govern themselves by the principles of their religion in their designs and undertakings have good reason to expect prosperity and success in them. God will cause that to issue in our comfort, in which we sincerely aim at His glory. God's promises and our own experiences are sufficient to encourage our dependence upon God, and our expectations from Him, in all the affairs of this life. Abraham's servant devoutly acknowledged God in a particular manner. We have leave to be particular in recommending our affairs to the conduct and care of the Divine Providence. He pleads God's covenant with his master Abraham. As the children of good parents, so the servants of good masters have peculiar encouragement in the prayers they offer to God for prosperity and success. He proposes a sign, not by it to limit God or with a design to proceed no further if he were not gratified in it, but it is a prayer that God would provide a good wife for his young master; and that was a good prayer. He knew that a prudent wife is from the Lord (Prov. 19, 14), and therefore that for this he will be inquired of. She should unite in her character simplicity, industry, humility, and cheerfulness, in being serviceable and hospitable. Whatever may be the fashion of a luxurious and dissipated age, commonsense as well as piety tell us these are the proper qualifications for a wife and mother —for one who is to be a companion to her husband, the manager of domestic concerns, and entrusted to form the minds of children. We have got a poor exchange in our excessive refinements, for the simplicity, diligence, and usefulness of the patriarchs. When he came to seek a wife for his master he did not go to places of amusement and pray that he might meet one there, but to the well of water, expecting to find one there well employed. It also is a prayer that God would make his way in this matter plain and clear before him by the concurrence of minute circumstances in his favour. It is the comfort as well as the belief of a good man that God's providence extends itself to the smallest occurrences, and admirably serves its own purposes by them. Our times are in God's hands; not only events themselves, but the times of them. It is our wisdom in all our affairs to follow Providence and folly to force it. It is very desirable, and that which we may lawfully pray for while in the general, we set God's will before us as our rule that He would by hints of providence direct us in the way of our duty and give us indications of what His mind is. Thus He guides his people with His eye (Psa. 32, 8) and leads them in a plain path (Psa. 27, 11). There needs, however, great caution in imitating such examples now the written word is complete and given for word is complete. We are not wholly to condemn these things when they do not induce men to act contrary to the plain rule of their duty, nor are substituted as the foundation of hope, instead of the promise of God and the [illegible] of [illegible] heart; yet we must take heed of being over-bold in proscribing to God lest the event should weaken our faith rather than strengthen it. God owned him by a particular providence according to his faith, so was it done unto him. The answer to this prayer was speedy and satisfactory. Rebekah, in all respects, answered the character he wished for in the woman that was to be his young master's wife—handsome and healthful, humble and industrious, very courteous and obliging to a stranger, and having all the marks of a good disposition. When she came to the well, she went down and filled her pitcher, and came up to go home with it. She did not stand to gaze upon the strange man and his camels, but minded her business, and would not have been diverted from it but by an opportunity of doing good. She did not curiously or confidently enter into discourse with him, but modestly answered him with all the decorum that became her sex. What a degenerate age do we live in, in which appears all the instances of pride, luxury, and ease—the reverse of Rebekah's character, whose daughters few are. He had servants with him, who might have spared Rebekah her labour, but he interposed not, that he might observe her conduct and wait the answer to his prayer. Her conduct, in itself so amiable and so exactly in unison with his wishes, struck him with a kind of amazement, accompanied with a momentary hesitation, whether all could be true. Recovering from his astonishment, and being satisfied that the Lord indeed had heard his prayer, he presented the damsel with certain ornaments worn in Eastern countries, inquiring at the same time respecting her kindred. On learning that she was of his master's relations, his heart was so full that he could not contain himself. He bowed down his head and worshipped, blessing God. His words were addressed to the Lord, but being spoken in the hearing of Rebekah, she could perceive who he was, whence he came, and that the hand of the God of Abraham was in the visit, whatever the object of it might be. Full of joyful surprise, she ran home and old the family what had passed. The story of the making up of the marriage between Isaac and Rebekah will be continued next week (D.V.) —Yours sincerely.

Nov. 3, 1917.

President Wilson and Arthur James Balfour are said to have found a new bond of sympathy between them when Mr. Balfour visited Washington. Both are fond of detective stories as a relaxation. Balfour's taste runs to "penny shockers." When in his leisure he is not devouring the deeds of "Old Sleuth" or "Nick Carter," the English Foreign Minister turns to works of philosophy. "On the trip across, the number of 'penny shockers' was limited," said one of the party. "We had to pass them around. I was telling Mr. Balfour of one he hadn't read. 'Who wrote it?' he asked. 'I readdy didn't notice. 'That's always the way,' he said, sadly. 'One never does. So ungrateful; so ungrateful!'"

PAIN? NOT A BIT!
LIFT YOUR CORNS
OR CALLUSES OFF

No humbug! Apply few drops then just lift them away with fingers.

This new drug is an ether compound discovered by a Cincinnati chemist. It is called freezone, and can now be obtained in tiny bottles as here shown at very little cost from any drug store. Just ask for freezone. Apply a drop or two directly upon a tender corn or callus and instantly the soreness disappears. Shortly you will find the corn or callus so loose that you can lift it off, root and all, with the fingers.

Not a twinge of pain, soreness or irritation; not even the slightest smarting, either when applying freezone or afterwards.

This drug doesn't eat up the corn or callus, but shrivels them so they loosen and come right out. It is no humbug! It works like a charm. For a few cents you can get rid of every hard corn, soft corn or corn between the toes as well as painful calluses on bottom of your feet. It never disappoints and never burns, bites or inflames. Genuine freezone is sold only in these small bottles packed in a little sealed wood case, bearing a yellow wrapper. Beware of imitations.

SUGAR PRICES DROP

Atlantic Sugar Refineries Lead In Reduction of the Price of Sugar

OFFICIAL announcement issued today reads as follows: It is our opinion that the price of sugar in the United States and Canada will be gradually reduced during the next three months, and, in accordance with this view, this company has today marked down all grades of "LANTIC" 10c per 100 pounds.

In following the markets through the year 1917 this Company has been consistently correct in its advice.

No Sugar Famine Threatens

Our refinery has been operated steadily throughout the year, and while we have not a large stock of sugar to distribute at the moment, we intend to keep the refinery running continuously and we are doing everything possible to meet the demands of the purchasing public.

We believe that there has been sufficient raw sugar contracted for to fill the normal Canadian requirements, if hoarding and speculating are eliminated, until the new sugar crop is available.

Further reductions in price will be made by us from time to time as conditions warrant.

BRITISH IMPORTS

LONDON, Oct. 31. — American manufacturers must be suffering acutely from British control downward in imports. It is almost impossible to buy any kind of American-made articles. I know from personal inquiries that the supply of American typewriters has been shut off.

The submarine war has made necessary the drastic cutting down of imports. According to the best figures I am able to get, United Kingdom imports before the war rose to 58,000,000 tons. In 1916 they were 43,000,000 tons. The estimate for 1917 is 33,000,000 tons.

The decrease is accounted for partly by a greater economy in use and partly by increased home production, especially in agriculture. The education that most seriously affects the welfare of the country is that in material for productive industries. The decline in this item is from 40,000,000 tons before the war to an estimated level of 15,000,000 tons in 1917.

I asked one of the most sagacious Swiss statesmen when the war would come to an end. He deliberated a full minute before returning the answer: "Not this year. Conditions are not yet ripe."

This particular statesman is supposed to have Entente leanings, though Switzerland as a whole is rated as pro-German by a narrowing margin. The army or, to speak more accurately, the officers—are notoriously pro-German. Switzerland has modeled her army by German standards, and the staffs of the two countries have thereby been brought into close relationship. Within a few months there is thought to have been a growth of Entente sentiment among the people which has tended to even up the natural preponderance attributable to ties of blood and language.

When I was in Berne recently I was impressed by the great number of bakeshops. One might conclude from a casual examination that the Bernese stomach is insatiable. Upon inquiry I learned that in Switzerland there is no baking whatever in the house and all bread and pastry come from these bakeries. Baking has become a business that is handed down for generations in the same family with a pride of excellence peculiar to an old country.

In America the typical small baker thinks of advancing his son to a more lucrative business and a better social position. In Switzerland the same business and the same shop pass from father to son and grandson. The family, perhaps, possesses the secret of making a certain kind of cake which is treasured for scores of years and is the basis of prosperity and fortune.

An encouraging straw: Paris hotels have recently been receiving applications for rooms after the war. Among those who have booked at the Ritz I noticed the names of Mr. and Mrs. John C. King of New York. The rush of Americans to Europe is expected to be the outstanding feature of the first Summer season after peace.

If the war should end to-day France would have a mending job on her hands that might require a quarter of a century. The withdrawal of energy from normal uses has compelled general neglect, especially in Paris. The beautiful old city is, in many quarters, in a tumble-down condition that will make necessary the putting forth of that energy on which the French character excels. It will be a rare treat to see the French hustling on the job of re-building, repairing and tidying up.

Before the recent attack on Lens Canadian soldiers were numerous on the streets of Paris. Evidently leaves had been granted in large number by way of freshening men of the shock regiments. A week or two ago there was an influx of Scotch in Paris, and kilted men walking five and six abreast were the cynosure of admiring eyes on the boulevards.

These prettiest of all soldiers men —in the soldier man way—were like colts loose in a paddock. As they walked along they would often play rooster, doing a kind of chicken step and shoving at each other shoulder first. The liberty of the sidewalk was cheerfully accorded these young men, brimming over with the spirit of youth—a spirit which has made the kilted men one of Fritz's betes noirs.

From a source closely connected with the inner life of the King and Queen of Greece I have heard interesting gossip of their feelings toward and relationship with, the Queen's brother, Kaiser Wilhelm. Things often appear very different when looked at from the inside instead of the outside.

"King Constantine and Queen Marie are far from loving the Kaiser," my informant said. 'They feared him, and with good reason. Hardly a day passed without some threatening communication from him. He literally made life a burden to them. The King was a physical wreck from cigarette smoking, and between the demands of the Allies and the bullying of his brother-in-law exile was a relief. You will notice that the royal couple have shown no undue haste about taking refuge in Germany."

STORING THE WINTER VEGETABLES.

If your potatoes have not yet been harvested, get them in at once; your dried beans will not be injured by freezing, but they must be kept dry. Apples keep best at a temperature of about 33 deg., but pears require a slightly warmer storage place; both will keep much longer if packed with the stems on. Ripe, solid, unbruised bunches of grapes may be packed in boxes of clean, dry sawdust or sand for early winter use; cool them for several hours in the cellar before packing. When your asparagus has turned brown, cut it back close to the ground and burn the tops. House plants that have been set outdoors during the summer must be brought in now. Some flowers for next spring may now be planted; for instance, in Southern gardens hardy annuals may safely be sown. Bulbs, too, can be tucked away in the garden to sleep for a few months and awake in all their glory in the spring. Gladioli bulbs should be dug up, placed in paper bags, and hung where they will be cool, but will not freeze. Dahlia-roots, too, are now to be taken up, packed in sand, and stored with the vegetable-roots. A final warning is timely. Seed of all kinds is apt to be scarce in the spring; hence a wise precaution will be to set aside some of your own. It requires just one thing —to keep absolutely dry during the winter.

POULTRY WISE.

That Thanksgiving turkeys are not as fine birds as are Christmas turkeys is a statement for which Good Housekeeping is responsible. The following quotation is from the October issue:

"Turkeys require a considerable degree of cold to develop proper texture. The Thanksgiving turkey is not a superior bird, its popularity to the contrary notwithstanding, because at Thanksgiving the weather has not been cold long enough to bring out his best qualities. The Christmas turkey is far superior.

"The wise housekeeper will learn the various seasons for different kinds of birds. She will know, for instance, that the first squab chickens or baby broilers appear on the market about the last of March, and that the larger broilers come in during April and last through August. The frying chicken makes its appearance in July; the roasting chicken during August or September, and the capon is at its best during December, January and February. The fowl for soup or fricassee may be had at all seasons of the year, but is more costly at some times than others, and the same may be said of the old rooster. Ducks and geese are at their best during the cold weather."

IF BACKACHY OR KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat less meat also take glass of Salts before eating breakfast

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a real sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad. Eat less meat, drink lots of water also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithea-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

NERVOUS AILMENTS

Few people realize that nervous ailments often arise from digestive troubles. The stomach fails, for some reason, to digest food properly. Then the system languishes and the nerves become exhausted in striving to continue their work. Impure blood also causes nerve troubles, but frequently it is in the stomach where the mischief starts. As the nourishment is carried to the nerves by the blood, it will be seen what an important connection exists between the stomach, the nerves and the blood, and how such troubles as nervous headaches, nervous dyspepsia and insomnia may begin.

In such cases relief is easily obtainable by means of Dr. Williams Pink Pills. These pills replenish the blood with the food elements on which the nerves thrive; at the same time they exercise a tonic influence on the digestive organs, enabling the system to derive nourishment from the food taken. By this perfectly natural process nervous ills are steadily dispelled by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. If you are suffering from nerves, or require a blood-making tonic, give these pills a fair trial and see how speedily the best of health will be yours.

You can get these pills through any dealer in medicine, or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE LIGHTING OF A ROOM.

The comfort and balance of a room may be completely spoiled by carelessly placed lighting fixtures, and therefore much consideration should be given them. Not only must they conform to the architecture of the room, and be one of the chief decorative features, but they must be conveniently placed for reading, for the writing-desk, and for the piano. Very often, wall fixtures are set in paneling, and are its only decoration, and in such cases especially they should be worthy of their responsibility. Nowadays, the most beautiful of old fixtures are being reproduced in carved wood, antique gold, hand-wrought iron, or delicate glass to suit each type of room. In addition to these side-lights, there should be as many base-plugs as possible to provide for extra lights upon tables, beside chairs, and so forth. Beautiful lamps can be made of old candlesticks, pottery, or vases—or if one has handsome oil lamps, these, too, can be converted into electric lamps.

As to the question of shades: here again one must exercise great care in choosing, for they must not only strike an important colour-note, but they must be harmonious with the rest of the room, both by day and by night. Some shades are beautiful by day, and lose al charactes whese there are lights; so in buying or ordering lamp-shades, be sure to see the light through the material to be used before making a decision. The painted parchment shades are very much used now, as they lend themselves to almost any scheme of decoration. Chiffon shades, too, in layers of contrasting colours, are very lovely, and vie with those of thin silk which have held their supremacy so long. Garish light by day and badly shaded lights at night detract more than any other element from the charm of a room. A soft mellow light diffused through thin silk, chiffon, or gauze curtains is very restful, and such curtaining of the light is a simple and effective way to temper it. A room should not, by any means, have the gloom of twilight upon it, but should have a light which rests kindly upon all objects, and above all should avoid the deadly searching white light which hunts out the weak spots and brings them shamelessly into view.

WAR TAKES GENIUS.

Francis Ledwidge, Irish Peasant Poet, Killed on Western Front.

The war has exacted yet another toll from the children of genius, Francis Ledwidge, the young Irish poet, who, Lord Dunsany believes, would have surpassed even Robert Burns, was killed in one of the recent battles on the western front. He was a lance corporal in the Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, the Irish regiment of which his discoverer and friend, Lord Dunsany, is a captain.

Francis Ledwidge was strangely like Burns in several respects. He was a peasant, and he wrote with a pen that kept true to Nature and to men. Born in a little cottage in County Meath, he lived as a laborer, earning a shilling a day. It is said that among his jobs at one time was that of scavenging. Lord Dunsany, one of the great literary figures developed in the last decade, came upon the Irish lad, found the poet's soul in him, encouraged him, and aided him in the publication of his earlier verses.

"The boy gave me a very old copybook, the product of four or five years. It was filled with verses, and began with a play that no manager would dream of accepting. There were mistakes in spelling, of grammar, and worse. But out of these there rose continually, like a mountain sheer out of marshes, that easy fluency of shapely lines that is now so noticeable in all he writes; that and sudden glimpses of the fields he seems to bring so near.

He was only 23 years old when the war broke out, and he was among the first of the Irish to hear the epic call to duty. He went through all the Gallipoli campaign, that campaign that cost the life of Rupert Brooke, another young poet of promise. And, too, he was in the great retreat from Serbia, which men still speak of with horror. His health was so broken by his experiences in the eastern campaigns that he was invalided home. He might have remained there, to develop his rare ability, honored as one who had done his part. But as soon as he recovered sufficiently he rejoined his command, now on the western front, and fought there till he was killed by a bursting shell.

"He was just beginning," said Herbert Jenkins, the London publisher who had introduced his poems to the public. "Had he lived I believe he would have been one of the world's great poets. He was intensely conscious of the fact that he was still groping, as he put it, and he once said that he wished he had not put out his first book of poems. His second volume will be published soon."

His poems were just beginning to attract some attention in America. William Stanley Braithwaite, the Boston Transcript's critic, wrote of Ledwidge:

"He has a sweet and appealing quality; he sings about blackbirds with a variety of emotion that makes that bird's song sweeter to him than the nightingales. His singing is always in a light and minor key, but his most conspicuous accomplishment is a fresh and felicitous phrasing."

One of his earlier poems, "Behind the Closed Eye," follows:

I walk the old frequented ways
That wind around the tangled braes,
I live again the sunny days
Ere I the city knew.

And scenes of old again are born,
The woodbine lassoing the thorn,
And drooping Ruth—like in the corn
The poppies weep the dew.

Above me in their hundred schools
The magpies bend their young to rule,
And like an apron full of jewels
The dewy cobwebs swing.

And frisking in the stream below
The troutlets make the circles flow,
And the hungry crane doth watch them grow
As a smoker does his ring.

Above me smokes the little town,
With its whitewashed walls and roofs of brown
And its octagon spire toned smoothly down
As the holy minds within.

And wondrous impudently sweet,
Half of him passion, half conceit,
The blackbird calls down the street
Like the piper of Hamelin.

I hear him and I feel the lure
Drawing me back to the homely moor,
I'll go and close the mountains door
On the city's strife and din.

First Use of Jingo.

George Jacob Holyoake, the apostle of co-operation, was the first to make use of the nickname "Jingo" in reference to a wrong kind of patriotism in a letter which he wrote to the Daily News about the Disraelian chauvinists in 1878. Nobody yet knows for certain where the word came from, or what was its original meaning. Motteux, in his 17th century translation of Rabelais, gave "par Dieu" as "by Jingo;" it is some people's opinion that "Jingo" is the Basque for "God,' and that the word made through the medium of Masque sailors.—The Argonaut.

This home-made remedy is a wonder for quick results. Easily and cheaply made.

The prompt and positive action of this simple, inexpensive home-made remedy in quickly healing the inflamed or swollen membranes of the throat, chest or bronchial tubes and breaking up tight coughs, has caused it to be used in more homes than any other cough remedy. Under its healing, soothing influence, chest soreness goes, phlegm loosens, breathing becomes easier, tickling in the throat stops and you get a good night's restful sleep. The usual throat and chest colds are conquered by it in 24 hours or less. Nothing better for bronchitis, hoarseness, croup, whooping cough, bronchial asthma or winter coughs.

To make this splendid cough syrup, pour 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth) into a 16-oz. bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup and shake thoroughly. You then have 16 ounces—a family supply of a much better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for $2.50. Keeps perfectly and children love its pleasant taste.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract and is known the world over for its promptness, ease and certainty in overcoming stubborn coughs and chest colds.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

"Halton Feast" Is Still Very Picturesque Event . Recalling Middle Ages

IT is not that Halton is an important place. It is, in fact, only a village, and the traveler who takes the road to York from the great city nearby, and passes through it, as he would when some three miles on his way, would hardly give it more than the scantiest notice. To be sure, he would have it in view for some time before he came to it. He would see the spire of the village church high up, on the top of Halton Hill poking up amidst a belt of green trees, whilst the sign board on the tollhouse by the crossroads at the foot would tell him that Halton was two miles away. Then as, the hill surmounted, he finally passed through the long, straggling village street, with its wonderful variety of inns, telling of the days when Halton was a great coaching place, he would notice, maybe, the strange admixture of the old and the new to be seen everywhere. He would have something more than a suspicion that people from the great city behind him had discovered Halton. He would look down side roads, all too evidently being "developed." He would see villas erected or in course of erection; whilst, ever and again, a new building, such as the branch of a bank in th great city, would tell of growing prosperity.

On the whole, however, he would, as has been said, be inclined to dismiss Halton with but scant notice. And yet, he would be wrong. The fact is, of course, that Halton was Halton long before the great city nearby was so much as a village, and it is this fact that gives so much importance to Halton Feast. Halton has had a feast in September, for centuries. For centuries Halton Feast has been a waymark in the life of the countryside. It has fixed the position of great happenings and of little happenings. Anything at all that happened within reasonable distance of September was dated from its relation to Halton Feast—so many weeks before or so many weeks afterwards. And it was not only so in Halton and the immediate countryside, but in the great city, also. To be sure, nowadays a new generation has grown up that knows not Halton; but there are hundreds and thousands of people who still hold Halton Feast as a landmark, just as they do Christmas, or August Bank Holiday. "Ah allus sez to mesell that t' summer's ower when it coomes ta 'Alton Feast." Halton is, of course, in Yorkshire.

And so it comes about, when the day arrives, that bills reminding people of Halton Feast will be displayed in the great city. The tramways will lay themselves out to convey as large a number of people as possible to the nearest point to the village on the hill, sure that there the strangest variety of vehicles will be waiting to convey the visitors to the village itself. The railway companies will do the same, whilst midst the bustle and traffic of the great city will be seen wagonettes, char-a-bancs, and, nowadays, motor vehicles of all kinds, displaying prominently the legend, "Halton Feast All the Way 'is." And it is harvest time and dahlia time, and the air, even of the great city, is fresh with the special joyousness of September. And so, all the day, hundreds go out all the way for one shilling. All the day, Halton, gay with bunting, is receiving its visitors. The sound of music is in the air; whilst, over at the fair ground, is all the fun of the fair, and all its strange medley of sounds.

It is a great meeting place. "Nay, lad, Ah haven't seen tha sin last feast!" or "Hey, missus, 'ere we are again!" are exclamations often heard. Then in the evening, when the flower show is over and the various other attractions have had their day, come the fireworks, and, as the shadows fall and the glare of the great city lights up the sky away to the west, the little village on the hill, by means of many rockets cast up into the darkness and many terrific explosions, reminds its great neighbor and all the countryside of its presence. And then, as the last rocket gives place to the stars, and the last wagonette has taken the road downhill, all the way back again for one shilling, Halton settles down to be its old quiet self, once more, for another year.

SPEED IN BASEBALL.

What an Infield Double Play Means In Time and Action.

Making first base, though more dramatic to watch, is an uneventful expedition compared with the trip to second. It takes a fast man to negotiate the journey in 3 3-5 seconds. No thrown ball goes over 300 feet, and if a batted ball travels beyond the safe limits of a single throw it must be relayed by the fielders. While you are watching the outfielder scamper after the ball the relay line is being swiftly formed in the infield. There could be no such quick and accurate fielding of deep outfield hits if the outfielder taking the ball did not know that behind him was ranged his line of relays ready to take the ball the instant he could turn and throw it.

To make a double play in the infield the shortstop, for example, must field a ball that has been batted about 135 feet. He passes the ball from ten to twenty-five feet to the second baseman, who must then throw it ninety feet to first. All this while the batter is running ninety feet, a trick that, as we have seen, it takes a snappy runner to turn in 3 3-5 seconds. It's a close call and a case of utilizing the fraction of a second, but with sharp fielding the margin is all on the side of the fielders. The double play is the menace ever threatening the runner on first.

FIRST AND PARAMOUNT, ABSOLUTE SECURITY TO POLICYHOLDERS

"I can't afford life assurance," you say.

That is the very reason why you can't afford to do without it. How would your family get along without any of your income, if from it you can't spare a small portion for life assurance?

Suppose you should learn that from now on your income would be reduced $5.00 per month! Would it trouble you much? Well, that amount will maintain an Imperial policy for about $2,000.

When Hair Is Dry.

While oily hair is not at all beautiful, it is usually much healthier and thicker than dry, harsh hair. If your glory crown has started in to be dry and wispy, it would be a wise move to take it in hand right away and call for an immediate reform. Twenty-four hours before the shampoo, rub pure olive oil into the scalp. You can have no idea how much help this will give, and what lovely fluffy gloss it will impart to the hair after the shampoo. Have this cleansing with egg instead of soap.

Stale Cake Pudding.

A delicious pudding can be made from stale tea cakes. Put a layer of stewed apples in a baking dish and a layer of the crumbled cake next; sprinkle with sugar and nutmeg. Always have a thick layer of apples at top and bottom of dish to keep the crumbled cake getting too much browned and dried; a nut or two of butter placed on top of the dish, and a cupful of milk poured over all will keep this whole moist enough till done.

MAXWELL

Most Miles per Gallon Most Miles on Tires

$1045
F. O. B. WINDSOR

There are visions—now and then—in business and industry.

The Maxwell motor car is a wonderful vision that has been made real.

The fixed purpose of the Maxwell builders was in the beginning, and is now, to produce a car which would be, in the highest sense, efficient, durable, economical, comfortable and standard in equipment.

Many years experience in production on a vast scale has taught the Maxwell manufacturers two things.

One is that such a car as they have always made their aim—a car in which efficiency, durability, economy, comfort, beauty and standard equipment are all present—cannot be built for less than $1045 with materials at their present prices.

The other lesson is that, for more than $1045, they could not give you anything more than the Maxwell now has—except greater size or luxuries, pure and simple.

In other words, they are convinced—and they have convinced us—that they have found the great MIDDLE LINE where you get dollar for dollar in ABSOLUTE VALUE.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Singular Advertisement

It Led to a Curious Result.

By RYLAND BELL

When I was graduated from the medical college which made me an M. D. I concluded for the purpose of broadening my ideas to spend a year in travel. Then I would return and begin where I had left off. I have never regretted this resolution. Being an observant man, travel was of great advantage to me, teaching me that all I had learned thus far was not necessarily true, that I had only begun to learn and that if I lived a thousand years I would not know it all.

If there was any one country that interested me most of all it was India. The Hindus seemed to me a unique people. Like other semi-civilized races they have lived for ages in their ruts, while their narrow scope has led them into correspondingly restricted investigations. What European civilization has produced in the way of assistance to live the Indians have brought forth for death. We have discovered a number of antitoxins; they have brought out an innumerable number of poisons.

While in India I gained through a friend admission to the palace of a rajah. He seemed to take a fancy to me, probably because he found in me a good listener. I said nothing except to guide him into channels that interested me. Drugs being in the line of my profession, I was pleased to hear what he had to say about the various Indian concoctions, and these included poisons.

I confess I was surprised to learn of the various substances that will produce death and the knowledge the Indians have acquired in handling them. I was interested in the flower to breathe which is death; in the process of a poison, taking increased doses of which one may become impregnated with it, and would be poisonous to others. But my attention was chiefly arrested by a poison the rajah mentioned which left no trace.

Why was I especially interested in a traceless poison? Because I expected to spend my life in a land where there are, as there must always be, murder and suicide. I knew that as a medical practitioner I would be constantly called upon in such cases, and the words "traceless poison" meant a great deal to me—not that I expected to have anything to do with such a thing, but it at once occurred to me that if a knowledge of it should be common property it would be the chosen instrument of murderers and suicides.

I did not bring home with me a sample of the rajah's traceless poison. Indeed, I was not interested in it for itself. I did not even care whether or not there was such a thing as a traceless poison. But on my return to America I began some experiments concerning the interest that would be taken in procuring it by various persons. I took the precaution to notify the chief of police in the city in which I lived of my intended experiments, and he was much interested in them. Then I wrote an advertisement announcing that a physician whose "sands of life had nearly run out" and who had spent his life investigating the various aids and enemies to human life had succeeded in discovering a poison that left no trace. He had concocted a powder which, if scattered about in places infested by vermin, would destroy them, leaving no odor or other disagreeable consequences.

I was well aware that those who would attempt to buy my powder would do so for other purposes than killing vermin. My advertisement had appeared but once when I received a number of applications for it. Nearly all of the replies were so worded as to conceal the identity of the writers. Some of them gave directions as to sending the powder which were evidently calculated to cover its route to its receiver.

After accumulating a number of replies to my advertisement I took them to the chief of police, who seemed to be able to tell what each writer intended to do with the poison. But this was a simple matter, because whether or not the intention was legitimate could be divined by the care the writer took to conceal his or her identity. The chief desired to investigate a few applications, and I gave them to him. I was not interested in the criminal side of the matter and never took the trouble to ask him for results. I confined myself to the investigation of those from persons who seemed intent on destroying themselves, for in such cases I might save some one whose mind had become disordered either by mental or physical suffering.

I received one advertisement that I puzzled over a great deal. The writer was a woman, and from certain expressions she used I judged that she was young. The chirography, the language used, a certain refinement in her methods of expressing herself, indicated that she was a lady. Even the paper on which she wrote bore a crest. There were but three possible reasons why any one should want my powder—murder, suicide and for the extermination of vermin. The writer of this note could not keep out of it a tinge of melancholy; therefore I argued that she wished it for the purpose of suicide.

I did not get all this information from her reply to my advertisement. I drew the applicant into a correspondence on the subject by telling her that I could not supply the powder without assuring myself that the person receiving it had no intention of injuring any one with it. She wrote me in reply to this that she had not an enemy in the world, adding that she was rather to be pitied than hated. This admission indicated her object.

Pretending to be satisfied that she did not wish the powder for any illegitimate purpose, I wrote her that if she would let me know where I could find her I would take it to her. She made an appointment for a certain day at a certain hour. I was not to leave a message or anything else with one who should admit me unless it was my correspondent, and I would know her by a rose she would carry in her hand.

If I had needed anything to convince me of the refinement of the lady this method by which I might identify her would have served. Besides, it was evident that, while she had no intention of using the poison on any other than herself, she did not wish it to fall into other hands, lest it might do damage.

I called at the exact time specified. I found a domicile that could be the home of one of the higher class only. I rang the bell, and in a few moments the door was opened.

I often revert to the moment I first looked on the face and figure which then were before me—a girl not over seventeen, a willowy figure, a face every feature of which was as perfect, it seemed to me, as it could be made, but withal tinged with a distressing melancholy. She held a rose in one hand and extended the other for what I was supposed to have brought her. And yet on seeing a young man of the appearance of one of her own class she seemed surprised.

"May I not come in for a few moments?" I asked. "I need to give you some directions as to the use of the powder."

She closed the door and led me to a little reception room beside it. She did not ask me to be seated, evidently desiring to secure what I had agreed to bring and have it over with. Nevertheless I looked at a chair and said nothing till she indicated that I might use it, and she sank into one herself. Then I said:

"Perhaps you inferred from my advertising that I am a quack, but I assure you I am a recent graduate of a first class medical college. After graduating I went to India, where I procured the drug of which I have been writing you. Its effect depends on the quantity taken, just as a cup of coffee will make a person nervous, while a very small quantity will induce sleep."

She looked at me in a melancholy dream, and I saw that she had not taken in what I said. I had brought a small box of a harmless powder with me and drew it from the bag of medicines I carried with me.

"This powder," I said, "if taken in large quantity will kill; if taken in small doses it is a very remarkable remedy, a remedy that is not generally known in this country. I got it in India; could get only a limited quantity, and so decided is its effect that I never give it without knowing all about the requirements of the person who uses it."

"I do not require a remedy. I require"—

"Pardon me; you do require a remedy."

"I have taken remedies till I am tired of them. They do me no good."

"Perhaps this one will. But, as to that, I cannot tell without knowing your symptoms."

I had a hard struggle, but in time gained such information concerning her case as I required and was convinced that she was suffering from a nervous condition that had brought on temporary melancholia. She needed a bracing atmosphere and to be convinced that there was really nothing the matter with her.

"This medicine of mine," I told her, "has some very singular features connected with it. In addition to what I have said about it as a curative, it needs to be taken on an elevation. It is just the season for visiting the mountains. Go there and take a box of my medicine with you. It will make it up into small doses such as you need. Take one of these doses each day, and I guarantee you that within a month you will be as well as ever."

She seemed to be encouraged. I knew that all depended upon my reaching her family, but not through her directly. I left her to think over what I had said, took her name and the same day called on her father at his office. When I told him that his daughter had been trying to use me to help her commit suicide and at the same time cause her family to believe that she had died a natural death he shuddered. Since I had probably saved her—thus far, at least—from taking her life, I found him quite willing to listen to what I had to say about the case. I convinced him that it would be well to try my prescription, and we laid a plan by which a trial was brought about. I arranged with the young lady to see her occasionally, pretending to be a stranger to those of her family who were with her, having a secret understanding with them on the subject. I made a number of such visits, and at every one I found my patient improved. Indeed, I flatter myself that my presence was more effective than my medicine, though the main curative was the mountain air, which I have found very beneficial in similar cases.

The interest in my story for myself is that it has been begun and ended for a purpose, that purpose being to tell how I met, wooed and won my wife.

One of the replies to my advertisement that I turned over to the chief of police prevented a murder.

WOULD YOU RATHER BE THE QUEEN OR MISS JONES?

Is it fashionable to adopt an orphan? That is the question raised by Miss Rose O'Neill in one of her Good Housekeeping Kewpie stories. This is the story:

Once upon a time there was a little girl who was most unhappy because she had everything in the whole world except the one thing she really wanted. They brought her jewels, kittens, birds, lambs, rabbits, violins and fawns. But all she would say was, "I want to be a baby."

At last the Kewpies heard of it and began hunting one for her, right and left.

"How are you off for babies?" they would ask. "Can you spare one for the Beautiful Queen?"

Sometimes they happened on quite the wrong houses.

At last they found her a fine orphan and put it under her bed for a nice surprise, but the poor Queen lived in a terribly ridiculous country where it was unfashionable to adopt orphans, so she was compelled to give it up.

However the Kewpies took it up to Miss Jones, the dressmaker, who was very fashionable and so adopted it on the spot with the greatest gusto."

To Stop Hair Loss and Rid Your Scalp of Dandruff, Use

NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE

Do you have dandruff? Does your hair fall out? Is it getting thinner and the parting more pronounced every day? If so, we advise you to get busy right away and before it is too late.

We are not trying to scare you. We are simply telling you the truth. If you would ward off impending baldness you must check that hair loss and rid your scalp of dandruff.

Start right and start now with the right remedy and stick to it—Newbro's Herpicide.

Use Herpicide daily for a while, then three times a week will be sufficient. Watch the change which takes place in the condition of your hair and scalp.

The scalp is clean and free from dandruff. The hair looks strong and healthy and does not fall out. There is vigor and snap where before the hair was dead, dull and brittle. The itching which is so annoying stops and you enjoy a feeling of coolness and cleanliness hitherto unknown.

Any Dealer will sell you Newbro's Herpicide either in 50 cent or $1.00 size. It is guaranteed by The Herpicide Co. The first application will convince you that Newbro's Herpicide is the very thing for the hair. Its odor is delightful.

Applications may be obtained at the better barber shops and hair dressing parlors.

"Bring Up The Massed Battalions of Finance"

"To defeat the German I want you (representing investors of all classes) to bring up the massed battalions of finance—to bring up your reserves and simply smother the Hun with all arms—big guns and small—hundreds of subscriptions of a million dollars and millions of subscriptions of a hundred dollars."

Lord Northcliffe—before the Convention of the American Bankers' Association.

When Lord Northcliffe urged those financiers to bring up their massed battalions of finance it was no empty, high-sounding request. It was a dead-in-earnest injunction. Because, Money is the fundamental basis of every weapon of defence and offense, and there is no substitute for it.

It costs one million dollars a day to feed, clothe, shelter, transport and munition the Canadian army, and this cost will increase.

But in addition to raising money to maintain our army, we must also raise money to extend credit to Great Britain, because she can now buy, on this side of the Atlantic, only to the extent to which she can obtain dollar credits.

Canada needs, and must have, Britain's trade; our whole agricultural and industrial prosperity depends upon it. In order to get this trade, we must give the credit.

These, then, are the two great reasons why it is so imperative to make Canada's Victory Loan an overwhelming success, and why every man and woman who can should buy Canada's Victory Bonds.

Nicknames Given to Fighters

EVER since the United States entered the war heroic but unavailing efforts have been made to invent a nickname for the American soldiers. Inventing a nickname is much like bidding spirits from out the vasty deep. For it is useless to accept the name unless it will stick. So long as it sticks it doesn't matter over much whether it is complimentary or the reverse. It was observed the other day that the First British Expeditionary Force, or rather those of its members who survive, are proud to be known as the "Old Contemptibles," in allusion to the Kaiser's remark about General French's "contemptible little army." A Winnipeg battalion boasts the name of the "Little Black Devils" which it was given by the enemy. No nickname that comes to mind was carefully prepared in advance; the nickname is the happy result of some occurrence, it may be heroic, it may be ludicrous, of some sudden incident, and an equally swift flash of wit or imagination on the part of an observer.

At present the members of the American Expeditionary Force are battling gamely against a fond if mistaken desire on the part of various home folks to call them "Sammies." It is said that when the first of them reached the port in France where they disembarked, some French girls called out, "Hello, Sammies!" the allusion being, of course, to Uncle Sam. When this news reached home, some admirers of Colonel Roosevelt thought that if a Christian name was to be worn by the troops generally it ought to be "Teddy," and therefore there are numerous adherents of the term "Teddies." Hundreds of others have been suggested, among them "Jimmies," the reference being to a necessary weapon of a burglar, and perhaps a means of entering Berlin. "Amexes" is obviously adapted from "Anzacs." Somebody else suggested "Feathers," which he thought would be a suitable companion piece for "Tars," by which the sailors are known, and calculated also to give a hint as to part of the punishment that awaits Wilhelm of Prussia, when he reverts to the status of an ex-alderman.

Canadians are called "Canucks," but most of them do not like the name. However, they are honorably known by it all over the world, and it seems destined to stick. The French soldier is called a poilu, meaning a hairy one, and the name was given in the early desperate days of the war when the French soldier had no time to shave, and reverted more or less to a condition of nature. How the English soldier came to be called a "Tommy" is well known. Many years ago each regular soldier in the British army was provided with a little notebook, in which he was supposed to record various personal details, such as age, term of enlistment, and other necessary military information. In order that the soldier might properly fill in the blanks a model was printed in the book, and whereas in legal documents the name "John Doe" is used, in the case of the soldier the common name of "Thomas Atkins" was chosen for the purpose of illustration. The marines are called "Jollies" because they were held by the regular sailors to be about as relatively important as a jolly boat to a battleship.

The Black Watch has got its name because the regiment was originally recruited of companies of Scottish watchmen, and the dark plaid of their tartans, black, green and blue, suggested the adjective. The Fifty-third Foot was known as the "Brickdusts," because of the color of regimental facings. Similarly the Twenty-fourth Foot was called "Howard's Greens," in honor of a famous colonel and the trimmings of the uniforms. The Seventeenth Foot, which saw desperate service in India, was spontaneously named the Bengal Tigers, but the equally warlike Seventy-seventh Foot was merely dubbed the "Pothooks," because of the resemblance between the figure 7 and a pothook. Even the immortal Eleventh Hussars, heroes of the charge at Balaklava, could gain no more glorious name than that of "Cherry Pickers," because at one time some of the command had been captured in a Spanish cherry orchard at the time of the Peninsular war. So the Fourteenth Hussars, as fine a regiment as was in the service, fought against the title "Hamilton's Runaways," because on one occasion, when vastly outnumbered, several companies under Colonel Hamilton had been forced to retreat.

Walter Harriott tells us that Napoleon got his nickname because, on one occasion he seized a fallen flag and led a company across a ditch. "Look," cried a French soldier, "the little corporal!" Stonewall Jackson was once described by a general as "standing like a stone wall," and the words passed into history. In the war with Spain, the corps raised by Colonel Roosevelt was called the "Roughriders," because so many of the soldiers were Western cowboys and scouts. In this case it is believed that the men named themselves. One of the most amusing of military nicknames is that under which a British regiment even yet staggers. It is called "The Ladykillers" not because of the Don Juan wiles of the officers and men, but because a long time ago one of the regiment on sentry duty had the misfortune to shoot an old woman.

Geddes and Red Tape.

The Geddes legend abounds in stories of his cutting of red tape and triumphs over army officialdom, and of the suddenness and rightness of his work as Director general of transportation in France. But the army has its own Geddes legends, according to the Manchester Guardian. Here is one story of him, given with all reserve, but told freely in army messes. Military rank was given to Sir Eric when he went to France. He became a general at once. The story is that he was pacing up and down in front of his headquarters thinking out his railway plans that did so much for the victory of our army, and every time he passed the sentry presented arms. After a bit this got on Sir Eric's nerves, but he did not know how to stop it. At last a corporal with whom he had some dealings delivered a letter to him, and Sir Eric remarked to him that the sentry kept on lifting his rifle every time he passed, and that it must be a nuisance. The corporal tactfully replied that the sentry would stop presenting arms if the general acknowledged it in the usual way (demonstration with arm). The general duly made the acknowledgment and the sentry ceased from troubling. This story was told at one mess to the delight of everyone except one middle-aged lieutenant of the old army, who, whatever his gifts, had apparently not been appreciated by his seniors. He was very angry, and, striking the table, said: "And that's what comes of making a damned railway porter an officer."

Inquisitive.

"That fellow is a positive joke."

"Relative of your wife's or holding a better job than you?"

CUTICURA HEALS BURNING ITCHING

Pimples on Back and Scalp. Hair Came Out. Healed at Very Trifling Cost.

"I found red pimples coming out below my right shoulder blade. The pimples festered and then spread on my back. This had a burning itching feeling. Then an eruption broke out on my scalp in a patch and hair came out.

"I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and after I had used two boxes of Ointment with three cakes of Soap I was healed." (Signed) Geo. J. Jones, Edmonds, British Columbia, July 4, 1917.

Cuticura Soap daily and Cuticura Ointment occasionally prevent pimples and other eruptions. Nothing better.

For Free Sample Each by Mail address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. A, Boston, U. S. A." Sold everywhere.

BATTALIONS ARE JUST LIKE CHUMS

HOW QUEBEC AND NOVA SCOTIA UNITS HAVE STUCK TOGETHER FROM THE FIRST.

MONTREAL, Oct. 31.—Canadian battalions, while in training or at the front, frequently form friendly associations, like friends or chums. Two close friends in the trenches are the 25th Nova Scotia Battalion and the 22nd French-Canadian Battalion.

These two units, both highly distinguished on active service, left for overseas together on the Saxonia on May 20, 1915. They went through their training together and they went into the trenches at the same time. When the great advance to the attack came at Courcelette, almost as one unit they sprang from the Allied trenches this heroic Quebec battalion and their firm friends from Nova Scotia.

It is regarded here as a good omen of future harmonious relations between the various sections of Canada that these close friendships have been formed so often between Canadian corps from widely-separated parts of the Dominion.

LET a woman ease your suffering. I want you to write, and let me tell you of my simple method of home treatment, send you ten days' free trial, postpaid, and put you in touch with women in Canada who will gladly tell what my method has done for them.

If you are troubled with weak, tired feelings, headache, backache, bearing down sensations, bladder weakness, constipation, catarrhal conditions, pain in the sides, regularly or irregularly, bloating, sense of falling or misplacement of internal organs, nervousness, desire to cry, palpitation, hot flashes, dark rings under the eyes, or a loss of interest in life, write to me to-day. Russian Embassy Kicks at the Way Washington Post Handled Kerensky's Statement.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.— The Russian Embassy has issued a statement criticizing the manner in which the Washington Post presented the Petrograd despatches regarding Premier Kerensky's declarations.

"No word in Kerensky's interview gives warrant for any assertion that Russia is out of the war," said the statement. "As a matter of fact the Premier stated the exact opposite."

"What Premier Kerensky expressed," the statement continued, "was only a feelinfi of the Russian people that aid and support should be extended to them, and that the encouragement from the allies is justified to a nation that has borne such heavy burdens and is now in a period of fundamental readjustment. No word in the interview was intended to express any blame or sarcasm against allied action.

"A cable received lately, and which is given out to the press to-day, shows the real military conditions on the Russian front. The best answer to the malicious assertion that Russia is out of the war will be the fact given by this cable that we are holding at the present time on our front 147 divisions of enemy troops."

SATISFIED MOTHERS

Once a mother has used Baby's Own Tablets for her little ones she will use nothing else. The satisfaction she receives from their use is wonderful. They are easy to give the baby, their action is prompt and thorough and above all they are absolutely harmless. Concerning them Mrs. Jean Deschatte, Lacordaire, Sask., writes: "I am well satisfied with Baby's Own Tablets. I had no trouble in giving them to my baby and they have promptly cured her of constipation." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Editha was admiring her new summer frock. "Isn't it wonderful," she said, "that all this silk comes from an insignificant worm!" "Editha, is it necessary to refer to your father in that way?" her mother inquired reproachfully.

Our Wounded Soldiers.

Of the boys whom Canada has sent to the front 8,840 are now enrolled in the Canadian military hospitals for treatment and re-education, according to the last report of the Military Hospitals Commission. Of these 7,046 are in convalescent homes, and 1,115 are tuberculosis cases in the sanatoria provided by the Military Hospitals Commission for their treatment. The remaining 679 are chiefly in general hospitals. The increase in the total population of the various hospitals over last week is only 29.

The latest return from the director of medical services in London indicates that on August 10th the Canadian soldiers being cared for in the hospitals and sanatoria in the United Kingdom were 17,813.

State Forests.

State forests, with a total of over 3,000,000 acres, have been established in thirteen states. Of these New York has the largest forests, which comprise 1,826,000 acres; Pennsylvania is second, with 1,008,000 acres, and Wisconsin third, with 400,000 acres.

Potted Foods.

There is much probability in the suggestion that we owe our system of potted foods to the North American Indians, who for many years have dried venison, pounded it into a paste and pressed it into cakes for winter food.

The French Advancing On The Aisne Front

ITALIANS CONFIDENT INVASION IS STOPPED

Are Counting Upon the United States to Declare War on Austria---French Forces Are Advancing on the Aisne Front and Have Crossed the Ailette River, Paris Officially Announces.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(By John H. Hearley.)
(Special to The Toronto Star and the Peterborough Examiner.)

ROME, November 3.—Italy looks to see America declare war on Austria as the next step of complete co-operation with the Allies. The fact that American Ambassador Thomas Nelson Page to-day was in conference with Foreign Minister Sonnino, the Roumanian Minister and other Allied diplomatic and military officals, gave rise to the report that this would be America's next step in granting aid to Italy. It served to increase the gratitude to America first evoked with the announcement of a vast loan to Italy, and the diversion of much needed shipping to her. The att itude in Italy, and the diversion of much needed shipping to her. The attitude in been stopped.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

WASHINGTON, November 3. — The Navy Department issued this statement: The Navy Department announces that on October 30 the picket boat of the U.S.S. Michigan foundered with apparently the entire crew of twelve men lost.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS, November 3.—The War Office reports: In the period between October 21 and 31, twenty-three German airplanes were brought down. Of these twenty-one were destroyed by our pilots after combat, and two by our special cannon. Furthermore twenty-eight enemy machines were damaged seriously and descended within the German lines.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, November 3.—An attack was made to-day on British vessels patrolling the Belgian coast by an electric controlled high-speed boat. The boat was destroyed.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS, November 3.—The French are advancing between the Oise Canal and the region of Corbeny, and have reached the south bank of the Ailette River, the War Office announces. The Germans have retreated to the north bank of the river. Bridges across the Ailette were destroyed by the Germans. Since October 23 the French have captured 422 guns and 720 machine guns.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, November 3.—Most of the morning newspapers print Premier Kerensky's interview conspicuously, but comment is not general. The Petrograd correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, who is now in London writes: "Premier Kerensky's statement seems to have been taken little too seriously in some quarters. It even has been construed as a hint that Russia is toying with the idea of separate peace. This theory should not be allowed to establish itself."

The writer then tells of the immense sacrifices in men that Russia has made and recalls the revelations in the trial of General Soukhowlinoff, the former Minister of War, of how Russian heroes stood up with only sticks, stones and fists against the organized German troops. He also emphasizes the privations of the civilian population and the shortage of food since the middle of 1915, and adds: "Already people are dying of hunger in some of the northern provinces, and it is not pleasant to think what the situation in such districts may become early in the future."

The Daily Express makes a similar plea, and says that no statesman ever faced more appalling difficulties than those that daily confront Premier Kerensky.

TRIBUNAL MEMBERS ARE HERE

A Conference Was Held This Afternoon in the Judge's Chambers

A meeting of the members of the different exemption tribunals in Peterborough County was held this afternoon in the Council Chamber, with His Honour Judge Huycke presiding. The object of the conference was to discuss the work of the tribunals which will open their sessions on Thudsday next.

LADY MAUD CADENDISH IS MARRIED

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

OTTAWA, Nov. 3.—Fully twelve hundred guests representative of every province in Canada, and including the Consul Generals from many lands, were in attendance, when Lady Maud Cavendish, the eldest daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire, was married in Christ Church Cathedral to-day to Captain Angus MacIntosh of the Royal Horse Guards, and a veteran of the present war. It was the biggest social event of the season in Ottawa, and was fully military.

POTATOES NOW $2 AND SUPPLIES ARE KEPT FROM MARKET

The Toronto wholesale markets quote potatoes at $2.00 a bag, a price that is out of all proportion with the estimated crop in this district, or in the province as a whole. Practically from all quarters statements have been issued of large crops, although in some places the yield has been barely up to the average. One of the alleged causes of the soaring prices was Food Controller Hanna's blundering interference with the potato market, and particularly his backdown, leaving the impression that the potato crop could not be controlled. A local grocer this morning stated that this reckless meddling with the market has been the strongest encouragement to the farmers and other potato growers to hold their supplies for higher prices.

Marmora Herald this week discusses this aspect of the situation, asserting that the farmers are deliberately influencing the market by refusing to market their crop even in small quantities, and consequently, in spite of the high prices they have received for all their produce, are hoarding the potato crop with all the selfishness of the most ruthless profiteers.

The question is asked why Mr. Hanna did not fix the price at $1.50, or even $1.75 a bag, if he found that his first attempt was a rash one, and that $1.25 was too low.

"If he had only left the market alone," stated the grocer, "the price, I am sure, would not now be $2 a bag. If Mr. Hanna is a friend of the consumer, then the Lord protect us from our enemies."

HUNS MAKING SUPREME EFFORT TO WIN IN AIR

No Fewer Than Twenty-nine Huge German Factories Have Been Converted Into Plants for Manufacture of Planes

EXTRAORDINARY PROGRAM

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)
(By Henry Wood.)

WITH FRENCH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, Nov. 3. —Germany is making a supreme effort to meet the Allies' aviation programme. Whatever the number of airplanes and pilots America may be able to contribute by next spring, Germany will duplicate the performance, if it is at all possible. Documents taken on prisoners and assembled to-day, showed some extraordinary efforts by Germany to increase the number of her planes and counter-balance the aviation superiority which America's contribution otherwise would bring.

MANY NEW FACTORIES.

Since last spring no fewer than twenty-nine huge German factories, formerly engaged in the production of general war material, have been converted into factories for airplanes and hydroplanes. In addition, the old-established airplane factories at Berlin, Cologne, Altenna, Johannisthal, Potsdam, Charlottenberg, Dresden, Spandau and other industrial centres have been greatly increased in size. The Fokker factory has just taken over the largest plane factory in Northern Germany, the Bersina, at Schwerin. But not only is Germany increasing her own production, she is making purchases of foreign countries. An order for 250 Argus motors has been placed with Raderneskeebac at Surich, Simultaneously with the speed up programme in manufacture, Germany is experimenting to improve her output.

NEW TYPES MADE.

Among the newer types now being put out is a 200 horse power fighting monoplane and a triplane Fokker. A new bombing plane has also been developed—a two-engined machine, with a carrying capacity of 1,700 pounds of bombs. The motors are Mercedes type, 260 horse power, and when fully loaded the planes are capable of climbing 12,000 feet in 35 minutes. Germany now figures an airplane is 'worn out' after 150 hours of flight. At present her greatest weakness in manufacture is the propeller, as the Germans do not seem to have a sufficient supply of proper wood.

TO PROVIDE PILOTS.

To provide the necessary pilots for the new German aviation programme, military authorities are offering exceptional facilities for all volunteers. Some idea of the degree of perfection which the Germans are endeavouring to put into their new programme may be gained from the fact that a new German plane recently forced to land on French soil was equipped with an electrical apparatus for drying the clothing and gloves of the aviator, and at the same time furnishing current for wireless communications.

Berlin Says Prisoners Are Over 200,000

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

BERLIN, Nov. 3.—More than 200,000 prisoners have been taken in the Austro-German campaign on the Italian front, the War Office reports. There was no important fighting on this front yesterday.

CAN RUSSIA COME BACK?

Administration Opinion at Washington More Optimistic To-day Believing That Kerensky May Bring Order Out of Chaos

WINTER WILL HELP

(By Robt. J. Bender.)
(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 3.—Russia's decision to place the war burden on her allies, and temporarily cease major military operations, brought an optimistic reason from the Government to-day. The German retirement on the Aisne front, and the stiff Italian stand against the Austro-German onrush along the Tagliamento River in Northern Italy, lent further buoyancy to the general military outlook here.

The United Press can state as the Administration's firm belief that Russia, after a winter devoted to reorganizing, uniforming and establishing her government and military machinery, will resume here place in active military operations with greater effectiveness than at any time since the war began.

CONCENTRATE HER STRENGTH.

It has been known to Allied powers for some time that Russia must soon concentrate her strength on cultivating the fruits of her revolution. For months she has done no major fighting, due to the disorganization and military confusion. But this, in the highest official opinion here, was anticipated oy the Allies. As outlined to the United Press to-day, "Russia has been trying to do the impossible — make herself over and fight a relentless foe at the same time. She has not had a clear pattern for the making over, rather she has had too many patterns—too many groups seeking to impose on the country a system of government. Officials here regard it remarkable that the Russian military system is not much worse because of her internal chaos.

WINTER TO HOLD FOE.

The Russian winter will now hold back the Germans while Russia rests and develops. It is the United States Administration's belief that Russia is too vast and powerful to become exhausted by three years of war. Her resources have scarcely been tapped, though her strength has been sapped by mismanagement.. She needs a rest, a chance to look about her and gain perspective. Then it is confidently believed her Government will begin to stabilize itself and reorganize the army. Entente military attaches today explained that little was to be feared from the release of any Teuton troops along the east front due to Russia's inactivity. It was explained that these are for the most part old landsturm troops, young recruits in training, or war-worried veterans from the west front, recuperating in the east, where there is no fighting.

Two Big Fires In Toronto

Canadian Press Despatch:

TORONTO, Nov. 3.— The Toronto Fire Department successfuly fought two large fires simultaneously this morning. Six hundred men and women were temporarily thrown out of work and two hundred thousand dollars damage done, when a fire developing from spontaneous combustion, destroyed the forgings plant of the Cluff Ammunition Company at four this morning. Two hundred people, comprising the night shift, were fortunately able to get out without casualties, and the firemen kept the flames away from the explosives. While this fire was at its height another broke out in Liggett's drug store on Yonge street, where sixty-five thousand dollars damage was incurred before the flames were extinguished.

Russians Fraternize With Foe

PETROGRAD, Nov. 3. — Russian troops in the Vishnoff sector yesterday fraternized with German troops, it was announced to-day by the Russian War Office.

ENGAGEMENT IN KATTEGAT REPORTED BY ADMIRALTY

BRITISH ANTI-AIRCRAFT GUNNERS — The photo was taken at the battle of Menin-Road, in front of Zellebeke, and shows a couple of British soldiers with a long-distance piece of weaponry ready for any German plane that tries to fire on the trenches.

"Prisoners Are Being Brought In" Announces Official Statement —German Commerce Raider and Five Enemy Trawlers Are Sunk in Skager Rack by British Destroyer.

NAVAL ACTIVITY

(Special to the Toronto Star and the Peterborough Examiner).

LONDON, Nov. 3.—An engagement by British naval forces in the Kattegat was announced by the Admiralty to-day. "Our naval forces operating in the Kattegat have apparently been engaged," the statement said. "Naval forces, probably patrol vessels, have been detached to bring in prisoners.

CRUISER SUNK.

(Special to the Toronto Star and the Peterborough Examiner).

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 3.—A German commerce raider and five armed ships north of Gothenburg, after a two and a half hour fight, according to a despatch printed by the Berlingsketidente to-day. A number of German wounded were said to be on route to Copenhagen. The name of the German warship sunk was not given in the despatches, nor the identity of the British forces participating.

RAIDER DESTROYED.

(Canadian Press Despatch).

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 3.—A German commerce raised and five armed trawlers have been sunk by British destroyers in Scandinavian waters. Wounded men from a German auxiliary cruiser sunk in the North Sea were landed here to-day. The sinking of a German raider named Crocodile and of five German armed trawlers is reported by men on two Danish steamships. They say they sighted the German vessels in flames, and later saw them sink. The commerce raider, which was disguised, and the trawlers were sunk yesterday in Skagerrak, an arm of the North Sea between Norway and Denmark. The British destroyers thus effected another clean up of German naval forces in Scandinavian waters.

The Crocodile was a new ship of nearly one thousand tons, and carried a crew of one hundred men.

An official statement issued by the Admiralty says that ten armed patrol craft, in addition to a German auxiliary cruiser, which was equipped with six-inch guns, were destroyed.

TOTAL RED CROSS DONATIONS WILL CROWD $30,000 MARK

With a Number of Reports to Come in $28,000 Had Been Pledged Up to Last Night and More Subscriptions Are Expected To-day

A SUCCESSFUL CAMPAIGN

That instead of the $20,000 originally asked for by the Peterborough branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society the people of Peterborough will have subscribed about $30,000 by to-night seems reasonably certain.

Yesterday over $1,200 was added to the fund, and last night, with a number of reports to hear from, the grand total was $28,000. During the day over $400 was handed in at headquarters.

It will be gratifying to citizens generally to know that adequate funds have been provided to look after the sustenance of the forty-two Peterborough boys who are prisoners in Germany, as well as to carry on the other great work of the Red Cross Society.

The campaign has been one of the most successful organised in Peterborough since the war began, especially considering the small committees which were responsible for the canvassing of the city.

An effective advertising campaign, assisted by many merchants who referred to the campaign in their daily advertisements, coupled with the general appreciation of the good work of the Peterborough branch of the Red Cross, has made the effort a noteworthy one.

SAMMIES CAPTURED

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

BERLIN, via London, Nov. 3.—The capture of American soldiers by a German reconnoitring party is announced by the War Office.

460 MEN HAVE REGISTERED HERE UNDER SERVICE ACT

Exemption Claims Will Be Heard by the Tribunals in the Order in Which They Have Been Received, Commencing on Thursday Next

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The total registrations at the Peterborough Post Office under the Military Service Act up to noon to-day numbered 460, of which 438 were claims for exemption and 22 were reports for service. Yesterday there were five Category A men who reported for service, while thirty-three others filed claims for exemption. This morning showed a total of thirteen exemption claims.

The trials and tribulations of the Ontario Registrar under the Military Service Act are being added to by those people who have not yet grasped what is the proper thing to do in the matter of exemptions. All applicants for exemption, that is, all applicants in Grade A, will receive from the tribunal on a certain day, and it will be intimated that the case of he claimant can be put in in writing instead of the man appearing personally, if he so desired. Anticipating this, many are sending in full statements of their case to the Registrar, who has nothing whatever to do with it. Hence, he only returns them to the men who sent them in. The Registrar is not the Exemption Tribunal; he only notifies men to appear before their proper tribunal, and then his part ends. He does not adjudicate the claims, and has nothing to do with the findings of the tribunals, except that they are reported to him, and, where exemption is granted, the certificates, on the instructions of the various tribunals, issue from his office. Claims in writing should be forwarded to the tribunal before which the applicant will appear.

Tribunals Sit Thursday.

Exemption Tribunals all over the country commence their labours next Thursday. For the first three days, that is, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, applicants may appear in person and present their claims. By this is meant those men that have not seen fit to present their claims through the post office. Besides these, each tribunal will handle ten cases per day, for the first three days of the session, and after that twenty-five cases per day. The claims for

ON THE TAX ROLL.

It seems that it would be wise to put Peterborough's $60,000 share of the Patriotic Fund upon the tax rate. The payment will as a rule represent small sums, divided, if desired, into two instalments. The contribution will be apportioned according to ability or obligation to pay. Those who pay a small amount of taxes will pay a smaller amount to the Patriotic Fund. It will only be another form of support of obligations towards citizens in distress, for which we spend several thousands a year already.

Then there is much demand for what is ready money contributions—to the Red Cross, the Serbian and Belgian Relief Funds, and above all, ready money is needed to make the Victory Loan a success. If we make Patriotic Funds a matter of immediate personal contribution the interests of these with other demands will be correspondingly injured. The prospects of a small amount being exacted at a distant date will not have as much of a restraining effect as if cash contributions were solicited. Besides there is a certainty of the amount being realized by the taxation method. There will be no $4,000 or $5,000 subscripions left unpaid, and to a large extent uncollectable, except under terms of duress that would be undesirable in consideration of community relation of citizenship.

There are throughout Canada many patriots who will sacrifice to win the war everything but their own party and personal ambitions.

HANNA AFTER THE OFFENDERS.

It is a little surprising that the obviously indicated methods of war time administration are delayed till this late date, and are only now in the talking stage. We have long known, or very shrewdly suspected, from the demands made upon our purses in the matter of paying for food, that packers and cold storage agencies have had a large hand in influencing the high cost of living. Yet it is only to-day that the Food Controller is beginning to talk about dealing with the situation. He talks well, however, and to the point. He called a meeting at Ottawa of packing house and cold storage operators. He did not tell them how he was going to act, but he said that any course of action decided upon would mean "practical and effective government control." He has reached this, in the matter of flour matters and wholesale fruit and vegetable dealers by means of a form of license. To do Mr. Hanna justice, he was very polite to the packeds and cold storage men, but at the same time, he besought their cooperation in finding a way that was fair to their business, together with a recognition of the rights of the public; and asked them to appoint a committee to consult with him on the subject. Mr. Hanna put his object clearly when he pointed out in connection with the necessity of growing more Ontario hogs, that the hog producer would want to know at the outset, how he was to get a faid share of the price paid by the consumer. Both the hog grower and the consumer had, Mr. Hanna said, a right to know that the intermediate agencies, packers and cold storage men and distributors, didn't go extravagantly beyond the cost of their services.

We all want to know by what mysterious, and at the same time, effective process a fourteen cent hog on the hoof, develops into fifty-four cent bacon on its brief journey from the sty to the pantry. Mr. Hanna is certainly working for more hogs, and it hoped he will also be able to give us a little more bacon—for our money.

Some one was sleeping at the switch, when, as asserted by a win-the-war orator in Ottawa, "a well-known company got away with a profit of a million dollars in a single year."

A "HISTORIC" ELECTION.

The day of polling in the general election has been fixed for December 17th. A great many persons will consider that a date so close to Christmas, involving the turmoil and bitterness of a war waging election contest, will be a poor preparation for celebrating the birthday of the Prince of Peace. But, perhaps, that does not matter; we have everything else turned topsy-turvy, and a fighting spirit at the Christmas time will only be another violation of accustomed conditions.

The election itself will be in keeping, for in some of its phases it establishes precedents we need not be exceedingly proud of.

An Ottawa Conservative paper calls it an "historic" election. It will be historic because it involves the application of the franchise in an entirely new and unconstitutional manner.

A union—non-partizan—government is appealing for support under a franchise act by which the popular voice is largely prevented from being heard. A non-partizan government is asking a mandate, a license to live, through a franchise act whose chief feature is its disfranchising provisions.

The election of supporters of a non-partizan, win-the-war government, is to be conducted under the provisions of a win-the-election franchise, concocted, devised and bulldozed through the House by a partisan government in its own interests, to insure its own safety.

The fact of the government changing its title and slightly changing its personnel—as a Conservative Association at Ottawa changed its name to a "Win-the-war Association, and nominated two partizan Canservatives—without, in the opinion of many, changing its character, does not prevent the union government from being regarded by many essentially and for ultimate political purposes, as being the old Borden government in disguise.

Everybody who has at heart the winning of the war, the object for which the Union Government was ostensibly organized, would like to think it is a real union government, and not dominated to an alarming degree by the old Borden Government traditions.

The disfranchising of a large part of good Canadian citizenship, the breking of faith with citizens of alien origin, whom we invited to our shores, and guaranteed the rights of British citizenship, cannot be excused, or condoned, even under the plea of necessity, as a measure to win the war, by means contrary to the principles of fair play and justice.

Giving the franchise to one class of women is justified by the conditions of service and sacrifice involved; but it si accompanied by the virtual disfranchising of another class of women equally worthy and by a more effective service and by constitutional right.

The non-partizan union government is playing the election game with loaded dice—under a franchise act which no sophistry, no casuistry, can justify as a fair measure—a franchise act deliberately designed with German cunning and German disregard of good faith, to promote partizan advantage.

The election conducted under such conditions may well be called a "historic" election. It is historic in the sense it recalls the days and methods of the Family Compact, and epochally historic in the sense that it marks the first time in Canada since those days when the full, freely expressed opinion of the people was restricted — when free expression of opinion by theoretically self governing Canadions was denied by a tyranically enacted parliamentary measure—without full expression of public opinion through the representatives of the people.

The Liberal members of the Union Government, invited into the spider's parlour, must be doomed to strange feelings when they appeal to popular support under the operation of a franchise act they vigorously condemned and vigorously combatted till they were gagged by closure; and one which not only outrages the principles of Liberalism, but the principles of justice inherent in free government.

We must win this war, and we should like to think that the Union Government is the best, or even a means to that end; but when it seeks popular authority through a medium which is contrary to the principles for which we are fighting and must win the war, the conviction is created that we are in a complicated situation that needs statesmanship and not compromise of principle to solve.

If the union non-partizan government were true to name, there would not be so much popular doubt—finding emphatic expression—of its being the only means. The people—not the politicians alone—would like a voice in the matter.

Mr. Hanna, Food Controller, says we must have more hogs in Ontario; yet he is trying to restrict cold storage operations.

Work On G.T.R. Bridge At Campbellford Will Be Suspended

The work on the G.T.R. bridge at Campbellford has been suspended for this year, but will be resumed in the spring if the labour conditions are no worse than they have been during the past summer. About forty men were the most the company could muster, and consequently the progress has not reached the first expectations. Several hundred labourers were needed, but only forty were secured. The G.T.R. will push the work in the spring, and will endeavour, as far as possible, to open the canal to traffic.

SERVICE TO THE NATION DEMANDS GOOD HEALTH

War is bringing home to every man, woman and child the fact that service to the nation is not a matter alone for the soldier and sailor and munition worker.

There is work, necessary work, for everyone to do, in the way of thrift and production and to do this work, health is the first essential. Even the most willing will find progress is slow if the health is bad.

Probably the most common complaint among those doing unaccustomed tasks is backache. Work may cause a tired feeling that will easily pass off but this backache that almost doubles one up is an indication of a condition of the system that needs treatment. The Kidneys are giving evidence of their weakness and the sufferer should be thankful for the timely warning given by this pain.

The quickest and surest relief from backache is a treatment with Gin Pills. Gin Pills are the tested specific for the healing of the Kidneys. Anyone who wishes to perform his or her full duty to the Nation in these strenuous times will find relief from backache in Gin Pills.

THREE very important points are definitely proven by the stupendous fact that thirty different artists have stood beside the new Edison and sung or played in unison with their re-created voices, before over 1,000,000 people in the United States and Canada, and over 500 newspaper critics have stated in their own columns that it is absolutely impossible to distinguish the real from the re-created voice.

These three points are :

1st. That the New Edison flawlessly re-creates every form of music, because these tests have been given by sopranos, contraltos, tenors, baritones, and bassos, also by violins, flutes, cornets, and banjos.

2nd. That it is a genuine acid test, because the thirty artists who have made these tests in public include such famous Metropolitan stars as Marie Rappold, Anna Case, Thomas Chalmers, and Arthur Middleton, whose voices are well-known to the leading music critics, and any variation of quality would be instantly detected.

3rd. That the New Edison is the only instrument that really re-creates music so perfectly that it cannot be told from the original, because no talking-machine would dare make such a test.

You cannot weigh and consider such positive, conclusive evidence as this without at least deciding that is worth hearing—and once you have heard it and compared it with "talking-machines" you will realize that here is the instrument you must have in your home.

The NEW EDISON

"THE PHONOGRAPH WITH A SOUL"

We have two booklets "Edison—his life and his favorite Invention," and "What the Critics Say," that we want you to read. One tells you about how Edison invented this wonderful instrument, the other shows what newspaper critics think of it. Call or send for them—they are free.

HOW AN EMPLOYER SHOULD SUPPORT A CLAIM FOR EXEMPTION

The following course is recommended to an employer who makes application for the exemption of several employees on the ground that it is in the national interest that the man should continue at the work in which he is habitually employed.

He should prepare a memorandum showing the reasons why it is in the national interest that men in certain occupations should not, in the national interest, be withdrawn for military service and this memorandum should contain a full statement of the total number of his employees, grouping them according to their respective occupations and qualifications, and stating the number in each group. He should also indicate the possibility or otherwise of substituting the labour of those unavailable for military service or outside the statutory class called up, the extent to which the withdrawal of men in the class called would effect the business, and such other facts and circumstances as may appear to be relevant. He should append to this general statement and classification a schedule of the names, ages and occupations of all the individuals in his employ who are within the class called out, noting against each name whether or not he proposes to claim exemption on behalf of the man, and whether, if he does, the exemption to the man should be granted should, in his opinion, be an exemption having no other condition than that the man should continue his present occupation, or whether it would suffice if exemption were granted for one, two or more months. As many copies of this statement and schedule should be prepared as there are men in respect of whom a claim for exemption is preferred, and one copy should be submitted to the tribunal in support of each claim.

Where applications in respect of different men come before different tribunals each tribunal will, if this method is followed, be put in possession of full information with regard to the business, its necessities and the extente to which the call may affect it. Even where all applications by an employer come before a single tribunal, appeals by the employer to the appellate tribunals provided by the statute will be much more readily carried on and dealt with if the full information with regard to the employer's situation is submitted in connection with each application; and it is by appeal to the Provincial Appeal Tribunal in the first instance, and perhaps ultimately to the Central Appeal Judge, that the employer will be able to correct what he considers the mistakes made by the Local Tribunal before which his claims for exemption are in the first instance considered. An opportunity to enter such appeals will be given after the communication by the tribunal to applicants of notice of the disposition which has been made of each claim for exemption, and this notice of the disposition of the claims will contain instructions as to the method and time within which notice of intention to appeal must be given.

The more fully, carefully and fairly the initial statement of the position of the applicant for exemption has been made, the more likely the application will be to receive favourable consideration at the hands of the local tribunal and the less likely it will be that any necessity for appeal will arise.

Instructions Received in Regard To The War Service Medals

Instructions defining the giving out of the new War Service badges have been received from the office of the Adjutant-General at Ottawa.

According to this interpretation of the recent order-in-Council, holders of Canadian Patriotic Fund war badges for "Service at the Front," will be required to make application for the registration of their badge and for the further purpose of receiving a certificate authorizing its wear.

The badge, which was at one time issued by the Canadian Patriotic Fund to men who had proceeded only as far as England and had then returned to Canada for discharge, has been recalled. In its place a special badge has been issued, and application will have to be made on a special form supplied by the headquarters at each military district throughout the Dominion.

On the granting of badges certificates will be made out at military headquarters, Ottawa, authorizing applicants to wear them. The number of the certificates will correspond to that of the badge and will be sent on to each military district headquarters for distribution, and it is explicitely stated that each badge must be handed out personally to the soldier or sent out by registered mail.

Class "D" badges come in for more attention by the department than all three other classes combined, and the instructions call for thorough re-examination of each applicant.

If he is still found medically unfit, according to the "Instructions for the Medical Examination of Recruits for 1917," an officer on the Medical Board shall fill out the application form and applicant will then sign it. The medical officer is also required to sign and attach all documents and forward to the military district headquarters. The application and paper will then be sent to the officer in charge, War Service badges, for approval.

General instructions regarding the issuance of War Service badges are quite clear. For instance:

"No badges shall be issued to any person who has been obviously unfit for military service during the period in which voluntary enlistment has been going on, or any person who was held medically unfit for reasons which would not cause him to be placed in category "D."

"No Class 'B' badge can be replaced if lost by the holder. This is the principle carried out in England.

"Badges of Classes 'A,' 'C,' and 'D' may under very exceptional circumstances be replaced if lost. The application must be made to the district headquarters, accompanied by the statutory declaration to the effect that the badge has been lost, and further than it has been lost in such a manner that recovery is practically impossible. Only under very exceptional circumstances will badges be replaced, and only when proof can be submitted that the original badge does not now exist."

According to the application form at Ottawa in connection with the new badges no returned soldier of the Canadian Expeditionary Force who is receiving hospital treatment will be able to receive his badge (whether he has seen service in France or not) until he has been formally discharged into civilian life.

Furthermore, the men say, there is ambiguity as to what dates should be filled in on the application form. Whether it means from the time he enlisted to the day he was discharged, or whether it means from the time he landed in France, or any other point of active service, until he left that front to come home, remains an open question.

The exact wording of the application form is as follows:

"I hereby make application for a war badge. Class — and Class —.

"I am in possession of Patriotic Fund badge, Class — No. —.

"(a) I enlisted in the Canadian Expeditionary Force, have seen active service at the front in the present war, from —— 191—, to —— 191—, and have been honourably discharged, (or have been retained in Canada on duty), and am therefore entitled to a war badge Class 'A' and also to a war badge Class 'B.'

"(b) I enlisted in the Canadian Expeditionary Force, have seen active service in England in the present war, from —— 191—, to —— 191—, and have been honourably discharged on account of old age, wounds, sickness, whereby I have been rendered permanently unfit for further military service and am therefore entitled to a war badge, Class 'B.'

"(c) I enlisted in the Canadian Expeditionary Force and served in the present war from ——, 191—, to ——, 191—, and have been honourably discharged from the Canadian Expeditionary Force, on account of old age, wounds, sickness, whereby I have been rendered permanently unfit for further military service."

Returned men say this form requires further explanation than now is available from Ottawa headquarters.

SNIDER SUFFERED MOST ALL HIS LIFE

Feels Better Since Tanlac Overcame Trouble Than He Has in Thirty-five Years

"I'm feeling better to-day than I have in thirty-five years, and it's all due to the good work of Tanlac," said James A. Snider of 17 Jackson Street West, Hamilton, recently. Mr. Snider has the distinction of being one of the fastest coopers in Canada, but was forced by ill-health to give up his trade. He has returned to work, however, and is employed by the Paardeburg Chapter, I.O.D.E. Mr. Snider is well known both in Hamilton and vicinity and although sixty nine years of age he has the appearance of a man many years younger. Continuing his statement, Mr. Snider said:

"A medicine that will make a person my age gain in weight and relieve them of troubles of thirty-five or forty years standing, is certainly wonderful. I had been suffering from a bad stomach nearly all my life. I had no appetite and just had to force myself to eat. At times I felt like there was a hundred pound weight on my stomach, and I was almost doubled up with misery. Gas would form from what I ate and make my heart flutter, and I often had dreadful smothering spells. I have had the best treatment, both in the United States and Canada, and have taken all kinds of medicines. I would feel a little better for a day or so and then feel as bad or worse than ever.

"Tanlac did for me just what others say it has done for them, and I want to make this statement because I feel like it may help lots of people who are in the same fix I was. Why, before I took Tanlac, I had rheumatism in my knees and the pain was so severe I could not straighten up, and now the rheumatism is nearly all gone and I can walk as good as anybody. It has put my stomach in good condition, the gas has stopped forming, and I don't have any more of those awful smothering spells. My food agrees with me and I know that it is building me up because I have already gained several pounds and have just finished my second bottle of Tanlac. All the pain is gone now and I want to say again I feel better than I have in thirty five years. I can't say enough in praise of Tanlac and I'm going to tell everybody that I can about the good it has done me."

"FLY PAPER" TRAPS FOR SHELL SHOCK CASES

The returned boys are not only examined physically when they enter the Discharge Depots of the Military Hospitals Commission on their arrival in Canada; they are even given elementary tests for mental agility, and hunting down shell shock symptoms is making psychological sharpshooters of the M.O.'s in charge.

As nets are laid for submarines, and barbed wire entanglements guard the trenches, a sheet of questions guaranteed to catch any Tommy whose wit has been a little worsted in battle confront every man who comes before the medical officers for release.

The boys themselves call the sheet, "the M.O.'s fly paper," and the fact that even visiting politicians, bank presidents and city fathers have stuck in the tanglefoot proves that it takes a mentally keen and wary-witted veteran to get by.

Are Soon Cured.

The slight mental or nervous disturbances which are detected in this way are readily corrected by a simple treatment which requires only a few weeks of specialized work. An unnatural dullness, difficulty in association, or memory may have been brought about by the strain of battle which the man himself has been quite unconscious of when no demand was made on his brain.

"Try This on your Piano."

A large percentage of the civilians to whom the test has been given have tripped up to Tommy's delight. Below are the Questions:

With your pencil make a dot over any one of these letters F G H I J, and a comma after the longest of these three words: boy mother girl Then, if Christmas comes in March, make a cross right here ..... but if not, pass along to the next question, and tell where the sun rises ..... If you believe that Edison discovered America, cross out what you just wrote, but if it was some one else, put in a number to complete this sentence: "A horse has ..... feet." Write yes, no matter whether China is in Africa, or not .....; and then give a wrong answer to this question: How many days are there in the week? ..... Write any letter except g just after this comma, and then write no if 2 times 5 are 10.... Now, if Tuesday comes after Monday, make two crosses here.....but if not, make a circle here ..... or else a square here ..... Be sure to make three crosses between these two names of boys: George.....Henry. Notice these two numbers: 3, 5. If iron is heavier than water, write the larger number here ..... but if iron is lighter write the smaller number here..... Show by a cross when the nights are longer: in summer?.... in winter?.... Give the correct answer to this question: "Does water run uphill?" ..... and repeat your answer here ..... Do nothing here (5 + 7 = ...), unless you skipped the preceding question; but write the first letter of your first name and the last letter of your last name at the end of this line: (10)

Had Bronchitis FOR THREE YEARS COULD GET NO RELIEF

Bronchitis is generally the result of a cold caused by exposure to wet and inclement weather. It begins with a tightness across the chest, difficulty in breathing, and a wheezing sound comes from the lungs. There is also a raising of phlegm from the lungs, especially in the morning. This is at first white, but later becomes of a greenish or yellowish color, and is occasionally streaked with blood.

On the first sign of bronchitis you should check it immediately by using Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and thereby prevent it becoming chronic and perhaps turning into some more serious lung trouble.

Mr. Theodore P. Beers, Upper Main River, N.B., writes: "I was troubled with bronchitis for three years, and could get no relief. I was always worse when I got wet. I tried lots of different medicines, but none did me any good until a friend told me to try Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. I got three bottles and before I had them half used I was better.

"My mother is now using it for asthma. It is a great medicine and we never want to be without it.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25c and 50c; manufactured only by the T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

LETTER CARRIERS TO RESIGN THEIR POSITIONS ON NOVEMBER 15th

Decide on This Step if Their Grievances Are Not Corrected—Their Request For the Appointment of the Board of Conciliation Has Been Refused.

At a meeting held on Thursday night the letter carriers of the Peterboorugh post office practically decided to resign their positions not later than November 15th unless their grievances are corrected before that date. It will be remembered that the carriers petitioned the Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labour, for the appointment of a Board of Conciliation for the purpose of investigating their request for an increase in wages. The request was refused, hence the following resolution passed at Thursday night's meeting:

Peterborough, Nov. 1st.

Resolved,—That we, the Letter Carriers of the City of Peterborough, in meeting here assembled, regret that Hon. W. T. Crothers, Minister of Labour, has seen fit to refuse the Letter Carriers of Canada a board of conciliation as per our former request.

Be it further resolved that we also regret that Hon. Mr. Doherty (Acting P.M.G.) has also seen fit to refuse the increase asked for by the carriers over a year ago.

Be it resolved that in the unanimous opinion of the carriers of Peterborough Branch No. 22, F.A.L.C. cast our votes with the large majority of carriers throughout the Dominion of Canada in favour of a walk-out by handing in our resignations, to take effect on conditions that, if a substantial raise is not forthcoming on or before a certain date ——, or date to be decided by Executive committee of Federated Association of Letter Carriers.

Considering that the government in its own words, that the hundred dollars was not intended to compensate a man to the full cost of living, be it resolved that as the Department has admitted this, they do sincerely know and acknowledge same as per their reply that we now call upon the said same government for what we consider our just rights, and in consideration of such being refused that we unanimously endorse a straight walk-out not later than Nov. 15th, 1917.

And be it further resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent to A. McMordie, and if he approves of same that a copy also be sent to Sir R. L. Borden, Premier, Hon. C. J. Doherty, Acting P.M.G., Hon. W. T. Crothers, Minister of Labour, and Capt. J. H. Burnham, M.P.

"THE WHIP" AT THE EMPIRE ON MONDAY

Pictures of Unexceptional Merit Are Being Shown For Only 25c.

The picture par excellence, the supreme offering of filmdom, is "The Whip," the screen version of the famous play that ran for three years in London and for over two seasons in New York City when it was produced by William A. Brady. Afterward the play had a run of two years in Australia, and a career without precedent in every part of the English-speaking world. It was translated into French, Russian and other tongues, and always with enormous success.

It was so vast in its equipment of scenes and effects that it could be produced in only three or four theatres in all America—such as the Manhattan Opera House, New York, the Auditorium, Chicago, etc. For this reason it has been seen by less than ten per cent. of the theatre patrons of the United States and Canada.

This vastness has been immeasurably increased by the resources of motion picture art. Given such advantages of original magnitude, "The Whip" offered a rarely inviting subject for picturization at the hands of Maurice Tourneur. Tremendous effects have been secured, as, for instance, the gigantic train wreck in which a whole train was smashed to bits at a huge cost for the sole purpose of securing one scene for this picture.

The story is of the race track and the intrigue revolving around a famous race horse named "The Whip." This intrigue involves an impecunious "gentleman" and his adventurous partner, a handsome young man in love with the charming daughter of the horse-loving judge who owns "The Whip," the jockey who rides and idolizes the horse and the unsophisticated and pretty sister of the jockey.

Big race scenes, wonderful hunting scenes, the best train wreck and the most thrilling automobile accident ever seen in pictures, startling scenes in the old Eden Musee, filled with wax figures —all these combined with a powerful and attention-riveting story make this the world's biggest screen play.

Big Clean-up Of "Blind Pigs" And Dens in Halifax

Newspaper's Revelations Aroue the City and Compel the Authorsities to Enforce the Law

HALIFAX, N. S., Nov. 2. — The failure of the city authorities to enforce the prohibitory law may be said to have created a system of "blind pigs," which, as the investigations instituted by a local newspaper have established are responsible for the debauching of hundreds of soldiers, and are dens of gross shame. The "bootleggers" have done a thriving business, not down on the waterfront alone, no ryet in "shady" streets, but in the very heart of the city. The "bootlegging" headquarters, indeed, are within a stone's throw of the Province building and the post office on George street.

Letters to the press from reputable citizens protesting against the apathy of the Mayor and Board of Control, and protests from the press effected only "spurts" of law-enfodcement.

NEWSPAPER LETS LOOSE.

Presently, convinced of its duty to the public, and, in particular, to the thousands of soldiers and sailors stationed here, many of whom have been physically wrecked by the potations of "red eye" dispensed by the bootlegging fraternity and the gentle ladies of the blind piggeries, the Evening Mail determined to go it alone, and came out with an offer of $200 in prizes for infodmation leading to the arrest, conviction and punishment of the law-breakers. Simultaneously they put an artist on the job, and sleuths of its own, meanwhile blazing the campaign in its columns with a liberal display of headings.

TURNED ON THE LIGHT.

In short, it put on the light, and the result has been so astonishing in its shameful disclosures of existing conditions that the public is aghast, or that element of the public is aghast what was, at the start, of the opinion that Halifax "was not half so bad as she was painted." They must now admit, when confronted with the facts, that the amount of illicit liquor-selling going on in the city, and the grossed evil with which it is inevitably associated, is such as to disgrace the city.

The winner of the Mail's first "boot legger apprehension prize" was a soldier, Corporal Costigan. He laid an information against ex-Policeman Bayfield Mitchell, the evidence showing that enterprising individual had been engaged in the sale of "red eye" at $2.50 a bottle. He is now serving a three months' term at hard labour in the city prison.

SEEING IS BELIEVING.

The Mail sleuths and the Mail's "blind pig" artists are doing great work in disclosing conditions as they exist. Pictures are being taken "from life," and straightway reproduced for the awakening of the public to the enefficiency and culpable failure of the police during all the time the prohibtory law has been in force to put it into effect.

The campaign has the unqualified approval of the military and naval authorities. It would indeed, be an anomaly if it had not, since the scandel, as related to our soldiers and sailors, and their victimizing by the bootleggers and blind piggeries, has travelled far.

FOUR RAIDS IN A DAY.

One result of the campaign has been the rousing of the police to activity. Wednesday there were four raids, the "goods" being delivered in every case. The campaign is now the chief topic of conversation here. Practically all reputable citizens are behind it. The issue has been put straight up to the Mayor, the Board of Control, and the whole Police Department.

ity's British Red Cross Gift May Be Paid At End of Year

A meeting of the Finance Committe of the City Council was held last ght with Alderman Stratton presidg, and Aldermen Dobbin, Weir and unders present.

Alderman Dobbin moved, seconded Alderman Weir, that the grant to British Red Cross be paid when quired and that the matter of arnging for it be left over until the d of the year so th' if a sufficient lance remains it can be paid out of this balance, and if not, that it can be met by an issue of debentures, or put on the rate for next year.

It was also decided that the City Treasurer pay to the County of Peterborough the amount of the insurance the city received on account of the destructionu of the County Building by fire with the amount of the interest which the city received on the money, and that an understanding be arrived at as early as possible as to the property rights the city has in the building.

EVERYDAY READING

It seems strange that in this, our day, we scarcely ever hear anything said of the need of the baptism of the Spirit. In fac the being filled with the Spirit, baptized with the Holy Ghost, the Holy Ghost coming upon us, the receiving the Holy Ghost, or being endued with power seems to be to a very great extent an unknown entity or some mystical experience with the majority of professed Christians. Although this is the case, it is nevertheless paramount as an experience; for power is the outcome of being baptized with the Holy Ghost, and power is a necessity. To be endued with power is to be furnished with power. To receive the Holy Ghost is to accept Him in His official capacity, the human surrendering to the Divine, a renouncing of all glory to the human and giving Him all the glory. The Holy Ghost coming upon us is the taking hold of us and working His own will with us. The being baptized with the Holy Ghost is to be immersed or covered out of sight in Him. To be filled with the Spirit is to be controlled and dominated by the Holy Ghost to the exlusion of other powers. The scriptural evidence of having received the baptism of the Spirit is not that He manifests Himself always with out fail as He did on the day of Pentecost. The real evidence or proof of being baptized is our receiving power, even the power of the Holy Ghost. My observation of others and personal experience is limited. Nevertheless I can speak of that which I do know by observation and personal experience. I have seen and heard the manifestations of the power of the Holy Ghost in speaking in an unknown tongue and working in other ways. In whatever way the power is manifested, it is the power of God, not in any sense of man. It is absurd to emphasize the speaking in an unknown tongue and putting little or no emphasis on the other manifestations of the Spirit. It is also equally absurd for man to argue the uselessness of the Spirit speaking in an unknown tongue to-day. This gift was not only given to Christians on the day of Pentecost, but in the year 1830 and 1847, and in the Irish revival of 1859, and in this our day. What folly for man to dictate to God how He shall work. His thoughts are not as our thoughts, neither our ways as His ways. It is the power of the Holy Ghost we need and must have; and it is His business (Jesus) to give it unto us and it is the Holy Ghost to speak through us or work otherwise as He seems best. The subject before us is the importance of being baptized with the Holy Ghost, and how to obtain or receive it. Because Jesus has made a man's heart clean and his life right is no proof of being baptized with the Holy Ghost.

Mr. Goforth, a man of no mean reputation, says he believes that every Christian should receive the baptism of the Spirit, as they did in the early church. To come back to our subject; how shall I obtain the baptism of the Holy Ghost? Who shall do this work for me? I know of no other way to take, but to go on to learn of Jesus, for He is the one who shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost; and as you yield to be taught of Him (to be taught of Him is to be taught of the Holy Spirit). He shall teach and instruct you what is necessary on your part to be endued with power. Wait before Him in expectancy, listen to His voice, yield to the call of the Spirit and you shall be led into entire surrender and utter abandonment to the Holy Spirit. Wait before Him, I say, whether for a short or long period of time; wait until He makes it clear to you the way to take. Then being covered or put out of sight, God the Holy Ghost shall work as you simply do His bidding. He shall have all the glory and you shall be enabled to live a normal spiritually natural life.

For Your Health's Sake Drink More Milk

Beginning to-day order twice as much milk as you have been getting. In no other way can you buy more health and at the same time save money.

The average family must cut down the food bills. Why not, then, buy milk rather than some other foods at exorbitant prices?

One quart of milk equals:—

8 eggs
3 lbs. fresh codfish
3/5 lb. of ham
2 lbs. of chicken
3/4 lb. of round steak
4/5 lb. of pork chops

When people come to properly understand the real food values in milk there will be much more of it used.

We want to impress upon you especially that our milk is good milk. It has that perfect flavour that makes milk-drinking a pleasure. It is produced and delivered to you under absolutely sanitary conditions. Better still, remember that the

An Exposition of Modish Coats whose Huge Collars and Snug Materials are Particularly Inviting on Bleak Days

Our most popular maker recently sent us what he described as "the most practical, and fashionable coats that the designers have created this season." And he should know for his products are sold by the leading style houses in this country. In addition to this, there are several importations from New York that are typical American. If one were to journey to New York they would see their duplicates in the fashionable resorts of that City.

Conforming with the most stylish coats on Fifth Avenue is this model of Java brown velour. It is rigidly straight in design; semi-tailored bodice with yoke front and gathered back; from the waist line at each side fall folds that are caused by small gathers. A large three-way collar is at your command — buttons close to the throat, or lies flat, which ever is your desire. The sleeves are tailored with turn-back cuffs. A cross-over belt in front furnishes a pleasing relief. It is moderately priced at $35.00

This charming coat of taupe velour is fittingly finished with a deep collar of grey Chinese Rabbit—will furnish ample protection from the nipping winds of winter. The material falls in a loose straight line from the shoulder, with the high waist line designated by twin straps forming the belt; on both sides of back, from the belt to the hem, is an unbroken line of taupe covered buttons. This model was imported from New York and can be had for $25.00

The designer decreed that African brown velour be the material employed in the making of this garment. A huge three-way collar is much in evidence, and at the back, descending from beneath, is a broad panel that finally forms a wide belt that encircles the waist. The sleeve is a semi-balmaccan effect that is touched with a trimming of three buttons. Needless to say, the waist-line is high and the entire garment is on the modish straight line order. The price is most reasonable at $38.00

Russian green velour alone is sufficient to recommend it, but with the addition of touches of black plush it is doubly enticing. The round cape collar is edged with a band of black plush and the button fastenings and trimmings are of the same. The waist-line is described with a draped belt which fastens in front with a large jet buckle. An extremely stylish model at $25.00

The size of collar on this model—in Burgundy velour—is most noticeable. At the back it hangs so low that it barely escapes and one front. The flap pockets are uniquely arranged and might be described as inverted. The entire outline of the garment is on the hipless order. Price at $35.00

Coats of the Fashionable Black "Salts" Plush

Little need be said of Black Silk Plush Coats—their modishness is well-known, and providing they are fashioned of a fine quality silk plush, their smartness is assured. When describing this particular garment we might say that it is cut on straight full lines, though slightly confined at the waist with wide belt that releases a number of pleats. The back is decked with a the five-inch belt, which has two large jet buckles—one back one front— and the collar is one of the snug convertible sort. Lined with heavy satin; also interlined. Price $59.00

The all-round richness of this Black "Salts" Plush Garment would cause its wearer to be envied in any company. Two wide loose panels, banded with fur, at either side fall from the gathered waist line, and the shoulders are almost entirely concealed by a large square collar trimmed with two rows of fur. It is an extremely smart coat and will give you return for every dollar you invest. Priced at $85.00

Canada Has Solved The Potash Problem

Germany's Fond Belief That She Had a World Monopoly is Exploded

The following is taken from the Canadian Pharmaceutical Journal, under the heading "German Mistakes":

Well, they are uncountable. They began with the war and have continued with its progress. John Bull's blundering is proverbial, but fades to nothingness compared with German blunders.

The first blunder was to start the war, then followed belief that Great Britain would not fight; that Canada would seceed, South Africa would revolt, India revolt, Australia remain indifferent. Then that France would not fight, that the British Army was contemptable. The invasion of Belgium, the romp to Paris, the drive against Russia when the way to Calais was open; the invasion of Roumania. Then the stupendous blunder casting into the background all others, that the United States would not fight.

Here is another "bonehead" from a privy counsellor of the German Empire:

"America went into the war like a man with a rope around his neck which is in the enemy's hands and is pretty tightly drawn. With its tremendous deposits, Germany has a world monopoly in potash, a point of immense value which cannot be reckoned too highly when once this war is going to be settled. It is in Germany's power to dictate which of the nations shall have plenty of food and which shall starve. Germany is in the position, often realized by Bismarck, to handle the long arm of the lever."

Even while he talked, the potash problem was being solved in America, both Canada and the United States contributing. The natural resources of both countries are being investigated and rich deposits discovered in the United States, while Canada possesses an inexhaustible supply in the felspar of the Laurentian Mountains, which converts every cement works into a potash producing plant. In addition, a process for recovery of potash from the ore as a main operation has been developed by a Canadian chemist. By November 1st a plant will be in operation at Gravenhurst, Ont., producing potash of a better grade and at a price which will enable us to compete with Germany in the world's market, and demonstrate another of Germany's bone head blunders.

Bank of Montreal 100 Years Old

In 1817 the City Governor Loaned British Garrison Sentinel to Stand Guard at the Bank

To-day, November 3rd, the Bank of Montreal, one of the oldest Canadian banks, and one of the world's largest and strongest financial institutions, celebrates its hundredth anniversary. In that period, the Bank of Montreal has built up an enviable reputation, and stands to-day as one of the greatest pillars of the British Empire's remarkable financial structure. Twice as old as the Dominion of Canada, the Bank of Montreal has seen practically all the history of present-day Canada in the making. It had its share in the upbuilding of these British dominions in the troubled times when Upper and Lower Canada were separate provinces. It played its part in the great enterprises that preceded and followed Confederation. Its history, in brief, is the history of the Dominion, and it is probable that no other single factor wielded a greater influence upon the upbuilding of Canada financially and commercially. It has seen the population of Montreal grow from 20,000 to 750,000, and that of Canada from 400,00 to 7,500,000.

One Hundred Years Ago.

One hundred years ago British North America consisted of the two Canadas, now Quebec and Ontario, and the three Maritime Provinces. Lower Canada was almost entirely French, and British immigrants were regarded with enmity and suspicion. The war of 1812 had been successfully passed, but the agitation that resulted in the rebellion of 1837 was already in the air.

This much may be said of economic conditions. Quebec exported timber, and Montreal furs. Manufactured products were largely imported. Domestic trade was carried on mostly by barter and exchange. Shopkeepers who bought from the merchants were compelled to give long credit to the settlers and the latter almost invariably made payment in farm products. Roads were bad and few, distances between settlements were great, and the voyage from England often took three months to accomplish. The country was too poor to afford the luxury of a gold or silver circulating medium, and the various kinds of money in circulation, including English, French, American and even Spanish and Portuguese coins, made the exchange problem complicated and unsatisfactory.

In Old Montreal.

At that period St. Paul Street was the business and residential centre of Montreal. The new bank secured the use of a residence on St. Paul street, occupied by Robert Armour, paying a rental of £150 a year. Robert Griffin was appointed cashier of the bank at a salary of £300 per annum, and given a staff of six, including a porter. Plates for printing bills were ordered from Hartford, Conn., and also a rolling press. The first £1 bill carried a cut of the local prison, the most modern building in the city. There being as yet no police force in Montreal, the governor of the city was asked to station a sentinel at the bank from the local British garrison. It is interesting to note that the directors fixed days of discounts for Tuesdays and Fridays, days still reserved for the semi-weekly board meetings of the bank. On November 3, 1817, the bank opened its doors for business.

"The Bird of Paradise"

"The Bird of Paradise," Richard Walton Tully's interesting play of the Hawaiian Islands, with a lengthy cast and scenic investiture, is being sent by Oliver Morosco to "The Grand," Wednesday, Nov. 21.

Miss Celete Scudder is to play the part of Luana, in Mr. Tully's story of life in our Western possessions shortly after the annexation. So excellent is her work as the little, loving, trusting princess, that she is fair to become as prominent as her six worthy predecessors in this famous role.

The remarkable scenic effect in the last, or volcanic scene of the play, has been the subject of much comment and many questions. The similitude of a flaming colcano's reflection is perfect; the red glare of incandescent, subterranean lava seems absolutely thrown from the sky. The illumination is portentious, ominous—even terrifying, in the dramatic moments of the play's finale, yet the mechanism is nowhere apparent.

TURNBULL'S

Milkmen Do Not Approve Of Mr. Gillespie's Scheme To Systematize Delivery

Meeting Was Held Last Evening Without Any Definite Result—Discussion Was Fast and Loose—Milkmen Are Not of One Mind.

The lack of unity among the milk vendors of the city was never more apparent than it was last evening at a meeting held in the office of Mr. G. A. Gillespie. About fifteen milk vendors responded to the invitation of Mr. Gillespie, but only one or two of that number showed any inclination to respond to Mr. Gillespie's invitation to form a company for the purpose of systematising delivery so that twelve men could deliver as much milk as thirty men are now doing.

This is the third occasion that Mr. Gillespie has made an offer of that kind. Last evening he intimated that a company had already been formed of his own business, and that he was willing to take the milkmen into the company and give them enough company stock to cover the estimated cost of their route, equipment, etc. This stock would be redeemable in cash over a period of years. Such a scheme, Mr. Gillespie said, would mean the establishment of a central milk distributing station and about twelve men would deliver the milk to the consumer.

Chairman Elected.

Mr. E. Butler, who was elected chairman of the meeting, called on Mr. Gillespie to outline his proposal to the milkmen present. Mr. Gillespie suggested that the men turn in their routes and take stock in payment based on a fair valuation. If the delivery of the milk was systematised in that manner, it would mean that the consumer could be supplied with milk at one cent a quart less than the price prevailing under the present system of delivery. This stock would be redeemable in cash at so much per year. Mr. Gillespie made it plain that he did not wish a monopoly of the milk business, and also said that he might not again be in a position to make such an offer. In event of this arrangement going through, the City Council would be asked to pass a by-law protecting the milk dealers from outside competition.

Cost of Handling.

Mr. Gillespie asked the milkmen to consider the matter, and in a week call a meeting and present their views. Some of the milkmen ventured a few remarks on the cost of handling milk. Mr. Gillespie said that the price of five cents per quart had been fixed by the committee appointed to deal with the matter at the instance of the Government. This was to cover the cost of handling the milk from the distributing station.

Mr. Hodson, a local milk vendor, considered four cents a quart was sufficient for handling milk.

Mr. Koster, another milk vendor, with one week's experience to his credit, started to cross-examine Mr. Hodson on his own account as to how he arrived at these figures. This created considerable discussion, and resulted in the meeting being brought to order by the chairman.

Mr. Gillespie figured the cost of handling milk through the creamery at three and a half cents a quart.

Dispense with Bottles.

Mr. Butler asked the meeting how many women were engaged in washing milk bottles, whose time did not enter into the cost calculations of the milkmen? The chairman thought that more would be accomplished if the milk was delivered in the old way and bottles and caps dispensed with. He suggested this change for the duration of the war, when the cost of caps and bottles is on the increase.

Speaking of the loss of bottles, Mr. Butler said he was in one house this fall, and saw five bottles of catsup on the table. The bottles were milk bottles.

Mr. Hodson told of how he had exchanged a number of customers with Mr. Deyell for the purpose of shortening up the ground covered in delivery.

Mr. Butler did not regard this as a good scheme, either from the standpoint of the customer or the milk vendor.

After some considerable discussion the meeting broke up without anything definite being accomplished. The majority of the milkmen present agreed that it would be almost impossible to get the milkmen to agree to any kind of a co-operative scheme, as the majority preferred to work on an independent basis.

"The milkmen never would get together," said one of the men as he passed out of the door.

To Help Nature Shed A Bad Complexion

Beauty devotees are enthusiastic over the beautifying qualities of mercolized wax. Nothing discovered within recent years accomplishes so much, so quickly, without harm, at such small expense. The principal reason for its wonderful merit is that it works in harmony with physiological laws. Instead of hiding complexion defects, it removes them. It actually takes off the aged, faded, sallow, freckled or blotchy surface skin—gently, gradually, causing no inconvenience. It is Nature's way of renewing complexions. When the natural process is retarded because of deficient circulation or nerve tone, mercolized wax comes to the rescue and hastens the skin shedding. The new complexion which appears is a natural one, youthful, healthy, exquisitely beautiful. If you've never tried mercolized wax, get an ounce of it at the drug store, use at night like cold cream, washing it off in the morning.

HONOURS FOR FORMER PETERBOROUGH MAN

New honours have been vested in Mr. Kavanagh, son-in-law of Mr. E. Shortly of this city.

Mr. Kavanagh, one of the vice-presidents of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, and one if his activities is to be the placing of war savings certificates among the people of the country to the amount of two billion dollars.

Mr. J. E. Kavanagh is the organizing head. He is attached to the treasury department in Washington. The Metropolitan Company loans Mr. Kavanagh to the Government knowing that it is making a sacrifice, but feeling that it is thereby doing one more bit for the saving to the world of democracy.

Mr. Kavanagh formerly taught school in Peterborough.

A FABLE ON VICTORY BONDS

There was once a Person who talked boastfully about his Swell Home and his Uppishly Upholstered Car. He would drive Fifty Miles to be present at a Picnic where there were Free Eats. He always Finished First in races where there were Rich Prizes and No Entrance Fee. When somebody blew him to a Fine Supper at the Big Hotel, he would hurry home to upbraid his Poor Wife because she could not provide such Delicacies of Diet out of an Allowance which kept her Skimping on her own Clothing in order to furnish Decently Digestible Dinners for her Lord and Master. No Child dared Consume Candy in his presence, lest the Omnivorous One should take it away, on the plea of saving the Little Folk from Severe Indigestion. At Home he was a Regular Hurricane, for his Business Associates regarded him as a Big Blow.

When a Neighbour Took Sick, our Hero was always sure to have a Sudden Engagement calling him rapidly to Another Quarter of the Town, where he would not have to bother Calling the Doctor. When Giggling Girls came around to collect money for the Red Cross, he was every ready to give them Free Advice, but looked Pained when they asked him for Cold Cash. If the Plea was Pressed, he took care to thrust his Surplus Earnings into a Pocket with a Button on it, and would shortly be seen beating a Strategic Retreat.

In moments of Extreme Exuberation, induced by Strong Waters for which Somebody Else had Paid, he was wont to describe himself as a Humdinger of a Good Fellow. At Home, however, he was privately considered a Grouch, and at the Office everybody Hated him.

Moral—You can't judge the Size of a Man or a Motor Car by the Noise they make. When Canada, in a week or two, floats a Victory Loan for $150,000,000, the man who Loosens His Pocketbook will not necessarily be a Patriot, but the man who merely Loosens his Tongue will in most cases be a Prune. The Fellows at the Front are Buying Victory with their Blood. The Fellows at Home are Poor Sports if they do not help buy it with their Money.

BILLETING COMMITTEE GRATEFUL

The people of Peterborough are certainly hospitable. The Billeting committee of the recent Sunday school convention asked the different churches for billets for the delegates. The response from all the different denominations was so generous that it quite exceeded their anticipations. Many of the delegates when they arrived, instead of asking to be billeted, went to the homes of friends. Quite a number of people who were so generous in their offers of hospitality did not, therefore, receive any of the visitors. The Billeting committee desire to thank these in particular for their kindness in offering to take delegates and hope that they did not feel too keenly disappointed. The generosity of the people in general made the work of the Billeting committee comparatively easy. The Billeting Committee.

HIGH PRICES ON MARKET

The market this morning was considerably smaller than usual and the prices higher. Eggs, which the women claim are scarce on account of this being the 'off season' for laying sold at 55c. per dozen.

Butter at 48c-50c. per lb.
Chickens— 25c. per lb.; 75c.-$1.40 pair.
Ducks—75c.-$1.25 each.
Potatoes—$1.75 per bag.

Whipping a Tired Horse Does Not Give Him Strength

Neither Do Stimulants Restore the Tired, Worn-out Nerves

YOU may whip a tired horse so that he will win a race or get his load over a bad spot in the road, but that does not add to his strength. In reality it further depletes his reserve of strength and leaves him exhausted.

And so it is with the nerves of the human body. You may by use of stimulants accomplish the work in hand or by deadening the nerves with narcotics you may stop the headaches.

Any temporary relief obtained is won at an enormous expense to the nervous system and you are left more exhausted than ever.

The introduction of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food was revolutionary in the treatment of nervous diseases, because it replaced the old idea of obtaining temporary relief with the new method of reconstructing the starved and depleted nerve cells.

A little patience is required to follow out this building-up process, but this is the only way in which disease of the nerves can be really cured. The nerves are starved for proper nourishment. You supply the nutrition in Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. The results are certain, because you are working hand in hand with Nature.

As strength is restored the appetite is sharpened, digestion improves, you get the good of the food you eat, headaches disappear, you find yourself gaining in confidence, in vigor and in energy. You begin to have new ambitions, to enjoy your work and to feel again that life is really worth living.

The Food Cure

Mrs. A. North, Grand Street North, Brantford, Ont., writes: "Both my husband and I can speak very highly of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, having used it with splendid results. My husband suffered from weakness and a run-down system, and became so bad he finally had to give up work. He also had spells of melancholia. He commenced using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and after a treatment of this medicine I never saw such a change in anybody. He is now able to attend to his work, and is enjoying splendid health.

"Before I started taking Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was troubled with nervousness, sleeplessness, and a pain around the heart. The Nerve Food built up my system, made me feel stronger in every way, and relieved me of the annoying symptoms from which I had suffered. We always keep Dr. Chase's Nerve Food in the house ready for use in case it is needed."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

TO-DAY'S WAR NEWS

exemption have been allotted to the various tribunals strictly in the order in which they were received by the Registrar. Hence the man who sent in his claim first will be heard first. The decisions from day to day will be forwarded to the Registrar, and in those cases where exemption has been granted, and no appeals entered, exemption certificates, based on the findings of the tribunals, will issue from the Registrar's office. It is expected that these certificates will begin to move out from the Registrar's office about November 12 or a day or two later. That does not mean that every person will receive his exemption certificate on or about those dates, as certificates will be sent out every day until the tribunals are through granting them.

B, C and E Men.

It is not contemplated that B, C and E men will have to put in an appearance before the Exemption Tribunals, nor that they even will be directed to appear. However, their claims will come before the tribunals in the ordinary way, and in the order that they were received from the Post Office, and as each one of them is considered, the tribunal will grant exemption on the ground that the applicant is not an A man, and which certificates will be valid until the category question is called out. Consequently a man not in Category A may not receive his exemption certificate until nearly the last day of the session of the tribunal, as the certificates will not be granted to B, C and E men first, so as to clear them out of the way, but all applications, no matter what medical category involved, will be adjudicated upon in the order in which they were received in the office of the Registrar. Another consequence of this system is that since the deliberations of the tribunal over a man in other than Category A will simply be a matter of form, if anything like a large number of the twenty-five cases that come up on any one day are not in Category A, the tribunal will have a rather easy day of it.

Judging by the comparative slowness with which registrations are being made at the local post office it looks as if the men of Class One have not realized that they have only another week in which to report for service or claim exemption. In spite of all the articles published in the newspapers and the local journals like papers everywhere have repeatedly printed the regulations, there is still a strange lack of knowledge in regard to the Military Service Act. For the one hundredth time it is pointed out that if you come in Class One, no matter what your physical condition, even if you are an invalid or crippled, you must obey the law or else be treated as a deserter. It is not necessary that you should be examined first, but you must at least report or claim exemption on or before next Saturday, Nov. 10th.

Again, many men who have been examined and who have been placed in B, C or E categories are apparently of the opinion that they have complied with the law by going before the doctors, and that their medical history sheets are sufficient proof. This is a serious error and may get some of these men into trouble. The law is implicit on this point and the advertisements of the Military Service Council are equally clear. No matter whether you have been examined or not you must either report for service or claim exemption through the forms obtainable at the post office. You must do this whether you have been categorized "A," "B," "C" or "E" or if you have not been examined at all. If you have not been placed in A category the instructions are that you shall apply for exemption on physical grounds. Your medical history sheet will be attached to your application and the tribunals will give you an exemption if you are in B, C or E class, as only Class A men are required at present.

A large number of those who have applied for exemption have been notified my the Registrar as to the date upon which their claims will be heard by the tribunals. Local men living north of Hunter street or in East City are being assigned to the tribunal consisting of Judge Huycke and Police Magistrate Dumble, while those living south of Hunter street will have their applications heard by Messrs. W. H. Moore, K.C., and J. A. Aylmer.

YESTERDAY'S FIGURES.

Candidates examined	51
Placed in A Category	34
Placed in B category	5
Placed in C Category	2
Placed in E Category	10

Yesterday afternoon's session of the local Medical Board showed a splendid squad of men to be examined, seventeen out of the twenty who went before the doctors being placed in A Category. Only one man was rejected, while B and C categories each claimed a man. At night seven out of twelve were Category A men. The results of the day showed an increase in the percentage of fighting men. There were four examinations fewer than on Thursday, while there were five more men placed in A category than on the preceding day.

The figures for the afternoon were:

A category	17
B category	1
C category	1
E category	1

At night, out of twelve examined, the results were:

A category	7
B category	2
C category	1
E category	2

Fit for the trenches	877
Fit for non-combatant service overseas	97
Fit for service in Canada	89
Unfit for any service	381

This morning's session showed 50 per cent. of the men examined in A category. The majority were men from outside the city. There will be no session of the Board to-night, but the usual sitting was held this afternoon. The register is filled up for the first three days of next week, and a number of men are booked for Thursday.

OTTAWA, Nov. 2.—One hundred and fifty-seven thousand men have registered under the terms of the Military Service Act. They are divided in this wise: Exemption claims, 144,628; reported for service, 12,975; total registrations, 157,653. The totals have been compiled from returns received by the Military Service Council from the various Registrars throughout the Dominion. They cover the period since the proclamation was published calling out the first class of men, up to and including yesterday. How the various districts compare is shown in the following table:

District	Claims for exemption.	Reports for service
London	15,051	327
Toronto	28,073	2,673
Kingston	13,143	401

The following letter has been received from Sapper C. Sturgeon, of the Transport Section, 10th Canadian Railway Troops. Sapper Sturgeon enlisted originally with the 8th C.M.R., and was invalided home from England. He re-enlisted here with the 256th Railway Construction Battalion, and is now in France:

Somewhere in France.

Dear Sir,—Thought perhaps you would like to hear from one of the 256th Railway Construction Battalion, which of course they have transferred us into this unit. I think, as far as I know, all the boys are all right up to now. We get separated at time. All depends where we are working. Several of us have seen Sergeant Thomas' grave, and we are going to put a few lines on his cross in memory for him. I guess Corp. Stanley will explain it better later. I am not allowed to explain exactly where it is. The weather here is wicked, and they are still smashing at Fritzy. I can't see how he can stand it much longer, but I guess time will tell. Well, you must excuse the pencil as it is the best I have got under the conditions. Well, I must close, with kind regards to friends in Peterborough. Yours sincerely,

Spr. C. Sturgeon.

Good Demand For Butter

The Grocery Situation for the Past Week

The following comment on the market situation as regards food stuffs appeared in the Canadian Grocer this week:

The Markets at a Glance.

An outstanding feature in the grocery market during the week was the issue by the Government of regulations respecting the sale of margarine. This information is ready for distribution. There was an easier tendency in butter during the week as a result of the possible advent on the Canadian market in the near future of this commodity. There is a good demand for butter for export, but transportation space is scarce, and amount being shipped abroad is correspondingly curtailed. Eggs were in weaker tone due to lack of shipping space and to the prevalence of heavy storage stocks on this continent. In poultry line live chickens were in better supply during the week and prices were slightly lower in consequence. Honey is scarce in the Ontario market and prices have been increased as a result. Live hogs were quoted lower during the week, and this is working out toward a weaker tendency for meat products. Compound lard and shortening are in firmer position due to the advancing market for cotton-seed oil.

Advances in other grocery lines have again been quite numerous, and include jams, condensed milk, baking powder, cream of tartar, baking soda, cotton twine, cotton clothes lines, sardines, condensed coffee and cocoa. The sugar situation is still a topic of engrossing interest. Refiners are spreading their stocks among their customers to best advantage, and wholesalers are in turn endeavouring to treat their customers in like manner. It is in the hands of the retailer to see that his stocks are let out in a judicious manner. Package cereals is another commodity of very great interest in view of the stand taken by the Food Controller that they shall be prohibited from sale after specified dates. Potatoes are inclining to the higher levels, as indeed all vegetables are. Farmers are showing a disposition to hold their stocks for higher prices. Domestic fruits are in shortened supply, and foreign fruits are coming in more plentifully. Business is reported fairly good in the face of uncertainties that prevail with respect to price regulation.

EVELYN NESBIT IN "REDEMPTION"

(Cohan's Theatre)

Monday will inaugurate the third capacity week at George M. Cohan's Theatre of Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, in "Redemption." Capacity audiences at every performance, afternoon and night, during the past week indicate the interest of the public in this remarkable production. Seats are now selling two weeks in advance. Evelyn Nesbit would have won international fame as a motion picture star of the highest rank had her name been wholly unknown to the public previous to her portrayal of the leading character in "Redemption." Her acting in Julius Steger's nobly beautiful photo-dramatic production, which is filling the George M. Cohan's Theatre to capacity twice daily, has come as a revelation to experts as well as to the audiences that have seen her in her new role on life's great stage. This young woman of ten thousand sorrows shows herself to be the possessor of unusual histrionic ability. Charmingly natural in her lighter moments, she is strong and sure in the emotional scenes. Her depictment of mother love is one of the most exquisitely touching things ever witnessed on stage or screen. In the poignant scene where she tells her son, grown to man's estate, of the cruel circumstances which, when she was young and trusting, made her the plaything of a libertine, she appeals with irresistible and tear-compelling effect.—New York World.

"Redemption" will open a three-day engagement at the Grand, Monday, Nov. 5, commencing with Matinee at 2.30. Id-104-7294

DEDICATION FESTIVAL AT ST. JOHN'S

Reference Will Be Made to Members of the Congregation Who Have Died For the Empire

St. John's Church Dedication Festival commences to-morrow. The nave of the church was built in 1835 during the ministrations of the Rev. Samuel Armour, who was the first English church minister in Peterborough. For many years before Mr. Armour had taught school, as well as discharged clerical duties, and during the wardenship of the late Captain Rubidge the nave was completed. Restorations and buildings were carried out in 1882 at a cost of $10,000. The special preacher at the services to-morrow will be the Veneral Archdeacon Beamish of Belleville.

At the services appropriate references will be made to the members of the congregation, who have met death overseas. The list of former members who have passed away on active service is as follows:

Major G. W. Bennett.
Capt. Beauchamp Boucher.
Pte. E. B. Boswell.
Pte. Trevor Cuffe.
Corporal Keith Cumberland.
Pte. Charles Dean.
Lieut. John Dennistoun.
Capt. Robt. M. Fair.
Lieut. Gordon Fife.
Sergt. Robert Hay.
Pte. Douglas Leal.
Pte. Robt. Levoir.
Lieut. F. W. Morris.
Pte. J. S. Ralphson.
Pte. Edward Smith.
Sergt. Sidney Ecobichon.
Pte. Fred Worboy.
Lieut. Harold P. Smith.
Sergt. R. W. Wride.
Pte. Hubert Stuart.

Monthly Entertainment

The second monthly entertainment to the teachers and scholars of St. John's Sunday School was given last night in the School, under the auspices of the A. B. C. Club. Mr. Bates, president, was in the chair, and conducted a very pleasant and instructive programme.

Three sets of slides were shown on the screen by Mr. Douglas Caniff, the first, "The Pied Piper of Hamelin," being accompanied by fine reciting by Mr. Reggie Brown. The old story, shown on coloured slides, of the dire results of a broken promise, was well received. The second set had been made from pictures of famous masterpieces, illustrating twelve parts of the "Apostles' Creed," and was accompanied by an instructive and interesting address from the Sunday School superintendent, Mr. R. J. Devey, a lesson for everyday life being drawn from every part of the Creed.

"The House that Jack Built," set number three, secured a royal reception, the quaint old couplet on each picture being joyously shouted out in chorus by the youngsters as heartily as if they had been rehearsed.

A song was nicely sung by Miss Beryl Bates, also "Polly Woggle," humorously rendered by four boys of the club.

The slides were from the Lantern Slide Department of the Sunday School Commission in Toronto, who now have over seven thousand beautiful slides for use of its members.

ALICE COLLINS.

After a long and painful illness, Alice Collins died last night, aged 50 years.

She leaves to mourn her death two sisters, Mrs. J. Dalton, Dummer, and Mrs. M. Y. Crowley, Otonabee, and four brothers, Timothy, of Nebraska; Patrick, of Oklahoma; Joseph, of Peterborough, and James, of Douro.

The funeral will take place from Mr. James Collins' home, Lot 1, Concession 2, Douro, to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock.

JOHN TOBIAS SWITZER.

John Tobias Switzer, lot 20, concession 6, Emily, died last night after an illness of about three weeks' duration.

Deceased was born in Emily 69 years and five months ago, and resided there all his life. He is survived by his wife, Mary Jane Storey, whom he married 39 years ago, one son and four daughters, Mrs. H. Lang, Smith, Mrs. Sydney McCann, Cavan, Mrs Norman Edmison, Smith, and Miss Cora at home, also his brothers and sisters, W. E. Switzer of Peterborough Mrs. Doube, Emily, Mrs. Elliott, Desboro, and Gabriel Switzer, Emily.

The funeral will take place on Sunday afternoon at 2.30 to the Omemee cemetery. Service at the house at 2 o'clock.

SHELLS DON'T LAST LONG.

20 Days' Vimy Bombardment Would Use All Made in Canada.

MONTREAL, Nov. 2.—Sir Alexander Bertram told the "Win-the-War" Club last night that when he took up the work in connection with the manufacture of munitions in Canada he stipulated that the Dominion Government should not have anything to do with it; that it should be between the committee and the War Office. He said he made a confidential report each week to the Duke of Connaught, then Governor-General of Canada.

To date shells to the value of $900,000,000 have been made in Canada. The cost of an 18-pound shell is $1.80, whereas the first price quoted by the War Office was $8.55. Enough steel has been used in the making of shells in this country to build nineteen St. Lawrence bridges or sixty-six 18,000-ton dreadnoughts.

Major E. G. M. Cape, who organized and took over a battery of siege guns from Montreal, which played an important part at Vimy Ridge said that all the shells made in this country would last only twenty days in such fighting as that at Vimy Ridge.

PORT M'NICOLL LOTS SOLD

BARRIE, Nov. 2.—Sad evidence of the burst of the boom which was to have made Port McNicoll a great terminal city was seen in the tax sale for the County of Simcoe held here today. Of the 3,545 lots listed about 3,500 were from the port. Plan No. 612, comprising 559 lots, was withdrawn and 50 lots had been redeemed. Of the big number put up for sale only 90 were sold, half of these being in the C. P. R. terminal village. This year's tax list was more than double last year's, which was then a record for the province.

Russia Has Lost Her Prestige And Influence By The Revolution

Russian Government is Too Unstable to Be Entrusted With the Development of a Confederation of Southern States Beyond Her Borders —Idealism of Russia is Compounded of Wrong Mixture.

INFLUENCE IS DIMINISHED

The kaleidoscopic changes which have kept Russia in a turmoil for the last few months, have been so absorbing in interest with their repeated climaxes and in the constant shifting of the pivot of the struggle from Parliament to battlefield, from Soviet to Duma, that the graver questions of the effect which the upheaval must produce on the history of the world have been beclouded or forgotten.

Let us go back to a little more than three years ago, to those pregnant days of July, 1914, when Russia declared with no uncertain voice: "Whether war comes or not, we cannot permit Austria to overrun Serbia and gain the hegemony of the Balkan States."

This was the keynote of her policy, this was the clear answer of Imperial Russia to the Mitteleuropa idea. It was to defend Serbia, and to defeat the expanding ambition of the Kaiser that Russia drew the sword. Her policy was to check Teutonic influence in the Near East.

That the settlement of the Balkan States should be drawn under the guiding hand of Imperial Russia was clearly understood by the Allies, and was assented to by them as recently as last January, when in answer to the peace proposals of President Wilson, Great Britain and France set forth explicitly in the forefront of their war aims, the dismemberment of Austria and the readjustment of the territorial boundaries of the Near East.

Russia's Chance Gone.

The revolution in Russia has entirely changed the whole aspect of affairs in Central Europe. One year ago the chancelleries of Europe were questioning whether Russia would not be too strong if given Constantinople and the hegemony of the Balkas.

To-day they know that she is too weak, her government too unstable to be entrusted with them.

The Pan-Serbian idea is buried. Out of the great world conflict Roumania and Serbia will emerge financially bankrupt and physically exhausted. Greece is discredited. Only Bulgaria remains active and militant.

The relinquishing by the Central Powers of devastated Roumania and Serbia will not now mean the creation of a Slav state under the fostering car of Russia. The new democracy has too much on her hands in the internal reconstruction of her own country to concern herself with the development of a confederation of southern states beyond her borders.

Frank H. Simonds, an observant war critic, says in a recent article:

"It was over Serbia and Belgium that the world went to war. It was to defend Serbia that Russia drew the sword. The Belgian episode supplied the occasion for British entry into the war, and if terms of peace establish the independence of both these countries, German defeat will be unmistakable."

It will indeed be a victory for the Allies if the avowed aims for which they drew the sword are acknowledged by Germany. But it will be a paper victory. It will be a victory in name only. If Russia is not powerful enough to assume a sort of beneficent suzeranty over a readjusted Balkan federacy, that task must fall on Austria by default, and no treaties or other peace provisions could prevent her sympathetic sharing of her influence with her powerful neighbour.

We talk of attrition, but attrition counts for nothing if it does not culminate in final victory. What would the attrition of General Lee's army have signified if the Wilderness campaign had not closed at Richmond.

Russia has Lost ... ... Galley Two

We talk of internal discontent in Germany, but such unrest would be turned to universal paeans of joy and thanksgiving if the bells of peace sounded from German steeples.

So it is that whatever attitude Rus-

COMB SAGE TEA INTO GRAY HAIR

Darkens Beautifully and Restores Its Natural Colour and Lustre at Once

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use preparation improved by the addition of other ingredients, a large bottle, at little cost, at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Ten German Boats Sunk

Two German Cruisers Sunk in the North Sea

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, Nov. 5.—After a fierce battle with British destroyers, the German auxiliary cruiser Marie, 3,000 tons, was burned and sunk in the North Sea and all her crew lost or captured.

It is thought that the Marie and Crocodile, reported sunk this morning were the German cruisers which sank five neutral freighters and two British destroyers last week.

LONDON, Nov. 5.—Official reports indicate that at least ten armed German boats were in the Cattegat fight.

LEFT FOR ROME.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS, Nov. 5.—Premier Lloyd-George and Premier Painleve, with military staff officers, left here for Rome.

HEAVY ATTACKS.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

ROME, Nov. 5.—The Teutons made heavy attacks against the Italian lines on Saturday. The Italians are holding their new front by heavy resistance.

CAPTURED ENEMY POSTS.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, Nov. 5.—British troops captured enemy posts last night west of Havincourt and east of Pooelcapelle.

ARTILLERY DUELS.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS, Nov. 5.—Lively artillery duels continue north of Chemin des Dames. French aviators fought six hundred and eleven aerial engagements during the battle of Malmaison. Sixteen enemy planes were brought down and fifty forced to land in their own lines.

Drowning Accident At Young's Point

Five-Year-Old Son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Young Was the Victim

Francis Young, the little five-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Young, Young's Point, was drowned at the Point on Saturday evening at 6.15.

The little lad had been playing on Mr. Pat Young's verandah, which is above the locks, at six o'clock. About twenty minutes later the family called him to tea, and on receiving no answer, a search party was formed and set out to look for the child.

Mr. Pat and Mr. Fred Young noticed something floating in the water above the locks, which is very deep at that point, and found it to be the little body of the child.

It is supposed that the boy in the semi-darkness wandered into the water and died of the shock, as a sweater which his father had wrapped about him during the afternoon kept him floating.

The funeral took place this morning at nine o'clock.

Cottagers and excursionists of Stoney Lake will be deeply touched by the news of the accident, as all familiar with the lake boats are also familiar with Mr. Fred Young, formerly engineer on the Islinda, and last year deck hand on the Empress. Great sympathy will be extended to Mrs. Young, formerly Miss McCauley, sister of Rev. Father McCauley, of Ennismore, who, with two younger children, mourn the loss of the little boy.

News From The Russian Front

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, Nov. 5.—General Verervski, Minister of Marine, has reported to Premier Kerensky the presence of big German transports near the Esthonian shore. He says that this indicates a landing in force.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, Nov. 5.—Russians win in severe fighting in the Caucasus.

Not every maid combines the aptitude for blundering and the talent for ingenious explanation that characterize the young woman about whom the United Presbyterian tells this diverting story:

"What do you suppose has come over by husband this morning, Sophia?" exclaimed a conscientious little bride to the new servant. "I never saw him start down-town so happy. He's whistling like a bird!"

"I'm afraid I'm to blame, mum. I got the packages mixed this morning, and give him birdseed instead of his regular breakfast food, mum."

Hard to Drop Meat? All depends on what you eat as a substitute. It is a good time to study "food value." You may be eating the wrong foods, the foods that cost most and give the least nutriment. Shredded Wheat Biscuit contains more real, body-building nutriment, pound for pound, than meat, eggs or potatoes and costs much less. Two of these Biscuits with milk and a little fruit make a nourishing meal at a cost of a few cents. Make Shredded Wheat your "meat." A satisfying breakfast on which to start the day's work. It is ready-cooked and ready-to-eat. Made in Canada.

"THE PAINTED WOMAN"

By FREDERIC ARNOLD KUMMER

The hot afternoon sun streamed through the grated windows, making strange arabesque shadows upon the floor. A dull stain, red black, showed beneath the curtain at the entrance to the bedroom, and where it had crept out beyond the threshhold a circle of flies buzzed lazily. All was hot, still, terrible.

Barton thrust aside the curtain before the bedroom door and looked within. The door was in disorder; its profound silence told him that it was unoccupied. He sheathed the cutlass that he had held ready for possible attack, and went out into the garden. Death, silent and terrible, lay over the house. He determined to return as quickly as possible to the town.

Suddenly as he descended the steps he heard a rustling amongst the bushes at the side of the house, and a moment later there appeared first the head, then the crooked shoulders of Pedro, the hunchback boy.

He crept from his hiding place, evidently in the greatest fear. Then, after a quick glance around to assure himself that they were alone, he came up to Barton and spoke.

"Have you seen the Mistress Ramona?" he asked, his voice thin as wire.

Barton's heart sank. He had meant to ask the same question. He shook his head.

"What have they done with her?" he groaned.

"I do not know," the boy replied. "After I had given her the knife, I ran away, for I was afraid that they would find me, and that would have been the end. I hid among the bushes, down the side of the hill. An hour passed and then I saw them going away, with the Mistress Ramona and Lucia. I watched them as they went down to the road. They started toward the town. A little later, Mistress Devereux followed. Then I came back here."

Barton grasped the hilt of his cutlass. Here was news at last. He wondered that he had been able to learn nothing of the girl in town.

"At first," the hunchback went on, "I was afraid that the Portugee would have killed her, but he is a coward, in spite of all his loud talk. I heard the others laughing at him, where I was hidden, but I could not hear what they said. I do not think that they have taken her on board the ship, for Master Tench would not permit that. I think they mean to sell her in the market. The hunchback sat upon the steps staring vacantly at the ground before him. "I do not know what to do," he muttered. "The mistress and Lucia are both gone, and the master as well. I am glad that I killed him. He struck me with the whip—across the face he struck me—that night when you first came here. I am a free man and he struck me as though I had been a slave. It was then that I swore to kill him. He commanded me to let no man cross the threshold of the mistress's door, and I obeyed him. I killed him, because had I not, he would have killed you and her. She was always kind to me. She set me free. I killed him for her sake. Now I do not know what to do." He passed his hand across his forehead, and looked at the young Puritan with a vacant stare.

"Come with me," the latter said, placing his hand on the boy's shoulder. "I go to seek your mistress."

The hunchback shook his head.

"No," he said. "If they found me in the town they would kill me, for they know what I have done. I shall stay here and hide. Later on I may be able to help, who knows? In the darkness I may come, for Lucia will expect me. I love her. Do what may be for her. I must stay here, until the night." He turned away, and glided like a shadow into the house.

Barton sat out for the town with all haste. He glanced at the sun, already low in the west. The masts and yards of the vessels in the harbor lay black as jet against the copper-colored sky.

The streets of the town, as he traversed them, had already begun to show signs of the nightly activity of the place. Many persons were abroad; the taverns were filled and in the market place a crowd had begun to gather, in anticipation of the sales about to be made there. The townspeople derived amusement as well as profit from these sales—in this instance some rumor of an unusual treat in store for them had spread throughout the place; they licked their chops and prepared themselves for an amusing evening.

Barton had at first intended to seek news of Ramona in the market place, but a chance meeting rendered it unnecessary. Not far from the Turk's Head Tavern he came upon a Dutch trader, with whom he had had business some weeks before, at the time of the Thanksgiving's first arrival. He accosted the man, and inquired concerning Portuguese Joe and his companions.

The Dutchman, it chanced had seen them, and knew of their plans.

"They are aboard ship at present," he informed Barton, but they will be ashore ere long. It is said in the town that they are to sell the Firebrand's woman in the market before nightfall.

Barton did not wait to hear more. Insted he made his way as quickly as possible toward the water front.

A boaman sat upon the sand splicing a bit of rope. Barton called to him and engaged his services. Within a few moments they had pushers of the night before were sleeping off, and a quarter of an hour later he was clambering up the side of the Thanksgiving.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The rose of the dawn still lingered in the morning sky, and a faint reflection of it coloured the white cheeks of Ramona de Lara as she stood superb in her defiance of the cringing Portugee.

He had retreated before her furious outburst, until he leaned at last against the table that stood near the centre of the garden. Never for an instant had he supposed this tender creature, scarcely more than a child, capable of such a storm of wrath. Under the terrible strain of the night and morning, she had become a reckless and despairing woman, breathing hatred and defiance, goaded by suffering to a point where even death itself had no longer any terrors for her. The knife which she hurled toward him tingled at the Portugee's feet; he did not even glance at it. Her bitter threats sent shivers of fear down his spine. He had desired the woman, but he hesitated to take into his arms a tigress. She was of Latin blood, like himself; he well knew that the vendetta she had declared against him was no childish threat. His desire gave place to fear. With hatred blazing in his eyes he crouched against the table; when she at last dared him to take her in his arms, he did not move. It was thus that Tench and his companions, having slaked their thirst, presently found him. They had begun to gather up the most valuable of the possessions of their dead leader, and staggered under the weight of the massive gold and silver ornaments.

Tench, with grim laugh, took in the situation at a glance. It pleased him mightily. Portuguese Joe was, after all, a man of value to him. He had no mind to see him neglect the sterner duties of his trade because of his infatuation for Ramona. Women, he held, distracted the eye, weakened the sword arm, rendered a man unfit for the great emergencies of life. Ormiston's case, indeed, afforded ample proof of his theories—he had but now been holding forth at some length to Graves and the others upon the folly of placing any trust in the opposite sex. In the Firebrand's case it had clearly brought about his death, he informed them, reminding them that he had many times warned the latter against Ramona and her deviltries. He meant if possible to save the Portugee from a similar fate, not through any liking for the man, but because he needed him.

"Well, Portugee," he observed, casting the two great candlesticks he carried upon the sand. "I'm thinking you've made a bad bargain. Take my advice and let the wench alone."

The Potrugee raised his bloodshot eyes. He, too, was thinking very much the same thing. Twenty doubloons was, after all, a goodly sum. He began to regret his purchase, thinking of the more complaisant beauties of the taverns. He well knew that the threats Ramona had made against him were not the result of sudden passion. There was a cold determination in her manner that chilled all his former enthusiasm. Stories of another buccaneer who had made a woman his unwilling mistress crowded to his brain. It was Trent, sometimes called The Wolf. The woman, wife of a Spanish officer, had sworn to kill him, and did, by strangling him in his bed one night, with the strands of her hair.

"Do you want to buy the woman back, One Eye?" he asked.

The old man gave a grim laugh.

"Not I. Sell her in the market. We have small time to waste ashore. It is Captain Morgan's plan to meet at Tortuga and sail for Cartagena. They say he means to sack Panama itself. Would you stay behind, for the sake of this bit of devil's flesh?"

The Portugee was already revolving a plan in his mind. He desired now, not so much to possess Ramona, as to be revenged upon her. He thought he perceived a way to do this, and still recover his twenty doubloons. Going up to the girl, he seized her roughly by the arm, and in a moment had tied her wrists together behind her back. Then he made as though to kiss her, but something that he saw in her eyes caused him to think better of it. He turned to the others with a laugh, in which, however, there was little mirth.

"Perhaps you are right, One Eye," he said, shrugging his shoulders, "I'll sell the girl to-day."

"Good. Now lend a hand, and we'll get the Firebrand's goods to the town. A fair division, each to share alike, say I. After that, I'm for Tortuga."

Within a short time the two rooms of the house had been stripped of everything of value, and the loot piled in a glittering heap in the centre of the garden. Then, having consigned Ormiston's body to its last resting-place, and made the booty up into bundles convenient for carrying, the little party set out for the town. Lucia, who had been found crouching in the small shed at the rear of the house that served as kitchen and servants' quarters, they took along with them. She walked beside her mistress, convulsed with sobs. Both knew the fate that awaited them, but Ramona faced it with defiant eyes. The Portugee did not look at her. He smiled to himself, as he planned his revenge, and swore that before he was through with the girl he would break her spirit.

An hour later the two women, together with that portion of the Firebrand's belongings that must of necessity be sold in order that proper division might be effected, had been conveyed to the market place, there to remain until the time of opening the market should arrive. Human slaves were a commodity so frequently dealt in, in Port Royal, that accommodations for their keeping had long ago been provided. Shiploads of Spanish captives were sent to the cane fields via the slave block, along with negroes, and even Englishmen, whom fate had made prisoners of war. Many a cavalier, captive of the Cromwellian wars, had died a lingering death on the sugar plantations of the island.

This Nutritious Food Relieves Constipation

YOU can choose two ways of relieving constipation—the artificial and injurious by means of expensive drugs, and the natural method by means of balanced food. Roman Meal, invented by a physician, not only relieves constipation, but it is a highly nourishing and easily digested food; you never tire of it because you can enjoy it in so many different ways.

Dr. Jackson's

has all the delicious flavor and nourishing food value of entire berries of wheat (30%), rye (35%), flaxseed (25%) and wheat bran (10%). Flaxseed is three times as nourishing as wheat, rye or oats. It is rendered absolutely tasteless and odorless by electricity.

We have from thirty to forty feet of digestive tube because our ancestors for many ages ate food that contained more waste than nutrition. Man's forty foot digestive tract is mostly muscle which has nothing to do with actual digestion. These bowel muscles positively will not function unless there is sufficient waste in the food to stimulate them to natural action. Lack of waste means constipation. Meat, white flour and refined cereals have but little waste. Constant use of impoverished foods like white flour and highly refined cereals causes the muscles of the tract to weaken from lack of exercise, and then the constipation becomes chronic—or worse.

Roman Meal has the full, proper amount of branny waste to stimulate the bowel muscles to action and thus relieve constipation; its flaxseed acts as a lubricant. When used alone, brans cause catarrh of the bowel. In Roman Meal this is counteracted by the soothing flax. Roman Meal positively relieves constipation, or the Roman Meal Company will return your money.

No wonder the medical profession everywhere endorses this great food. For it is made from the prescription of a physician—a specialist in Dietetics.

Roman Meal is the most delicious and the most nourishing food ever invented. Do not stir the porridge except while mixing meal and water or you positively spoil it.

At all grocers.

The Military Service Act, 1917

Privileges and Penalties

For Class One Men, Employers, Parents

For Class One Men

If your examination by a Medical Board has placed you in Medical Category B, C, or E, attend the nearest Post Office, attach Medical Certificate to claim for exemption and your present responsibility under the Military Service Act ends.

If placed in Medical Category A, and you feel justified in asking for exemption on financial, business, or domestic grounds, you have the right to claim exemption before a tribunal. It is not necessary or desirable to report for Service or to make claim for exemption in person. Simply go to nearest Post Office, fill in the form provided, leaving it with the Postmaster for free transmission to Registrar.

For Employers of Class One Men

The employer may make claims for exemption of Class One Men in his employ on the forms obtainable at the nearest Post Office.

In their enthusiasm to serve Canada there will be a number of men in Class One who will desire to report for service, but who will better serve the national interest by continuing their present occupations. It is the duty and privilege of employers to claim exemption in such cases.

For Parents

Where domestic reasons exist for the exemption of a Class One man, application may be made by parents or a near relation for the exemption of such man.

N.B.—Care should be exercised to prevent more than one claim for exemption being made in respect of any one man. When the claim is made on industrial grounds it is best made by the employer.

Penalties Provided

Failure on the part of a Class One man to report for service or apply for exemption on or before November 10th—a term of imprisonment not exceeding five years with hard labor; also claim to exemption is forfeited.

Attempt to bribe any member of an exemption tribunal, medical board or military representative—a term of imprisonment not exceeding five years and not less than one year.

Employer reducing wage or altering conditions of employment by virtue of making claim for employee's exemption—fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, nor less than one hundred dollars, or imprisonment not to exceed six months.

Any person urging a man in Class One not to observe the requirements of the Military Service Act—imprisonment for term not less than one year nor more than five years.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Two Family House

The Rent Was Low Because It Was Reported to Be Haunted.

By F. A. MITCHEL

Miss Laura Williamson was an orphan, doomed to make her own living. Being a stenographer and typewriter in a large city, she was obliged to pay for board and lodging nearly all her salary. It occurred to her to take a room in an inexpensive quarter and get her breakfast and dinner herself. One Sunday morning, having leisure for the purpose, she took up a newspaper and scanned the advertisements for lodgings.

There was an advertisement of a two family house, the rental of one suit of four rooms, furnished, on the ground floor, the price of which was no greater than what Miss Williamson had expected to pay for one room. She concluded to go at once and look it over. Half an hour's ride in a trolley took her to its location. She found the neighborhood respectable and the house itself apparently in good repair. The blinds of both stories were drawn, indicating that neither was occupied. Miss Williamson rang the doorbell of a house near by in order to make some inquiries. A woman came to the door and when asked if she knew anything about the condition of the house for rent replied:

"All I know about it is that every one around here believes it is haunted. It's been for rent for a long while, but no one will take either suit, for it is well known that there are ghosts in it. I understand that they've put the rent down to next to nothing, but still no one so far has been induced to live there."

Miss Williamson was not at all superstitious and had no belief in ghosts. She saw an opportunity to secure a suit of rooms cheap, and a few days later she took advantage of a holiday to visit the house with a key to the lower flat and was so pleased with it that she closed the bargain at once and the next Saturday afternoon moved her few belongings there.

On going to sleep alone in a strange house that was believed to be haunted she could not help giving way to a slight dread lest she might be disturbed in the night by the ghosts. But she banished the thought, and the next morning, Sunday, awakened by the sun shining in at her window, she experienced a comfort in finding herself in possession of four rooms, including a bath. The morning light took away all loneliness. As for the ghosts, she forgot all about them. Not a sound during the night had interrupted her slumber.

Miss Williamson was one of those persons who have resources within themselves and are not always pining for company. She occupied herself during her first day in her flat putting it to rights, and the rest of the time she spent reading. Having to rise early in the morning to go to work and being a good sleeper, she went to bed at 9 o'clock.

About 2 o'clock in the morning she was awakened by a tramping directly over her head. It was tramp, tramp, tramp, tramp in one direction, then tramp, tramp in another. Sometimes there were five or six steps, but usually from two to four. Then there was a brief cessation, after which the steps were subdued, more like a spiritual trend than the others. These finally ceased, and all was still.

Miss Williamson was puzzled for a moment did she refer these sounds to ghosts. But what could cause them? She had supposed the flat above was unoccupied. Even if it was occupied, why should the only sounds come from it before cock crow?

Before Miss Williamson left the house in the morning she went to the upper hall and knocked at every door. No response. She tried the doors, but found them locked. Listening, she heard no sound. Then, from the sidewalk, she looked at the upper windows. The shades were drawn, as she had seen them before.

Miss Williamson experienced a sensation of discomfort.

That day produced more blunders on the part of the typewriter than she had ever made before. If she was to be awakened every morning before day by a tramping overheard by and by the matter would get on her nerves. If it did she would be deprived of sleep, and the result would be that she could not do her work. If she could not do her work and do it properly she would lose her position.

She went to her abode that evening not with the light heart she had entered it two days before. Before opening her main door she went upstairs again, knocked and tried the locks. All was still as before. Returning to the first story, she unlocked the door of her flat, half expecting that ghosts had been there and turned everything topsy turvey. Nothing had been disturbed, and the tenant set about cooking her dinner.

Everything depended upon the tramping being repeated that night. She went to bed hoping that it would not, but dreading that it would. She lay awake an hour longer than usual, though very tired and much troubled at having been reproved for the mistakes she had made during the day.

She woke up at midnight. Everything was quiet, and she soon dropped asleep again.

Tramp, tramp, tramp, tramp!

There it was again.

Tramp, tramp!

Miss Williamson remembered that the night before there had been four tramps in one direction, then two in another.

Tramp, tramp, tramp!

She was not quite sure but that the third series of tramps had been three.

The steps continued about the same length of time, the last sounds being muffled as before. Whether the listener had got more used to them or because of her disbelief in the supernatural, she did not seem to mind them as much as she had the night before. Perhaps the repetition of the steps in the same order as before may have had something to do with it. At any rate, her heart ceased its wild beating sooner than before, and after the sounds ceased she went to sleep.

The next morning she concluded not repeat her attempt to find out if the flat above was occupied, but went directly to her place of business. Her attention was again distracted by her experience, and today she made a blunder that, had it not been detected, would have cost her employers something like $10,000. Before leaving the office she was handed a check for the salary due her and told that she need not return.

There was nothing to do but to go to her flat, get her dinner and on the morrow commence a hunt for another situation. But the prospect for one who had been discharged for making a serious mistake of getting another place was not bright.

Miss Williamson turned in that night wishing the ghost would come into her room during the night and put her out of her misery. If it did she might lie there till her rent was due without her demise being discovered.

That night she heard a door above shut, a few steps; then all was silent.

This was not a repetition of the sounds heard on the two previous nights.

Miss Williamson, shaking off her fears, got out of bed, put on a dressing gown and slippers and crept shrinkingly upstairs. All was dark and silent in the hall. She stood listening, but heard no sound. Then suddenly there came a groan.

This was too much for the poor girl's pluck, and she ran downstairs so fast that she came near breaking her neck, for she fell at the bottom of the flight, and since it was dark as Egypt she knew not what was in her way. She picked herself up and stood uncertain what next to do.

There was bravery in Miss Williamson's makeup, and she determined to make another attempt to discover the ghost. Climbing the stairs again, she stood with her face on a level with the top step. It was also on a level with the landing. Under the door of one of the rooms was a line of light.

For a few moments Miss Williamson's mind was balanced between two hypotheses. Either there was a supernatural glow in that room, or it was illuminated by artificial light. Being inclined to a rational view of things, she settled down to the opinion that a gas jet was burning in the room. Ghosts don't require gas jets. Therefore a human being must be in the room. At this moment there was another groan. This time the hearer's imagination was not at work, and the groan sounded human. It struck her that it proceeded from one who was ill. She went to the door in question and opened it.

On a bed with his clothes on was a young man. He was very pale and evidently in great pain. Miss Williamson approached him and stood over him.

"Shall I call a doctor?" she asked.

"No; I've been this way before. I'll get over it pretty soon. Please look in the top drawer of that bureau. You'll find a small bottle. Give me one of the tablets in it."

Miss Williamson produced the tablet, and it relieved the patient very soon. The paroxysm from which he suffered passed, and he did not have another. Miss Williamson told him that she had thought the flat he was in to be unoccupied and asked how he came to be there and why she had never seen him there in the daytime.

"I am a newspaper reporter," he replied. "I come in between 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning, when the paper goes to press, and go out about noon. I am permitted by the owner to occupy this flat temporarily."

"You must be a sound sleeper," said the girl. "I have rapped at this door about 8 o'clock in the morning and received no response."

"I am a sound sleeper," was the response, "and lately I have been overworked. No maiden tap would awake me."

"If I had known that a man occupied this flat alone," said Miss Williamson, "I would not have taken the lower one."

"I don't occupy it. I am only permitted to use it temporarily. Besides, where's the harm? I come in at 2 a. m. and you go out about 8."

"Nevertheless I shall give up my rooms."

Miss Williamson gave the story as it has been told here—how she had been so upset by the strange sounds above her that she had blundered at her work and been discharged. She was out of a position, and now she must leave the only home she had.

"You shall not leave your home," said the reporter, "for I will cease to come here. As for a position, I think I can get you one with the city editor of my paper, who is in need of a stenographer."

A way was finally found by which the newspaper man remained, and Miss Williamson did not accept the position offered her. They concluded to marry, and the lady moved upstairs

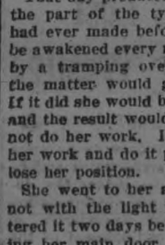
HEAT FLASHES, DIZZY, NERVOUS

Mrs. Wynn Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her During Change of Life.



Richmond, Va.—"After taking seven bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I feel like a new woman. I always had a headache during the Change of Life and was also troubled with other bad feelings common at that time—dizzy spells, nervous feelings and heat flashes. Now I am in better health than I ever was and recommend your remedies to all my friends."—Mrs. LENA WYNN, 2312 E. O Street, Richmond, Va.

While Change of Life is a most critical period of a woman's existence, the annoying symptoms which accompany it may be controlled, and normal health restored by the timely use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Such warning symptoms are a sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and inquietude, and dizziness.

For these abnormal conditions do not fail to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

The Best Habit In The World

is the habit of health. The way to get it is to train your bowels, through the liver, to act naturally, at a fixed time, every day.

Take one pill regularly (more only if necessary) until you succeed. Then you can stop taking them, without trouble or annoyance.

This has been the good-health-rule for 50 years.

Money Fights!

IT is real ammunition; a prevailing weapon in the struggle. To what extent, then, will you let your money fight by loaning it to Canada?

Canada not only must have money to support her armies in the field, she must have money to finance Great Britain's purchases of our agricultural and industrial products.

If Great Britain is forced to buy elsewhere because Canada cannot give her sufficient credit, industrial and agricultural depression may follow; and our fighting efficiency will be seriously impaired.

THE ACUTE PROBLEM OF RISING PRICES

Shortage May Become Such That Government Will Be Forced to Take Drastic Action

Written for The Financial Post by Agnes C. Laut

WASHINGTON—When the price of milk was raised to 14 and 15 cents a quart in the eastern cities of the States—the price paid the farmer is 6 and 7 cents—the consumption of milk fell off in New York city alone 800,000 quarts a day out of a daily sale of two or three millions quarts. That is, 800,000 East Side families can no longer afford milk. The situation is worse as to coal. Thousands of families have deferred ordering their coal for the winter, hoping that the fixed prices of Government regulation would reduce the cost. The cost is to-day $1.50 a ton higher than last year, and what with fixed prices by the Government and demands for increased wages by the miners many small coal mines have closed down completely, and the shortage of coal is acute and real. Thousands of city dwellers have not laid in their yearly supply of coal, and cannot now get it at any rate. Garfield, the price regulator, declares he has found in Cleveland a million tons of concealed coal. To make his discoverey complete he should have added that this stored coal is being held in reserve, not by the operators to push up prices, but by the big industrial operators, who need coal for war operations in manufacturing.

Prices Going Higher.

At time of writing the prospects are: Meat, 50 cents a pound by Christmas; eggs, $1 a dozen; milk, 15 cents a quart; coal, $12 a ton; wood, $12 a cord; sugar, not enough to go round at any price. People simply cannot pay these prices, and industrial unrest is becoming a menace, from which I see no way out but one, and that is the way the Government has taken in the case the steamships — Government operation. I saw say — and I am sorry to set it down—that on the first dip of the thermometer to winter weather I look to see food riots and bloodshed in the streets of every big city in the Eastern States. Please remember that, altogether apart from the war, big men have been predicting these overturning convulsions to our lopsided civilization for the last twenty years. The Government is aware of conditions and is desperately trying to avert industrial warfare likely to come from privations. So far, Government efforts have aimed only at conciliation, but if prices ascend a few more notches, conciliation will have to become intervention; and the Government knows it. The big rail operators say frankly that if the Government regulates rates and doubles traffic, then the Government is welcome to come in quickly and assume operation of the country's railroads. Likewise of food! If private distributors cannot place milk in the consumer's hands at less than 15 cents a quart, meat at less than 50 cents a pound, coal at less than $12 a ton, and wood at less than $12 a cord—the dairy interests and meat packers and coal and wood operators will be forced to call on Government distribution during the period of the war.

Up to Government?

The packers have already requested the Government so to act. The coal operators with strikes impending would welcome Government operation during the war, and while the milk companies have not yet asked Government distribution, it may be said they are nearer to it this week than at any time since the struggle began between farm producer and city seller. The farmer cannot reduce prices and stay in business. If he reduces prices—as Hoover this week implored the dairymen to do—he must kill his cows and go out of business — which would only accentuate the shortage of food.

There is only one way out — as I have indicated in former Post articles—if the Government fixes prices, it must fix wages; and if it fixes wages, it must operate workers. Whether this be the thin edge of socialism, or paternalism, we are up against it for this winter, and within two months we shall see one of two things — price fixing abolished as a labyrinthine fallacy, or Government distribution of all food products. These are not opinions. They are facts in transit before our very eyes, eclipsing all that we have known of former economic theories.

Russia Has Lost Her Prestige

sia adopts her influence as a factor in the peace settlement terms will be abridged. She is no longer the dominating power in the determination of the limits and boundaries of Ukraine or in a readjustment of the Balkan hegemony.

Russian Influence Diminished.

But Russia must still exert an influence on the duration of the war. If Leninism spreads throughout that country, carrying in its train disaffection in the army and imperilling the civil government, the peace of the world may be delayed for two or three years.

Leninism has already seriously hindered the efforts of the Allies. It politically imperilled the revolution in Russia by confusion in the Councils that were seeking to establish a stable government. It tended to destroy the military efficiency and the morale of the Russian army which the Allies, and especially Great Britain and Japan, had done their utmost to re-equip. It enabled the Germans to make some showy successes on the Eastern front, such as the reoccupation of Bukowina, Eastern Galicia, and the capture of Riga.

More than this, the spread of Leninism impeded the movement for parliamentary reform in Germany and established more firmly the rule of the Kaiser and his Prussian war lords. It proved a blow to democracy throughout the world.

The idealism of the Russian revolution is compounded of the same mixture of egotism and altruism as was the French Revolution of over a century ago. Each people imagined itself to have lit upon a sovereign cure for human ills. France regarded political revolution and Russia social revolution as a panacea. The Jacobins who would have driven all Europe into republican freedom by force find their counterpart in the Leninists who would force all Russia to adopt communism.

Anarchy would appear to be a necessary accompaniment of most revolutions. But anarchy which is inevitable for a period is always temporary. It is so intolerable an evil that the least competent communities sooner or later find a remedy for it.

How soon Russia emerges from her present unsettled state, how wisely she is guided during the next few months of her convalescence will influence not only the duration of the war, but the whole future history of Europe.

A writer of popular stories was one day being shown through a book-shop in New York. A small table was devoted to the new books, and all the rest of the space was taken up with gorgeous editions of Stevenson, Dickens, Scott, Thackeray, Fielding, etc.—fine leather-bound volumes at very modest prices.

The writer indicated with a sweep of his arm this collection of books and observed:

GET 2,605,000 FOOD PLEDGES.

Maine Leads States in Week's Campaign for 10,000,000 Families.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1. — Despite bad weather, the Food Administration had obtained to-night more than 864,000 signatures to food-pledge cards in the first two days of its intensive pledge campaign throughout the country. This total was contained in reports from about half of the States.

The aim for the week is to enroll 10,000,000 families. Yesterday and to-day added to those previously obtained make a grand total of 2,605,000. Maine led the States to-night with a total of 90,000 cards signed in two days.

Pro-German propaganda, the Food Administration announced, is hampering the work of volunteers in some States. Housewives have been told that if they sign the cards the Government will seize their household stores for the army.

PLOT AGAINST FORD INFANT.

Threat Made Against the Safety of Millionaire's Grandson.

DETROIT, Nov. 2.—It became known to-day that Federal agents in Detroit are investigating an alleged plot to abduct or kill Henry Ford II., infant son of Edsel Ford, and grandson of the multi-millionaire manufacturer.

A letter demanding $10,000 from Edsel Ford, as the price to rthe baby's safety, was turned over to post office inspectors several days ago. The letter was signed 'Sicilian Anarchists' Association." It demanded that the money be sent to "Gus Adams," and said it would be called for at the general delivery department. A youth who called for it was taken into custody.

GERMANS CROSS THE TAGLIAMENTO

Another Italian Retirement Is Inevitable

WOUNDED ITALIANS CARRIED TO SAFETY ON GUN CARRIAGES

Soldiers Refused to Abandon Wounded Comrades--Rear Guard of Cadorna's Army Fought Heroically to Cover the Retreat---Confidence in Italian Ability to Hold Tagliamento Line.

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

ROME, November 5.—A flood of human wreckage borne forward on the tidal wave of the German-Austrian advance into Northern Italy, reached Rome to-day with harrowing tales of suffering and despair.

Signora de Suliani, formerly Miss Davidson, of Sioux City, Iowa, with her two children, both under four, arrived safely from her home in the northern provinces, exhausted by the flight. She told a vivid story of day and night hurrying ahead of the enemy, of the ranks of Italian troops, steadily tramping backward as others heroically fought back the advancing hordes. Soldiers refused to abandon the wounded, and Signora De Suliani told of hundreds of cases where three and four bandaged men were lashed to each gun carriage and hauled along with the precious artillery.

American Consul Carroll of Venice, telegraphed the American Embassy to-day that he had returned to his post at Venice after a visit to the front. Carroll reported all Americans safe in the section now overrun by the enemy. He was also greatly impressed with the Italian army's re-establishment along the Tagliamento line and completely optimistic of its ability to throw the Germans back. The third army, Carroll reported, is safe and almost intact. Italian workmen everywhere are repledging their patriotism and soliditary of support for the Government. Scores of messages have been received from all over Italy in which workmen's organizations offer their services and reassert their unqualified allegiance.

POLICITIANS AT OTTAWA STUDYING LAURIER MANIFESTO

Interpretation is That He Will Not Interfere With Those Already Drafted by the Military Service Act But Will Not Proceed Further

WILL NOT REPEAL ACT

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

OTTAWA, Nov. 5.— Ottawa politicians are studying the manifesto of Sir Wilfrid Laurier this morning and weighing the effect upon the country of the various planks of the Liberal platform. There is little comment so far, though government members express some satisfaction that the issue is clear-cut on the Conscription Act.

The interpretation taken from Sir Wilfrid's pronouncements in that regard is that while he will not repeal the act if returned, nor interfere with those already drafted under its provisions, he will not proceed further toward the completion of the quota required to exhaust the Act until a referendum has been held and the people have declared on the straight issue.

(The Liberals express satisfaction at the specific nature of the planks of the platform dealing with economic questions and problems.. They declare that the manifesto is an appeal to the common people.

The stand of Sir Wilfrid on the Canadian Northern situation is interpreted as meaning that whatever arrangement is made by the Board of Arbitration under last Sessions Act, will be subject to revision by a new Parliament should Sir Wilfrid be returned. Sir Robert Borden contemplates issuing a further manifesto in a day or so, which will elaborate in detail the platform already laid down in the statements given out several weeks ago.

EVIDENCE THAT ITALIAN SITUATION IS STILL SERIOUS

Presence of Premier Lloyd George and Premier Painleve in Rome is Given That Significance But News From the War Front is Better To-day

GERMAN PROPAGANDA

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

(By Ed. L. Keen.)

LONDON, Nov. 5.— The arrival of the British premier, Lloyd George, and Premier Painleve in Rome, was taken here to-day as evidence that the Italian situation is still serious. Preliminary reports, however, indicated that the Italians had successfully repulsed the first blow aimed by the Germans in the Trentino, in the expected enemy offensive there, and that the Tagliamento line still stood firm.

It was believed here that the War Council, scheduled at an early date in Paris, together with Lloyd George's and Painleve's prompt response in Italy's crisis, have a far reaching effect. Not only was this looked for in a military improvement, but it was expected that a closer welding the allies would follow, not only the prosecution of the war, but in more intimate association of political forces. It is now recognized here that German propaganda has played a great part in the political unrest in Italy. Germany probably struck with her army at a time when political troubles in Rome, possibly fomented by German agents, were thought by German propaganda chiefs to have brought the nation ready for peace.

There has been a redoubling of late in all allied nations, of the German propaganda efforts to stir up disaffection between the Entente peoples. Prompt action will be taken to offset this enemy activity.

ENGLISH SPEAKING PRESS DISAPPROVES OF MANIFESTO

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

OTTAWA, Nov. 5. — Satisfaction that Sir Wilfrid Laurier's position on conscription is set forth so clearly is expressed by Government leaders and supporters here to-day. On the other hand Laurier followers declare it will gain their leader many votes. Hon. Sidney Fisher, who is Sir Wilfrid's chief English-speaking supporter in Quebec, was here to-day in consultation with the Opposition leader. Newspaper editorial comment gathered from all parts of Canada indicates almost unanimous a disapproval among the English-speaking press of Sir Wilfrid's manifesto. Notable exceptions were the London Advertiser and the Edmonton Bulletin.

Italian War Office Admits Enemy Has Succeeded in Forcing Cadorna's New Line of Defence and That the Austro German Pressure Against the Northern Wing of the Italian Army Has Been Intensified.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

(By Ed. L. Keen.)

LONDON, November 5.—General Von Mackensen has successfully resumed his great drive into Italy, according to both Rome and Berlin statements to-day. He has crossed the Tagliamento River north of Pinzano, taken 6,000 prisoners (according to the Berlin version) and in the belief of military experts here, is beginning his pretentious operation of attempting to flank the Italians on the right, or east bank of the waterway. The German success of to-day is the first move in what has been expected all along by the Italian strategists. The right wing of the German invading army early in the great drive attained greater momentum than the other section of the front and was consequently in an admirable position to strike in one of Mackensen's favourite maneouvres—the flanking plan.

"North of Pinzano," as mentioned in the Italian official report, means the German-Austrian forces crossed somewhere in the comparatively broken country. The foothills of the Carnic Alps flatten away into the Fruilli Plains at Pinzano and here also the Tagliamento, contrary to its usual course of a sluggish waterway dotted with islands, is confined to a single rather narrow channel. Pinzano is sixteen miles distant from Udine, and there is a bridge at this point.

PETROGRAD, November 5.—In the region of the Black Sea coast the Russians have driven the Turks from their first line and advanced in some places to the third line, the War Office announces. Much booty was captured.

ROME, November 5. — The Germans have crossed the Tagliamento River, the War Office announces. The Austro-German pressure against the Italian northern wing has been intensified.

After their retreat from the Isonzo in consequence of the Austro-German offensive, the Italians took up positions along the west bank of the Tagliamento River which runs across the northeast tip of Italy from the Alps to the sea, and offers a natural line of defense for the plains of Northern Italy. This line is shorter than the old one and apparently was more practicable for defensive purposes, but it is not certain that the Italian Commander-General Cadorna intended to hold it as he may not have had sufficient time to organize it, electing merely to defend it while preparing another line further back.

LONDON, November 5.—In effecting the crossing of the Tagliamento River, says the Berlin War Office report, the Germans captured six thousand prisoners and several guns, and states that the German armies are still pressing westward.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, November 5.—Further details concerning yesterday's raid by London troops in the neighbourhood of Gavrelle show that fourteen prisoners, four machine guns and two trench mortars were captured by us, says to-day's official report from the Franco-Belgian front. In addition a large number of enemy estimated at nearly one hundred were killed and all dugouts in the raided area were destroyed or left in flames. Our casualties were very light. Yesterday evening a party of Sherwood Foresters raided the enemy's trenches northeast of Loos capturing a few prisoners and killing a number of Germans. Our casualties were again light. Hostile reconnoitring parties were dispersed by our fire last night in the neighbourhood of Hollebeke and Reutel.

CHANGE OF SITE IS CONTEMPLATED

LINDSAY, Nov. 5.—A change of site is contemplated for the new Grand Trunk shops, which are to be erected in Lindsay shortly, and with this object in view it is understood that Ald. Thomas Wilkinson at to-night's meeting of the Town Council, will request that the company be allowed to close a portion of town property between Albert and Adelaide Streets.

When first mooted the idea was to erect the new shops in the vicinity of O'Halloran's farm, but it is understood that the new plans place the site further south, and west of the Arsenal, between the Toronto and Midland tracks.

No opposition on the part of the Town Council is expected.

REFERENDUM ON MILITARY SERVICE ACT IS LAURIER'S POLICY

Nanifesto to "The Canadian People" Says That if He is Elected He Will Not Proceed Farther Under Provisions of the Act Until People Have An Opportunity to Pronounce Upon It.

OTTAWA, November 4.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier has issued his manifesto. In a document addressed "To the Canadian People" the Opposition leader declares his policy and outlines his aims.

On the all-important question of participation in the war, Sir Wilfrid claims that "a fundamental objection to the Government's policy of conscription is that is conscripts human life only, and does not attempt to conscript wealth, resources, or the services of any persons other than those who come within the age limit prescribed by the Military Service Act."

The first duty of a Laurier Administration would be "to find the men, money and resources necessary to insure the fullest measure of support to our heroic soldiers at the front, and to enable Canada to continue to the very end to do her splendid part to win the war."

STANDS BY REFERENDUM.

To this Sir Wilfrid adds:

"As to the present Military Service Act, my policy will be not to proceed farther under its provisions until the people have an opportunity to pronounce upon it by way of referendum. I pledge myself forthwith to submit the act to the people, and with my followers to carry out the wishes of the majority of the nation as thus expressed."

As remedies for an economic situation "which is admittedly critical," Sir Wilfrid promises:

TRIBUNALS ARE NOW READY TO BEGIN SITTINGS

Members of the County Bodies Who Will Settle the Fate of Class One Men Met on Saturday and Discussed Working of the Act

519 HAVE REGISTERED

At an informal meeting of the Exemption Tribunal, called by Judge Huycke on Saturday afternoon in the Judge's Chambers, all the 21 members from the City and County were present, also 3 military representatives. Judge Huycke occupied the chair and Magistrate Langley acted as secretary.

The difficulties which will necessarily come up were discussed, and it was decided no definite rules could be established for exemption. Judge Huycke said that there cannot be wholesale exemption. Exemption must be limited and confined to extreme cases. The chief trouble is farm cases, and of this the concensus of opinion was that in the case of an old man and one son working the farm, the son should be left.

In the case of farmers, a number of their sons have returned to the land latterly from positions in stops, offices, etc., scant consideration will be given to their plea for exemption.

Instances of farmers who have been renting or conveying part of their land to sons to help them escape conscription were discussed. Little consideration will be given and such cases will injure the application for exemption.

In the cases of sons of widowed mothers or of old people where the other sons have gone, especially if the others have been killed or wounded, a sympathetic hearing will be given.

Every case will be judged on its own merits and no hard and fast rule can be laid down.

Messrs. O. A. Langley, J. A. Aylmer, J. H. Garbutt, Joshua Smithson and other tribunal members gave brief speeches. Mr. Langley dealt with the powers vested in the tribunal.

The Local Registrations.

That there will be plenty of work for the tribunals is evidenced by the fact that up to 10.30 o'clock this morning no fewer than 405 claims for exemption had been filed at the local post office, and this number will be considerably augmented during the coming week. The reports for service up to the same time to-day numbered twenty-four.

Postmaster Edgar expects a busy six days, as this is the last week in which reports can be made. Saturday is absolutely the last date on which claims for exemption can be made.

DANGEROUSLY WOUNDED.

Pte. Austin Tobin, formerly of the 93rd Battalion.

An official message from Ottawa to-day states that Pte. Austin Tobin, well-known former member of the 93rd Battalion, is officially reported dangerously ill and wounded, suffering from wounds in the forearm and head. Pte. Tobin enlisted here with the 93rd Battalion and went overseas as a member of the machine gun section, afterwards transferring to the 52nd Battalion. The message stated that he was wounded on 31st October. He is one of four brothers who enlisted here, one having been killed and another wounded.

Pte. Woodbeck Dead.

The death of Pte. M. W. Woodbeck, a Lasswade member of the 93rd Battalion, is officially announced by Ottawa to-day. Pte. Woodbeck enlisted in the 93rd in the winter of 1915-16. His death was due to illness. He was originally a member of D Company.

Pte. Stanley Kidd, who has been invalided home from France, arrived in Lakefield a few days ago. Pte. Kidd enlisted in the 93rd Battalion, and went from England to France with another unit. While in France he contracted trench feet and had several toes of his right foot amputated.

UNION GOVERNMENT OR PARTY GOVERNMET?

It is stated that things are in an unsatisfactory condition in Lanark county in regard to selecting Union candidates and in providing a course of action that will take the sting of partizanship out of the patriotism that is needed to help win a victory for a government designed theoretically to win the war.

In Perth the executives of the Liberals and Conservatives got togeether to try to agree on a Union candidate. The endeavour did not thrive; for the Conservative executive wanted too large a share of party profit. It demanded that there should be a pledge on the part of both parties to support the government led by Sir Robert Borden, no matter what its membership might become. Secondly, the Conservative half of the partnership has, with admirable partizan foresight, nominated the returning officer, every poll clerk and every official for the coming election, not one of them being a Liberal.

The Conservative executive also demands that in calling a convention to select a Unionist candidate, the delegates must consist of the two parties in the proportion of five Conservatives and two Liberals, a condition which indicates that the Conservative executive must have based its non-partizan programme upon the Borden government franchise act.

This spirit, which is evidently prevalent throughout the country, is not at all in accord with the idea behind a Union government. Liberal members sacrificed party affiliations and party advantages when they joined the Union government, yet the rank and file of politicians must stand on their party rights. How can we expect the Union government to steer a straight course, and do the right thing, bend, and if necessary, break every interest, including patrizan interest, to winning the war, if it backed in parliament and parliament is to be dominated by the patrizan spirit that helped destroy the usefulness of the old government. The Borden government had not quite done the best thing because it was hampered and tied hand and food by partizanship. Hon. General Mewburn, Minister of Militia, declared at Hamilton on Friday, that he found the conditions in the Militia Department unsatisfactory, conditions brought about as was shown by another member of the Union cabinet, Hon. Frank Carvell, by the patronage system that was, in turn, due to partizanship predominance — it led to "waste of money and inefficiency." And efficiency is what we want in the Union government. If we get that we must keep party out of the Union government, and party out of nominations of Union government candidates.

The president of the Greater Toronto, Labour Party, says thta the Union government is not a whit better than the Borden government. Sour grapes; the Labour party is not represented in the Union government.

THE VICTORY LOAN.

While we seem, so far, to be making considerable of a mess of winning the war by political means, we hope there will be no division of opinion or so much scramble for party advantage, in doing our share of winning the war by means of Lloyd George's "silver bullet" expressed in the terms of the Victory Loan to be launched in a few days, and for which the "ways" are now being soaped. We are "bucking up" splendidly in the matter of Canadian and British Red Cross contributions. But there is a difference bbetween them and the Victory Loan. Red Cross gifts are pure patriotic surrender and sacrifice. We get no dividends except the joy in our hearts that we have helped heal the wounds, alleviate the sufferings and helped bring back to health and fighting form our soldiers who are spending their strength for us.

In the case of the Victory Loan, even if we pinch ourselves to subscribe to it we get wel paid for it; we are making a gilt-edged investment—the security, the resources and existence of Canada—and we shall get a liberal dividend, between five and a half and six per cent. interest. The matter of return should decide those who want good earning for their money, with undoubted security. And there is another appeal far stronger than appeal to our selfishness, the need of the country and the cause for the money. We must have money above all things, no matter whether parties rise or fall, to help us do our full share in helping win the war.

The demand of one hundred and fifty millions seems to be a large order for seven and a half million people; but we are richer than we think we are. We have had a period of unexampled demand for employment at high wages. An immense amount of money has been distributed in providing munitions and other supplies; and what hasn't been locked up in the pockets of the profiteers, has passed into the hands of the people. Those of the people who have not wasted their wages in riotous living, must have money in store. There never was a time when money was more popularly plentiful than at present, there never was a time when the mass of the people was more able to take a hand in a big war loan.

Then we have a good deal of money stowed away in the banks. In two years, from 1915 to 1917, the deposits in Canadian savings banks increased by 135 million dollars. The actual cash deposits in Canadian banks in 1915 was 1,198 millions of dollars. In 1917 this amount had grown to 1,598 million dollars. In other words, Canada's bank deposits have increased 400 million dolairs in two years. If the war has helped us to add 400 millions or 200 millions a year to our "pile," certainly Canada is able with a proper display of patriotism, to make short work of the Victory Loan. We can subscribe it from our added deposits of 400 millions in the past two years and leave a nice little nest egg of 250 millions on deposit. The Victory Loan, fully subscribed, will absorb only a little more than a third of the wealth Canadians have been able to put by in the last two years of the war. Think the matter over a little and let every oen who is able, and millions should be able, to invest in the Victory Loan, the best way we home-stayers can back up the fight our soldiers are making on the battle front.

Never mind how the politicians fight for personal or party gain; let us fight for Canada and the Empire and humanity by furnishing the sinews of war, 150 millions strong.

Sir Sam Hughes is not guilty of the early election roorback that German gold to to be used to defeat the Union government.

PERMITTED TREASON.

We have nothing but praise for, and we find words too weak to express our admiration of, the splendid fighting our Canadian soldiers are making in France and Flanders. They are putting their patriotism into practice, while one is disgusted with the measure in which our patriotism is finding expression in playing the sordid game of political advantage. We have got what we are asked to call a union, non-partizan, win-the-war government. It is appealing to the country for approval, for authority to give effect to its aim and policy. Yet we find among many politicians, who are exceedingly enthusiastic in the abstract, for a win-the-war government, in practice playing the game in the interests of party politics. A considerable section of the Unionist press continues its abuse of its old-time political opponents, contrary to the spirit of harmony a union government is held to represent. Party candidates, the nominees of party conventions, cling to their nominations and refuse to give an inch in order to bring about compromise nominations that would include the support of both parties for a win the war government. Instead of the Union government allaying partizan spirit it is in some cases intensifying it. We see in Conservative journals, cartoons representing the out-cropping of a vicious partizanship. We see a typical one in the Toronto News and Ottawa-Journal-Prass, aiming to show that German gold is to be used to defeat the Union government. This is absurdly unjust and gratuitous contribution to the destruction of the spirit of harmony. There is not in Canada, any class of thinkers or any section of citizenship that is not heart and soul desirous of Canada doing her best to win this war—the only difference of opinion is as to the best ways and means. There is, however, one section or clique of thinkers that are actively and viciously antagonizing Canada's spirit of war interest. That is the same clique that has been doing the same sort of work in Quebec the last half dozen years, and actively encouraged and officially rewarded by the Borden Government. And the Union Government is encouraging the same anti-British, anti-war propaganda. The Union government embraces in its personnel two of the most conspicuous representatives of Nationalism. And the Union Government seems to have a tender regard for Nationalism still. Henri Bourassa in his paper, Le Devoir, is permitted to print the most outrageous treason, the most villainous appeals against Canada going anything to help win the war, a continuation of the campaign the Borden Government has not only winked at, but encouraged and rewarded by giving office to its chief heads. The Union Government pays no heed. It lets Bourassa spout treason and hostility to Canadian war participation in Ie Devoir with its daily circulation of between 20,000 and 30,000. We cannot understand why the Union Government allows this outrageous preachment of treason, unless the protection the Borden Government extended to Nationalism as an agency to "kill Laurier" has been carried into the Union Govehnment. The Borden Government "shut up" a Soo newspaper because it criticized the government's administration. Now we have preached in Montreal the villainous doctrine of opposition to Canada's war work, and it is permitted. The Union Government may think it would be too dractic, too destructive of harmony, too antagonistic to recruiting in Quebec to put Bourassa and his mouthpiece out of business. But the Union Government has no scruples in taking advantage of a disfranchising franchise act designed to handicap its political opponents and give unfair advantage, conceived and enacted in the vilest spirit of partizanship.

Many persons think they are justified in thinking that the Union Government is a locum tenens — keeping the place warm — for the Borden Government.

"IFS"---AND THE VICTORY LOAN

If you, Mr. Citizen, had a debt of Fifty Dollars coming due a few weeks from now, and

If you, Mr. Citizen, lost the Fifty Dollars which you had on hand to discharge that debt, and

If you, Mr. Citizen, knew that the safety of your home and Mrs. Citizen and of all the Little Citizens would be imperilled if the debt were not paid—

Wouldn't you scrape up another Fifty Dollars somewhere and PAY THAT DEBT?

Of course you would. And the point is that you can raise at least a moderate sum if the need is urgent enough. Then see here.

Your country needs money; not merely wants money—needs it, must have it. It needs it to finance the purchases of munitions which the Allies are making in Canada, the munitions which afford work to thousands of Canadians and which are required in ever-increasing quantities if victory is to be won. It needs it for many other purposes in connection with the war, and remember: Upon the winning of this war depends the safety of your home and of Mrs. Citizen and of all the Little Citizens.

Mr. Citizen, your country needs money and it comes to you. It does not ask you to give; it merely asks you to lend, and it will pay you handsome interest. Canada is issuing in a week or two what is called a Victory Loan—$150,000,000 to make victory sure. $150,000,000 to be taken up by the plain people of this Dominion. You are one of them.

You could raise Fifty Dollars to pay an urgent debt of your own, perhaps many Fifties. Then you can raise them to pay the urgent debt of Canada, her debt to the cause of civilization, to the salvation of mankind. Think about it. Don't think—act. Lay by the money. Get it somehow. Be ready to subscribe to Canada's Victory Loan.

MILITARY CROSS FOR LIEUT. MACKENZIE OF BANK OF COMMERCE

Lieut. T. P. Mackenzie, formerly of the Peterborough branch of the bank of Commerce, and a son-in-law of Sheriff Hall, has been decorated with the Military Cross and promoted to a captaincy for conspicuous work in keeping up connections in the Canadian offensive on October 15th. Captain Mackenzie has been with the Staff Signalling Corps. He enlisted in Toronto with the 123rd Battalion, and has seen considerable service at the front. He is the son of David Mackenzie, city engineer of Dunfermline, Scotland. Capt. Mackenzie won many friends in Peterborough, who will be delighted to hear of his splendid success.

LINDSAY CITIZEN CHANGED HIS MIND WHEN TOLD OF CLOSENESS OF HARBOUR.

On Monday a 23-year-old resident of Lindsay presented a passport to the immigration officer at Cobourg, asking permission to cross to Rochester on the ferry. The passport was filled in, but lacked the proper stamp of the immigration officer at Lindsay. His medical examination certificate, also the required permission of the O. C. of this military district to visit in United States was also lacking. Without these necessary documents the young man was informed he could not leave Canada. At first he stoutly denied wishing to evade the Military Service Act, but on being informed his passport would not be returned to him, but sent to Ottawa for investigation, he vehemently declared he would commit suicide rather than go to war. When he was politely informed the harbour, with twenty feet of water, wherein he could carry out his direful threat, was close by, he changed his mind, and decided he would return to Lindsay and take chances on getting exempted. The harbour was sure death — with the exemption board he had a fighting chance.

MEDICATED WINES BANNED.

List of Those Which Cannot be Sold Without Prescription.

Licence inspectors have been instructed by the Provincial Board to notify all druggists in their districts that the sale of Wilson's Invalid Port Wine, Hall's Wine, Dr. Emerson's Invalid Port, Peavoy's Port Wine, Monikess Port Wine, Puritan Port Wine, Dr. Kilborn's Invalid Port Wine, Dr. Coventry's Invalid Port Wine, St. Francis' Invalid Port Wine and Vin. St. Michel as at present manufactured are a contravention of the Ontario Temperance Act. The instructions follow an analysis of the wines by the department, which is of the opinion that the only way these brands can be sold is on a doctor's certificate and in quantities not to exceed six ounces at one time. Should the sale be persisted in the inspectors are told to take samples and send them to the department, when instructions will be issued as to laying information and prosecuting. Other brands, it is expected, will be included in the list within a few days as samples are analyzed.

The Board has been notified that Monikess, Puritan, Dr. Kilborn, Dr. Coventry's, St. Francis', and Peavoy's are no longer being sold by the manufacturers, and that the makers of Gordon's Health Wine have not only stopped selling, but have also recalled that already sold to dealers, and are supplying only an unfermented wine which they claim contains less than 2 1-2 per cent. of proof spirits, under a similar brand.

OPERATIONS IN RHODESA

On March 10th of this year the High Commissioner for South Africa furnished a report on military affairs in Rhodesia, and the operations of the Rhodesian Forces from the outbreak of war to the end of 1916.

The report deals firstly with operations in the West. These were directed mainly to prevent a possible hostile incursion from German South West Africa, an event, which happily did not materialize.

On the North-Eastern border the report chronicles many sharp actions during the autumn of 1914 in the neighbourhood of the Abercorn and Fife posts. These posts received much needed reinforcements, including a Belgian battalion in December. A considerable amount of fighting took place the following spring and summer.

"In the course of March, April, May and June, 1915, a number of small engagements took place. In one of these Lieutenant Stannus Irvine of the Northern Rhodesia Rifles, was mortally wounded while gallantly leadi r a successful attack on a stockaded position. On another occasion the enemy attacked a patrol of Belgians and Rhodesia police with great determination but were eventually driven off after an engagement lasting about two hours. Sous-officier Verschueren behaved with great gallantry. He refused to leave the firing line, although twice wounded, and finally he was killed. His body was carried out of action by Senior Sergeant Boraiz, of the Belgian Forces, and Sergeant Wambera of the Northern Rhodesia Police. Both of these men showed conspicuous bravery, and Sergeant Borazi was wounded."

The fighting culminated in the attack on Saisi in July, by a strong force of enemy Europeans, native troops and Arabs.

"The attacking force, which was under the command of General Wehle, is believed to have been composed of the 18th, 23rd, 24th and 69th Field Companies, four other companies, and the Tabora and Rukwe contingents of 400 Europeans and 200 Arabs. A German field company, when up to strength, consists of 10 officers, 10 volunteers, and 200 Askari. The strength of the garrison was 470 Rhodesian and Belgian native troops, with 19 Europeans. The garrison had but little food, and depended for water upon supplies obtained at night under fire and between pickets from the river.

On the 31st July a Parlementaire arrived from the German lines with a white flag and a letter inquiring whether the Commandant was prepared to consider terms of surrender. Major O'Sullivan's reply was an emphatic negative.

The total number of casualties sustained by the garrison was nineteen, all natives including five soldiers and four carriers killed, and one native servant who died of wounds A relief party under Major de Koninck, which attempted unsuccessfully to get into touch with the garrison, lost five native soldiers killed, ten wounded and three missing. Major O'Sullivan estimates that of the enemy, at least forty Europeans and from fifty to sixty Askari and Arabs were killed. About 210 shells and at least 90,000 rounds of ammunition are reported to have been fired by the enemy. It is believed that one German gun and one Maxim were put out of action. The Belgian troops rendered most valuable assistance."

After this repulse there was comparative inactivity on the North Eastern border. Early in 1916, Brigadier-General Northey assumed command of the Rhodesian and Nyasaland Forces. On his arrival operations on the border, which had hitherto been necessarily of a defensive character, entered upon a new phase which is not yet concluded.

"The maintenance of supplies and transport for the troops on the border was throughout a most difficult and onerous task. From 1st April to 31st December, 1915, 20,000 carriers were employed in carrying over 1,000,000 lbs. of supplies from distant bases and an additional 50,000 in bringing grain from adjacent districts. But for the indefatigable efforts of the District Officials a break down would have been inevitable."

The report then deals with the Naval operations on Lake Tanganyika.

"In April, 1915, a scheme was approved by the Admiralty for depriving the Germans of the command which they had hitherto held, by means of three small armed vessels, on Lake Tanganyika. The plan was to send out from England to Cape Town, and thence by rail, road and river to the Lake, two motor-boats of a speed and armament which would outclass those of the German vessels. The two boats, with a small Expeditionary Force under the command of Commander G. Spicer Simson, R.N., arrived at Cape Town towards the end of June. By December 23rd the "Mimi" and the "Toutou," as the boats were named, had been successfully launched on the Lake, and three days later the first action was fought.

Notwithstanding the precautions that were taken to keep the expedition a secret, it is difficult to believe that the enemy received no warning of its despatch. They probably heard of it, but refused to take it seriously. And certainly it must have seemed to them at first sight a harebrained enterprise. After being landed at Cape Town the boats had to be taken 2300 miles by train, via Bulawyo and Livingstone, to rail-head north of Elizabethville in the Belgian Congo. Next followed 150 miles of haulage by atrocious roads, over country varying in altitude from 2,000 to 6,000 feet. Then another journey on trucks over a short section of railway. Then the boats were floated 400 miles down the Lualaba River under their own power for part of the journey, and for the rest on lighters. Shoals and rocks abounded, and barrels had to be lashed under the boats to reduce their draught. The final stage of the journey was by rail again to the small Belgian harbour of Lukuga, about half-way up the western shore of the Lake.

The first encounter with the enemy took place on December 26th. At 9 a.m. the German gunboat 'Kingani,' a vessel of 30 or 40 tons armed with one gun, was sighted about seven miles distant from Lukuga steaming south, and the "Mimi" and the "Toutou" immediately set out to attack her. The enemy having no gun aft, the "Mimi" attacked her from astern, and, having got the range, opened with high explosive shell from her three-pounder Hotchkiss. The first shell struck the "Kingani's" gun shield, killing the two men at th egun and the Captain. After a few more shots the remainder of the crew surrendered, and the "Kingani" was taken into harbour in a sinking condition. She was soon repaired. A 12-pounder gun was mounted on her, and, as H.M.S. "Fifi" she proved a valuable addition to the British flotilla.

This left the enemy with two ships the "Graf von Gotzen," a vessel of 400,500 tons, carrying one 4-inch and two smaller guns, and the "Hedwig von Wissman," a gunboat of about the same size as the captured one. On February 9th, 1916, the "Hedwig von Wissman" was attacked by the "Fifi," and "Mimi," and sunk after a chase and running fight which lasted for three hours. The result was largely due to the skillful manoeuvring of the two British vessels. The "Mimi" kept astern of the enemy and out of range of his after gun, causing him to tack from side to side in order to bring his foremost gun to bear, and thus delaying him until the "Fifi could get within range. Finally a high explosive shell from the "Fifi" destroyed the enemy's engines. Before she sank, the Germans abandoned their ship, and all except two Europeans and three natives, who had been killed, were picked up by the "Fifi" and "Mimi."

It would have been satisfactory if the third and largest of the German ships could have been accounted for by the British flotilla, but she did not risk an engagement. After being bombed by a Belgian aeroplane, she was scuttled by the Germans in Kigoma harbour, on the eastern shore of the Lake.

So ended Germany's command of Tanganyika. Apart from the material loss inflicted on the enemy, the success of the naval expedition did much to enhance British prestige among the natives, not only in the immedite neighbourhood of the lake but in the northern districts of Rhodesia and in adjacent German territory. The German supremacy of the lake had for years been recognized as an established fact, and its total destruction within a few months of the arrival of the expedition afforded opportune and striking evidence of British power."

The fourth part of the report deals with the general situation in Rhodesia, and with the raising of two white battalions for Imperial service. Both fought with great credit, the first under General Botha in South West Africa, and the second in the campaign in German East Africa.

The report summarizes the effect of Rhodesia as follows:

"It was a remarkable achievement in the circumstances for Rhodesia, within nine months of the outbreak of hostilities, to have secured its borders against invasion and, in addition, to have furnished two regiments of European infantry for service in distant fields. Including those wh awent to England independently to offer their services it may safely be stated that by the middle of 1916 not less than 40 per cent. of the adult male white population were on active service in some part of Africa or Europe.

There was no night session of the Medical Board on Saturday, which accounts for the smaller number of men examined. At Saturday afternoon's session there were eighteen examined, of which eleven were placed in A category, four in B category and three were rejected. This morning's session showed a total of thirteen A men out of twenty-one examined. The Board is now in its sixth week.

Officers And Committees For Victory Loan

Peterborough County Organization All But Completed in Preparation For the Big Campaign

The local organization for Canada's Victory Loan campaign which opens on November 12th is practically complete. Honorary, publicity and industrial committees have been appointed and seventeen of the estimated twenty team captains have been selected. In this campaign the city and county are united on a county basis, a fact that should not be overlooked by rural residents who have been inquiring about the city's plans. It is expected that a public meeting will be held here on Friday night to introduce the campaign to Peterborough and set it rolling toward this county's allotment.

BOARD NAMED FOR PETERBORO

OTTAWA, Nov. 5.—Voters' Registration Boards have been appointed for Ontario. These boards will hear appeals from the decisions of enumerators in cities and towns which had a population of 9,000 or more last census. The Peterborough appointees are as follows:

Peterborough—County Judge E. C. S. Huycke, Local Registrar G. J. Sherry, Sheriff J. M. Hall, Clerk of the Peace G. W. Hatton, Registrar of Deeds B. Morrow—all of Peterborough.

JUDGE HUYCKE GAVE JUDGMENT IN SHERWOOD CASE

His Honour Judge Huycke gave judgment to-day in an interesting case brought some time ago by Frederick Sherwood against Richard Sheehy, in which the plaintiff claimed about $3,000 damages as a result of an alleged breach of an agreement to loan the sum of $2,000 for building purposes.

The agreement was made in February, 1914, and the sum of $200 was then advanced. Later on, in or about the month of May, the plaintiff asked for the balance of the moneys, but owing to the scarcity of money, the defendant was unable to carry out his agreement. As a result of this the plaintiff was unable to proceed with the erection of the buildings contemplated by him, and last summer brought an action for the above damages.

After the action was brought the defendant paid into Court the sum of $25.00 in full satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, and this being unaccepted, the case proceeded to trial.

The Judgment.

In the judgment handed out to-day by His Honour Judge Huycke, it is held that the damages as claimed by the plaintiff are too remote, and the only damages to which the plaintiff is enitled, if any, is the difference between the interest agreed to be paid, and the current rate of interest; and it having been proved at the trial that the current rate of interest was no greater than the rate agreed to have been paid, the Judge allowed only nominal damages, and also any costs the plaintiff might have been put to in obtaining the money elsewhere. These the Judge fixed altogether at the sum of $25, the sum which had been paid into Court at the commencement of the suit.

Mr. J. G. Guise-Bagley appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. J. R. Corkery for the defendant.

THE WEEK ON THE BRITISH FRONT

Incidents of the Fighting

A week of brilliant victory on the Flanders front has been made less cheery than it would otherwise have been by bad weather. The British have won very valuable ground from the Germans, but as one soldier humorously complained: "It's very muddy ground to fight for."

(A significant development of the week has been the evidence of a growing respect among the Germans for the British troops. Opposed to the British front now are the picked troops of Germany, and these veterans with experience of many sectors of several fronts, have come at last to feel a wholesome respect for the British infantry. A letter found on a German soldier said) on the Flanders battle-front a few days ago: "He (the Englishman) is a worthy enemy and superior in every way. The artillery continue night and day without cessation. The air service is simply splendid; their aeroplanes shoot at us in the shell holes from a height of thirty to forty metres. The English will soon have Hindenburg by a ring through the nose."

(Another interesting document found in a Flanders trench has) a battalion order of the 212th Reserve Infantry Regiment which said (inter alia) "Previous experience shows that the English respect the Red Cross flag. It will therefore be used as much as possible so that the wounded can be evacuated whenever there is a pause in the fighting."

(This admission from the Germans who themselves deliberately sank several hospital ships, and have killed many British wounded, is worthy of preservation among the archives of the war.)

German Morale.

The morale of the German army, stil quite creditably good, in view of the hammering it is getting, yet shows some sign of breaking down. Following our surprise attack on Broodseinde a correspondent on the spot recorded that: "Utter confusion existed in the German lines. The infantry of the Guard wandered into the territory of other units. Regiments overlapped and were split up. You can imagine the scene of chaos behind the enemy's line, where the staff in charge of this elaborate attack suddenly found their entire organization of battle crumpled and scattered by this thunderbolt. Apparently they had not expected another British attack for two or three days."

There were, during the week, some fine incidents of individual heroism, and of that good-humoured stubbornness which is especially characteristic of the English soldier. A French correspondent with the British Army sent the following striking little record, well worth preserving:

"The following deed of heroism was performed by a non-commissioned officer who was serving a machine-gun. In the thick of the engagement he rushed up a hillock seventy or eighty feet high outside Poolcappelo and began to spray with his machine-gun a group of the enemy, about 30 strong, who were keeping up sweeping volleys of fire against the slopes of the rise. Three of his companions crawled from hole to hole, bringing him fresh supplies of ammunition for his machine gun. He quickly wrecked the hostile advanced post, and the surprised German could not believe that a single man could thus have held them in check. A dense fog added to their bewilderment and fear, and one of them declared that he saw a tank standing behind the hill. The others hastened to accept this fable, and suddenly 2 Germans were seen to raise their arms and crying out "Kamerad!" to surrender to the non-commissioned officer, who, in order to bring in his prisoners, had to summon the assistance of another English section, about 60 strong, commanded by four officers, who had attained their objectives earlier in the battle.

"A detachment of the advance guard, whose share in the battle was over, became bored by the inaction, and the officers asked their men whether they were not curious to know what was happening further on. They entered Passchendaele, cleared out the western boundary of the ruined hamlet, held up two forts for machine-guns, with their garrisons, and maintained this position for nearly an hour, during which time they broke up a furious attack by a Bavarian battalion. A liaison officer ran to inform the brigade of this unexpected success. A great piece of work had been done, he said, so why throw away such a chance? Orders, however, were given to the last surviving officer and his handful of men to leave the village and take up a position a short distance from the ruins. It was thus that before Passchendaele the advance exceeded for a time its objective.

Tree Fighters.

In the attack on Passchendaele the English troops encounterd tree fighters. Many copses among the fields around Passchendaele suffered less from shell fire than those in the region nearer our original front. Evidently mistrusting "pill-boxes" as much as craters, the Hun utilized these elevated positions wherever the trunks were strong enough to support a gun crew on a narrow platform. Brisk fire was maintained from them. Yet nowhere on the curving line of khaki that went forward deliberately across the craters was any serious impression made. Our own machine guns and Lewis guns soon cleared the trees. "Good work shooting," one officer commented as a little copse sprinkled with three fighters surrendered after several had been tumbled down.

The German government by its wireless is spreading wonderful stories of the number of prisoners the German Army has taken during the recent fighting. As a matter of truth it is very rarely that the German gets prisoners from the British nowdays, though they are desperately anxious to get them in the hope of obtaining information.

Captured German documents show this clearly. Here is a recently captured order of the Fifteenth Bavarian Reserve Infantry Regiment, dated last month, "Since, according to reports from the division, the disposition of the enemy in front are uncertain, it is absolutely necessary to obtain identifications at once. Every night strong patrols must be sent forward. Non-commissioned officers and men are to be advised that all men participating in patrol enterprises (for which, if possible, only volunteers are to be selected) will receive fourteen days' leave when the regiment is relieved. For every living prisoner I will give twenty-five marks (£1. 5s.) and for every dead man of his identification badges ten marks (10s.). In addition, everyone can be assured that in every case of brave, spirited conduct, I will procure an Iron Cross at the first class for them."

The price for British prisoners apparently varies. Thus a battalion order of the 236th Division, dated September 25 says: "It is extremely important to the Higher Command that prisoners should be taken without delay. From September 25 to September 27 fifty marks (£2. 10s.) will be allowed by regimental headquarters for every prisoner taken."

It is no doubt a galling reflection for the leaders of the German Army that during the whole course of the war they have only been able to capture from the "contemptible little army" of Britain about one-third of the number of prisoners that that army has captured from them; also that during the first nine months of 1917 alone, the British captured four times as many guns from the Germans as the Germans have taken from them since the day the war begun.

FACE COVERED WITH PIMPLES

ASHAMED TO GO OUT

Many an otherwise beautiful and attractive face is sadly marred by unsightly pimples, blotches, flesh worms and various other blood diseases.

Their presence is a source of embarrassment to those afflicted as well as pain and regret to their friends.

Many a cheek and brow cast in the mould of beauty have been sadly defaced, their attractiveness lost and their possessor rendered unhappy for years.

Why, then, consent to rest under this cloud of embarrassment?

There is an effectual remedy for all these defects.

It is Burdock Blood Bitters. This remedy will drive out all the impurities from the blood and leave the complexion healthy and clear.

Mrs. Katherine Henry, Port Sydney, Ont., writes: "Two years ago my face was so covered with pimples I was ashamed to go out at all. I tried several remedies, but they were of no use. At last a friend advised me to try Burdock Blood Bitters. I got a bottle, and by the time it was used I could see a difference. I then got two more, and when I had used them the pimples were completely gone. I can highly recommend B.B.B."

PHOTOGRAPHS WANTED OF CANADA'S SOLDIERS

Officer in Charge of Canadian War Records to Compile a Complete History in Photograph of the Canadians' Share in the War

The Officer i/c Canadian War Records has asked The Examiner to make known that it is desired to compile a complete history in photograph of the Canadians' share in the War, in the same way that all other belligerent countries are compiling similar records.

It is particularly desired to obtain photographs of all Officers, N.C.O.'s and Men who have served or serving in the Overseas Military Forces of Canada, and it is requested that an appeal should be made to this end through these columns.

All Officers and other ranks serving overseas may find it difficult to send in their photographs, and their relatives are therefore especially appealed to, to send in their photographs for them.

By preference the photographs should be unmounted and printed on bromide paper in order to ensure permanence. Each photograph should be accompanied by a concise record, not exceeding two or three hundred words, of the subject's military career, including date of enlistment, promotions, distinctions and so on, as this will greatly assist in obtaining a full and accurate record of all concerned.

In addition it is desired to collect all photographs dealing with the mobilization, training and departure of troops together with pictures illustrating reviews, sports, presentations, etc. Any photograph of this nature is regarded as a document of historical importance, and it is hoped that the possessors of all such photographs will deem it their duty to send either the originals or copies, which will be ultimately placed in the permanent Public Archives of the Dominion. They should be sent to the office in charge of Canadian War Records, 14 Clifford St., London, W. England.

Mrs. Green Gains Twenty Pounds

Was Almost Nervous Wreck When She Began Taking Tanlac

"I have actually gained twenty pounds by taking Tanlac, and my friends and neighbours seem amazed at the wonderful change in my condition," was the remarkable statement made by Mrs. William Greene at 141 Hunter Street, Hamilton, recently. Mrs. Green has lived in Hamilton and vicinity all her life, and has a wide circle of friends who rejoice with her over the return of her health.

"I had suffered from stomach trouble until I was almost a nervous wreck," continued Mrs. Green. "For two solid years I was unable to do one thing about the house, and my stomach became so upset that I couldn't retain the medicines prescribed for me. For four months, about the only thing I could eat was milk and eggs. I was so weak I could hardly walk from one chair to another, and for months I don't suppose I slept more than two hours a night. I spent eleven months under two specialists, who finally said they could do me no good. My case seemed hopeless, an operation failed to help me, and I was told that nothing more could be done for me.

"Of course, I was discouraged, despondent, and almost hopeless, and now it seems hard for me to believe myself what a wonderful change has come over me since I began taking Tanlac. If anyone could feel like a new person, I do, and when I told one of the physicians who treated me what I was taking, he said it certainly had done me a lot of good, and advised to keep it up. I have a splendid appetite now, and nothing I eat gives me any trouble. My nerves are in good shape, and I can sleep all night and on until nine o'clock in the morning. I can do almost everything there is to do about the house now, all my despondent feelings are gone, and everything seems so different. I am now on my fourth bottle of Tanlac, and can heartily recommend it to everybody."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by Warne Drug Co., Ltd., in Havelock by A. C. Denike.

SOCIAL EVENT WAS A SUCCESS

Over Two Hundred People Attended the Tea Given by the Peter Robinson Chapter I.O.D.E.

Quite the highest and most successful social event of this season was the "dansant" and tea given by the Peter Robinson Chapter I.O.D.E on Saturday afternoon at the Empress. From four until well after six the grill and dining room, which the Empress management with its customary generosity had turned over to the Chapter, were thronged with over two hundred guests.

In the dining room about seventy of the young people enjoyed the perfect music gratuitously supplied by Mr. Asa Huycke and Mr. Fitzgerald, and the young people were loath to leave when the time to break up came.

Tea Room.

In the tea room the assistants, Mrs. Fred Hooper, the Misses Vera Knox, Stella Knox, Georgie Stevenson, Jessie Spence, Robina Cummings, Geraldine Hooper, Marian Harstone, Madge Graham, Margery Hatton, Marian Grieve, Maisie Armstrong, Margaret Eastwood and Seabourne Hamilton, all daintily clad in white dresses and wearing boudoir caps, carried out the colour scheme of black and white in their costumes. Some of those who came in to tea and the dance were: Mrs. Aylmer, Mrs. Suckling, Mrs. W. H. Bradburn, Mrs. A. Elliott, Mrs. (Dr.) Eastwood, Mr. and Mrs. A. Spence, Mrs. A. H. Stratton, Captain and Mrs. H. D. Robertson, Mrs. Birks, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Gladman, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Roy, Mrs. W. A. Sanderson, Mrs. John Birnie, Miss Florence Scott, Miss Peggy Eaton, New York, Miss Grace Vining, Toronto, Miss M. Mill, Miss Stuart, Hamilton, Lieuts. W. Eastwood, Dick, Cunningham and Lowrie, Ottawa, Miss Gladys Mulholland, Mrs. E. Warne, Mrs. Elston, Mrs. McElderry, Miss D. Aylmer, Miss F. Eastwood, Toronto, Mr. Rhind, Miss Dorothy Hill, Miss Aletha Davidson, Mr. MacLaren, Mr. Ritchie, Miss Mabel Patterson, Miss Jessie Cressman, Mrs. MacDiarmid, Captain Woolcombe, Ottawa, Mr. Charles Kingan, Mrs. Gordon Miller, Seattle, Miss Pearl Burnham, Lieut. McNab, Miss E. Collins, Prof. Neville, Miss G. Reinhart and Mrs. Gillman.

The Chapter cleared $48 from the afternoon, which will be devoted to the support of several prisoners of war.

Special Services At St. John's

Venerable Archdeacon Beamish Conducted the Dedication Festival Services

The Venerable Archdeacon Beamish of Bellevelle, conducted special services in St. John's Church yesterday. The occasion was the annual dedication festival. At the morning service appropriate references were made to the members of the church who have met death overseas. At the evening service Archdeacon Beamish took for his text Genesis 28:16, and 17th verses; "And Jacob awaked out of his sleep, and he said, Surely the Lord is in this place; and I knew it not."

"And he was afraid, and said, How dreadful is this place! This is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven."

Jacob's Ladder.

The speaker recalled a well known artist's representation of Jacob's ladder and the gratitude and faith that was portrayed in the upturned face of the dreamer. "Gratitude should characterize the the annual dedication festival," said the speaker. "Thanksgiving is a divine necessity to keep alive within us a true appreciation of God's mercies. The faith which we speak of is not a mere bible thing, but something which makes possible our spiritual progress and is a divine power coming straight from God. Jacob had much to regret when he started out in life. He could not fail to remember how he had cheated his brother of his birthright. In every heart of every man and woman there exists regret for miss-spent time. In your introspective moments you realize that you have made bad use of your time.

"Jacob's ladder was the first intimation we have in the Bible of communion with heaven and earth. The ladder reached unto heaven and it was there that Jacob saw the angels of God ascending and descending. Each of you have a birthright. Hold fast and keep it for it is your life. A personal relation with a personal God is the very essence of religion. If you have God out of your life you can have only a semblance of religion without life and without enthusiasm. Too many of us say our prayers and do not mean them."

The Music.

The music for the Festival was suitable for the twofold objectives of the day. The morning celebration was distinctly a service within the octave of "All Saints"; the hymns, "The Saints of God" and "For All the Saints," were sung, and the hymn "The Church's One Foundation," was used in connection with the corporate parochial communion. The service was solemnly reverent, and after the reading out of the names of the soldiers from the congregation who had made the supreme sacrifice, the choir sang the anthem, "God shall wipe away all tears."

Choral evensong rang with the these of the anniversary of the Dedication, in Psalms, hymns, prayers, and sermont. Mr. W. H Hutchinson sang effectively, the solo "Be Thou Faithful Unto Death" (St. Paul), and the anthem was "There are they which came out of great tribulation." The work of the choristers was splendid, and called forth a well deserved tribute from Archdeacon Beamish after evensong.

ADDRESSES OF MEN OVERSEAS ARE WANTED

THE CHURCH'S DUTY TO MAKE DEMOCRACY SAFE FOR WORLD

Rev. Dr. Gandier at Knox and St. Paul's Churches Yesterday—Made Strong Appeal For Greater Missionary Endeavour —War Has Not Closed the Door to Foreign Field.

MEN AND MONEY NEEDED

"The Church must make democracy safe for the world," was one of the arresting statements of Rev. Dr. Gandier, principal of Knox College, Toronto, in his sermon at Knox Church last night, in which he unfolded, in a comprehensive review of the imperative needs and the urgent opportunities of present day missionary enterprise, a clear and impressive picture of the general conditions and prospects in the home and foreign mission fields. Dr. Gandier's text was strikingly appropriate to his subject, as follows: "For the weapons of our warfare are carnal but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds" 2nd Corinthians 10:4, and "They overcame him by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of their testimony and they loved not their lives unto death."

Canada has been fortunate in its immigration of Christian people from Great Britain and the United States, but there have also been many Chinese, Japanese, Hindus, Jews and hundreds of thousands from the southeast of Europe. For these strangers are needed not only professional missionaries, but a Christian people to surround them with the spirit of Jesus Christ that they may be won to Christ, the church and good citizenship. In this influence each person must assume his share and cannot throw the responsibility on any one else. But the great multitude of the people who need Christ the most are beyond the personal touch of the vast majority of our church members. They are in the slums of the cities, in the cold north country, on the prairies, in the mining, lumbering and construction camps, where they live together in settlements.

"To reach these people we must have young men and women who will devote their lives to this service," Dr. Gandier said, "to go where they are as missionaries, teachers, nurses, settlement workers."

Some of the best educated men and women have given themselves to this work and if they are prepared to offer their lives, the least the church members at home could do was to contribute money for their support and the advancement of the cause for which they were making so great a sacrifice.

The pioneer settlers of Ontario were Godly men and women who in their poverty and early struggles planted the church and school securely in their midst; but there are many coming into Canada to-day who are quite willing to live without the church. They have no imperative love for God, and unless we provide Christian institutions among them today it will not be long before we have a Godless, churchless, reckless community.

"You must invest something in this work," Dr. Gandier declared. "You must take it seriously. The future of the Dominion depends on the men who will be faithful to this duty."

Foreign Missions.

President Wilson's pronouncement that the world must be made safe for democracy was quoted by Dr. Gandier who elaborated the idea by stating that the Church must make democracy safe for the world. There remains to-day two-thirds of the human race who do not know Jesus Christ, and who are ignorant of His sacrifice. Christendom and heathendom are coming into touch as never before.

The great Oriental peoples are beginning to learn for the first time in history by means of the telegraph, newspapers and other modern facilities of communication. Dr. Gandier mentioned a new practice in Central India where whole villages of ignorant uneducated people employ a boy to read for them the newspapers they now receive. They see all the great Christian nations locked in a deadly struggle killing millions of their fellowmen who were declared to be made in the image of God.

"The Christian religion must come to them and the Presbyterian church is responsible for fifteen millions in Honan, Korea, South China, and in the islands of the sea. They depend absolutely on us for the knowledge of God's love."

Dr. Gandier extolled the loyalty of India and added that the expenditure of a few millions of dollars in India by the Christian people had saved the Empire billions and held its eastern dependency true and devoted to Britain in this crisis. The missionaries in China were only thirty married men and their wives, and twenty-five single women. If Japan dominated that country and converted it to militarism the Japanese would become a menace six times greater than Germany, and eager to control the world by force. This possibility could be prevented only by making China a Christian nation.

"If China gets science without Christianity, God pity our poor world. There would be 500,000,000 yellow men ready to beat us at our own game."

Dr. Gandier concluded with a strong appeal to the people to support missions by generous contributions of money.

To Open Victory Loan.

This is the latest picture of the Minister of Finance, Sir Thomas White, who will open in a few days Canada's fourth war loan—the Victory Loan. Sir Thomas White hopes to raise at least $150,000,000 by the sale of Victory Bonds in the period between November 12 and December 1.

Says Mr. Rowell Has Not Grasped Ontario Situation

Montreal Gazette Claims He Has Not Been of Much Assistance in Bringing Harmony Out of Chaos

(Special to the Toronto Star and the Peterborough Examiner).

MONTREAL, Nov. 5.—"The Ontario situation shows little improvement," says the Gazette, reviewing the political situation this morning. It continues: "Hon. W. Rowell is without a constituency, and no offers have been received to provide one for him. Mr. Rowell has failed to grasp the Ontario situation, and has not been of much assistance toward bringing harmony out of the chaos caused by the disruption of the parties. His failure to distinguish between partisans and Unionists has intensified party feeling in Ontario. In Western Ontario there is scarcely a constituency but is threatened with a bitter fight, and if he persists in his demand for the recognition of A. B. McCoig, Kent, and W. M. German, Welland, as Unionist candidates, he may find it difficult to secure a constituency that will accept his Unionist advocacy at par value. Ontario Unionists are becoming weary of his acceptance of the 'eleventh hour repentance,' of anti-conscriptionists and of anti-Unionists

"In Eastern Ontario the situation is much better and there should be but two Laurier Liberals elected in that section. Prescott and Russell are conceded to Sir Wilfrid. Edward Proulx and Hon. Chas. Murphy, representatives of these counties in the late Parliament, are Sir Wilfrid's candidates again, and will probably be elected. And the latter's position in the Cabinet is impossible without some explanation or denial from his successor. Sir Edward Kemp was to have gone to England as overseas Minister of Militia, but if his administration at home was 'deplorable,' his acceptance of the more important and difficult work overseas is impossible. The criticism in view of the record made by Sir Edward Kemp as head of the War Purchasing Commission is a great surprise, and it is felt that General Mewburn must have been misquoted or that his remarks were ambiguous and their meaning misconstrued. It is expected that Sir Edward Kemp will immediately demand an explanation, and if a satisfactory one is not forthcoming, will ask Sir Robert Borden to either accept his resignation or dispense with the services of his Minister of Militia."

Mr. Editor,—Please allow me a little of your valuable space. We are all aware that at this present situation of the scarcity of some domestic articles, especially coal, and I think it is very unfair to many of our fellow citizens for many other of the citizens to be hoarding up as much coal as six or eight months, and some even a year's supply ahead, and many others cannot get even one hundred pounds, with the winter months coming on. Now I know of several who during the summer got their winter supply in at once. Some dealers are very big hearted fellows with their friends. A certain man delivering coal told me last week that he filled an order of two tons from our municipal coal men taken to an East City resident, and to his surprise he found two tons in a bin and another twelve tons in the cellar, and he had to get into the cellar and shovel back about three tons before he could put the other two tons in, making a total of sixteen tons, and at the same time others had paid their money for two months before they could get any fuel, and one of these was a soldier's wife, who had to break up some of her chairs to make a fire in order to keep warm, while her husband is on the firing lines fighting for our liberty. Now, is one man's money any better than another's; if so, then the government must have permitted some special money to be made for a few of our citizens who are so selfish and do not think of the other fellow or how he gets along. Is there not some restriction on this hoarding up such articles that are so badly needed? We have just had one half ton since last spring and my wife had to insist on getting even that much.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor.

RATEPAYER.

JUDGMENT IS GIVEN IN FAVOR OF PLAINTIFF

His Honour Judge Huycke gave judgment to-day for $50.00 and Division Court costs, in the action brought by Mr. Doble, commercial traveller of this city, against McCaskey's Limited, who seized his car. This $50.00 is given for the detaining of the car some days after the money had been paid over to release it. The claim against the bailiff was dismissed on the ground that the third party proceedings did not apply to the bailiff and that he had not acted within the scope of his employment as bailiff. The bailiff was not joined as a co-defendant in the action.

In this action Mr. Doble's costs will amount, on the County Court scale, to $125.00, while the costs of each of the other parties amount to about the same.

Mr. J. G. Guise-Bagley appeared for Mr. Doble, Mr. J. J. McLennan, K.C., of Toronto, appeared for McCaskey's Ltd., and Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for the bailiff.

SUFFERED WITH NERVES COULD NOT KEEP QUIET

Diseases of the nervous system are very common.

All the organs of the body may be sound while the nerve centres may be affected.

Many women become run down and wbraout by household duties never ending, and sooner or later find themselves with their nerves shattered, and the heart action weakened.

On the first sign of any weakness of either the heart or nerves, lagging energy, or physical breakdown, do not wait until your case becomes hopeless.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will at once quieten the shaking nerves, strengthen the weak heart and build up the entire system.

Mrs. F. Bailey, 223 Earl St., Kingston, Ont., writes: "I was suffering very much with my nerves, so much so that I could not keep myself quiet at all. I was recommended to try Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills so I bought three boxes, and I must say I have derived much benefit from them, so much so that my friends have all noticed the change in me."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c per box at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

ENORMOUS CROP IN HAND IN THE U.S.

The Dominion Department of Agriculture issues the following supplement to the Current Week's Egg and Poultry Markets' report:

United States Has Enormous Crop in Hand.

The following extracts are taken from the United States Food Administration Bulletin No. 10, issued by direction of Herbert Hoover, Food Administrator:

". . . We have secured one of the largest corn crops in our history. We also have abundant crops of oats, barley, kafir corn, soy beans, velvet beans, cottonseed and peanut meal, and we will have a larger supply of mill feed than normal. Not all of these are hog feed, but they will enter the general feeding question by adding to the general pool of feed."

"If we aggregate all of the feeding stuffs, and if we subtract the amount of fodder grains which we can expect to export in view of the present shipping outlook, we will find one astounding fact: We have to-day somewhere near the equivalent of 1,000,000,000 bushels of feeds more than last year. This is an increase of nearly 25 per cent.—for which we have no corresponding number of animals to feed unless we begin to increase them at once. In other words, as our animals have not kept pace with our increase in concentrates, we have much more feed this year than we have animals to eat it. Therefore, if farmers are to find markets for feed, it must be to a great extent through an increase in animals."

REFERENDUM ON MILITARY SERVICE ACT

"Tariff reform. Control of food supplies and prices. Stop to profiteering."

REMOVE TARIFF INCREASES.

The two increases in the tariff made since the beginning of the war he would remove. These are: 7½ per cent. on all commodities coming into Canada from outside Great Britain, and 5 per cent. on goods coming from Great Britain. He also "would immediately remove the duties on agricultural implements and other essentials, as demanded by the Western farmers."

In connection with the high cost of living he would "take drastic steps to bring under Government control all food-producing factories, so that food may be sold at a fixed price under the control of the Government."

If satisfactory arrangements could not be made with the food-producing factories, Sir Wilfrid declares, he would not hesitate to commandeer. The manifesto proceeds.:

STOP PROFITEERING.

"One of the most important contributions towards winning the war is to put a stop to profiteering on war supplies. The Government has deliberately encouraged profiteering for the benefit of its partizan followers. A first duty of my administration would be to insure to the country which pays for war supplies the excess of exorbitant profits being realized by profiteers."

If necessary, Sir Wilfrid continues, he would not hesitate to take control of the factories engaged in the supply of war materials.

Suitable Government shops also, Sir Wilfrid believes, should be turned to the production of war materials at cost prices.

Sir Wilfrid passes in review alike some of the legislation of the late Government and the programme of the present. He finds no trace in the manifesto of the Union Government that its Liberal members have influenced their colleagues to the adoption of measures they deemed essential. He refers to "most of the articles" in that manifesto as "stale commonplaces . . . . . resurrected for a new election."

He declares of the War Times Election Act, passed last session, that it is a blot upon every instinct of justice, and holds the view that the Canadian Northern Railway purchase should be adjudicated upon by the new Parliament.

PETERBOROUGH MAN'S BIG WORK FOR THE VICTORY LOAN

The following from the Monetary Times, a first-rate financial authority, refers to a former citizen of Peterborough who has attained great eminence in financial affairs, and has kept himself of good report amidst much criticism of men of financial prominence:

Mr. E. R. Wood, Toronto, is one of the most strenuous workers in the cause of Canada's Victory Loan. As chairman of the special subscriptions committee and a member of the Dominion executive committee of the loan campaign, he has been constantly in touch with the various committees of other cities to further the best interests of the loan. In Montreal to-day, Ottawa to-morrow, Hamilton the next day, Toronto the following day, at conferences and committees, interviewing the heads of large corporations, he is working by far the greater portion of each day's 24 hours in connection with the loan. To the lot of the special subscriptions committee, of which he is chairman, will fall the task of accounting for the large subscriptions, individual and corporate, to the loan. They will total a substantial amount, probably half the sum asked for by the Finance Minister.

Mr. Wood is one of the most respected and best liked financial leaders of the country. He has a free and easy manner which begets confidence and brings hard work, in a willing manner, from his staff. While his interests are widespread, many board meetings will be without his counsel until the Victory Loan has been made a success. He is president of the Central Canada Loan and Savings Company, and of the Dominion Securities Corporation. He is also vice-president of the National Trust Company, and a director of the Canada Life Assurance Company, Canadian Bank of Commerce, Western Assurance Company, British America Assurance Company, Dominion Steel Corporation, Massey - Harris Company, Toronto Power Company, Toronto Railway Company, Shawinigan Water and Power Company, Mexican Light and Power Company, and Mexico Tramways Company. He is also a member of the Imperial Munitions Board, Ottawa. He has been associated with the Central Canada Loan and Savings Company since 1884, being elected president in 1914. As a public-spirited citizen he has obtained a splendid reputation. He is chairman of Board of Governors of the Grace Hospital, Toronto, regent of the Victoria University, a director and past-president of the Central Y.M.C.A., Toronto, and president of the Y.M.C.A. International Convention in Toronto in 1910. He is active in Red Cross and other patriotic work.

PETERBORO MAN RETURNING HOME

LONDON, Nov. 5. — Dr. Fred Burnham, of Winnipeg and Peterborough, who has been director of a hospital among the Serbians for the past two years, has sailed for Canada, where he will make an appeal on behalf of this work in the Balkans with a view of establishing a Canadian hospital there.

A farewell message just received by him from the Governor of Macedonia expresses the hope and prayer that Dr. Burnham's countrymen, who have shown such sublime heroism and magnificent virile qualities in this world-wide calamity, will not abandon the Balkans in its day of need, but will enable him to return to Serbia to continue his charitable and philanthropic work.

A prominent foreign banker in London told Dr. Burnham that Britain could never sufficiently realize the sad plight of Southern Europe.

The Red Cross Total $29,500 On Saturday Night

The total amount pledged for the Peterborough Branch of the Canadian Red Cross had reached the $29,500 mark on Saturday night, and as there are a number of cards still out, the committee is confident that the final recapitulation of the figures will show that the increased objective of $30,000 has been reached. The original figure aimed at was $20,000, and it is most gratifying to know that the people of Peterborough have risen to the occasion and surpassed that mark by practically $10,000.

OBITUARY

HENRY J. SERMON.

Henry J. Sermon died yesterday in the House of Providence, aged 78. He had been in poor health for some time.

The funeral took place this afternoon to St. Peter's cemetery.

FOUGHT THROUGH WAR DRESSED AS A BOY

LONDON, Nov. 5.—Early in the war a slight Belgian boy attached himself to a British company and helped cook and attended the wounded. He became a mascot, and sang for the soldiers. He said all his relatives were dead. A little Belgian uniform was given him recently. He played a heroic part in the severe fighting, carrying ammunition. After the battle he was missed, and a search was made. His mangled body was found in the thickest of the fray, and when prepared for burial it was discovered that he was a girl.

Two More Local Soldiers Will Return To-night

His Worship Mayor Duffus received a wire from Kingston to-day, stating that Corp. T. H. Dainton and Pte. M. Neary, two Peterborough soldiers invalided home from overseas, would reach the city on the 5.30 Port Hope train or the 8.40 Belleville train to-night.

THE CITY MAY COLLECT GARBAGE

Mayor Duffus is of the Opinion That a More Satisfactory Service Could Be Provided

Monday, 12th November, will be the last day for receiving tenders for the collection of garbage. This work will likely cost the city one mill next year, whereas the present cost is seven-tenths of a mill. The cost to the city is increasing each year, and according to a number of the aldermen nd ratepayers, the work is less satisfactory. The last-named phase of the situation may have the effect of inducing the city to undertake the work on its own account.

Mayor Duffus is of the opinion that this could be satisfactorily accomplished by means of two or more motor-driven trucks. If necessary for a few months during the snow period horses could be substituted for the trucks. The work would then be under the direct control of the city, and a much better service might result.

This Leaves the Skin Free From Hairy Growths

(Toilet Talks).

A simple method for completely removing every trace of hair or fuzz is here given. This is painless and usually a single treatment will banish even stubborn growths. To remove hairs, make a thick paste with some powdered delatone and water, spread on hairy surface, and after about 2 minutes rub off, wash the skin, and the hairs are gone. This method will not mar the skin, but to avoid disappointment, be certain you get delatone.

COLLECT OVER $50,000

Revenue From Marriage Licenses in Province This Year.

As the result of the change in the act regarding the fee for marriage licenses, the Ontario Board of Health will be able to hand to the Provincial Treasurer a nice sum this year. The old fee for a license was $2, and the department got but twenty cents. Now the fee is $5, and the department gets $3.20.

The revenue this first year will amount to quite a bit over $50,000, and will likely be near $60,000. This is not caused by more marriages, but the fact that the fee has been increased.

WEST TOTAL NEAR MAXIMUM

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES, Nov. 5.—The flux and reflux of the German forces on the western and eastern froces, together with their rapid augmentation on either side whenever occasion called for an increase of effectives, have been now clearly set forth. The figures given refer to the various phases of the war, starting with the invasion of Belgium in August, 1914, going right through the allied offensives of 1915 and 1916, the German ope rations before Verdun the movements on the Russian and Roumanian frontiers, and concluding with the position as it was on Sept. 1 this year.

It will be seen that in 1914 the German's threw on to the western front, including the army that forced its way through Belgium, 1,190 battalions of infantry; while on the Russian front, from which they did not await much activity, they left only 322 battalions. By Sept. 1 this year these totals had been enormously raised, for one that date they had on the Franco-Belgian-British front no fewer than 1,369 battalions, while on the eastern front they had in positions 965 battalions. Thus at the present moment they are employing 2,334 battalions on both fronts, where as at the opening of hostilities only 1,512 were engaged.

A glance at the totals of the battalions in line on the two fronts at different periods of the war is interesting, as showing how the principal effort of the Germans has swung from time to time from one side to the other.

The attack on Belgium and France absorbed the attention of the German Staff when war broke out in August, 1914, and the Russian front was left to a very great extent to take care of itself. At that time the infantry effectives were disposed as follows:

	Divisions of 4 Rgts. each.	Battns.
On the western front	96½	1,190
On the eastern front	26½	322

The battle of the Yser in November, 1914, caused the Germans to intensify their effort in the west. They brought up their effectives to a higher total there, but at the same time they were becoming rather anxious about the Russian front, and therefore added to the number of their troops on that side, making the position as follows:

	Divisions of 4 Rgts.	Battns.
On the western front	104½	1,293
On the eastern front	32½	399

Then came the Russian offensive, which compelled Germany to look round in order to find more troops to meet it. She therefore reduced her effectives somewhat on the western front and sent them eastward, at the same time bringing some more battalions from the interior to add to those on the Russian frontier. In September, 1915, by which time the maximum of the German effort had been reached on that side, the position stood:

	Divisions of 3 or 4 Rgts.	Battns.
On the western front	103	1,120
On the eastern front	67	780

Verdun was the next great movement the Germans had in view, and in order to win a victory there they had changed the disposition of their infantry effectives by bringing many divisions westward, so that the position in June, 1916, was:

BEERSHEBA VICTORY CAREFULLY PLANNED

Achievement Was Hard Blow to the Turks and Was Executed After Months of Unremitting Toil in Preparing the Coup

BEERSHEBA—WHERE ABRAHAM AND ABIMELECH SWARE. From the twenty-first chapter of Genesis, verses 29 to 34, inclusive:—

29. And Abimelech said unto Abraham, What mean these seven ewe lambs which thou hast set by themselves?

30. And he said, These seven ewe lambs shalt thou take of my hand that it may be a witness unto me that I have digged this well.

31. Wherefore he called that place Beersheba, because there they sware both of them.

32. So they made a convent at Beersheba. Abimelech rose up, and Phinol the captain of his host, and they returned into the land of the Philistines.

33. And Abraham planted a tamarisk tree in Beersheba, and called there on the name of the Lord, the everlasting God.

34. And Abraham sojourned in the land of the Philistines many days.

United States Senators See Boche Airmen Raid London: Is Their Second Experience

As a Result Senators Kenyon and Kendricks Say Germans Will Never Break British Nerve, If Such is What They Hope to Achieve

LONDON, Nov. 6. —United States Senators William S. Kenyon, of Iowa, and John B. Kendrick, of Wyoming, have passed unscathed through their second air raid experience in London. On the first occasion they were attending a dinner given at the Athenaeum Club by the Lord High Chancellor in honour of the visiting Representatives, and more recently they were asleep in their suite on the top floor of a substantial seven story hotel when they were awakened by the coming of the Germans and the consequent bombardment.

Senator Kenyon was the first to be aroused by the boom of the guns. He jumped out of bed and hurried to Kendrick's bed and shook him from his slumbers with the remark, "Senator, they are here!"

The incessant boom made further elucidation unnecessary. Senator Kendrick rubbed his eyes, hurriedly arose, and the two, pajama clad, hastened to the windows, which they opened to hear and see.

Below in the streets the people were merely obeying the police by seeking shelter. The Senators, at great risk of injury from flying shrapnel, watched the spectacle.

"It was our first air raid experience at close quarters," Senator Kenyon told the Associated Press, "and we welcomed it in the sense that it nerved us for our coming visit to the trenches in France and Belgium. The thing that impressed me most was the fortitude of the English people. Their coolness was nothing short of marvelous. The bravery of their women especially excited my admiration. If the purpose of the Germans is to break the nerve of the English people what I have just seen convinces me that they have failed utterly.

"While we stood catching cold and watching the bombardment I was wondering how our people would behave under similar circumstances. I turned to Senator Kendrick and remarked that if the people of the United States displayed the same iron nerve, which I am confident they would, the allied cause is in no danger."

Senator Kendrick interrupted, remarking that he had overheard women folks walking through the corridors of the hotel during the raid calmly discussing the theatrical performances from which they had just returned.

From their high places, which overlooked the park, the Senators had a good view of the gunfire, although the moonlit sky, flecked with tiny clouds, made it difficult to catch a glimpse of the Gothas, which were soaring at great heights.

"After we were convinced, from what we saw of the wonderful barrage fire, that the enemy could not get closer to us," said Senator Kendrick, "we went back to bed and made up for lost sleep.

The Senators were up early the next morning, going into conference with Lord Rhondda on the food supply question, and later they proceeded to the north of England for a visit to the shipyards.

Beersheba Which Was Recently Captured By British Troops

LONDON, Nov. 5.—(Via Reuter's Ottawa Agency).—Telegraphing under date of November 1 from British Headquarters in Egypt, Reuter's correspondent says:

"The veil which has hidden the operations on the Palestine front has been partially lifted and reveals that the Turks received a blow in the capture of Beer-sheba which has considerably winded him. The achievement necessitated weeks and months of unremitting toil in preparing the coup. As a consequence the result has been almost machine-like in precision.

"The ominous quiescence preserved on the battle front was broken five days ago, the guns vigorously shelling the Turkish lines. The weight and extent of the fire transcended anything experienced hitherto in the Near East. Simultaneously the first welcome rain and thunderstorm of the winter season occurred, helping to harden the surface and facilitating the movements of the men.

Compelled Retirement.

"Our fire was most intense towards the northern extremity about Gaza, and there was nothing to show that the blow was about to fall on the other extremity thirty miles distant. Nevertheless, the Turks were suspicious and reconnoitred around Beersheba, claiming success. Therefore the truth is that the British mounted troops held up the Turks and inflicted heavy casualties enabling the infantry to advance and compelling an enemy retirement in ignorance of our dispositions.

"Frequent reconaissances and aerial photographs had familiarised the command with the nature of the ground which around Beer-sheba gently undulates, and is traversed from north to south by deep wadies, the town lying in a depression along the banks of the Wadysabah. The enemy's defences extended north and west and south for three to five miles from Beer-sheba, constituting a somewhat isolated advance post, guarding the Turkish extreme left position, was of great natural strength, the enemy believing it impregnable. It was well provided with guns and machine guns, and garrisoned by two complete regiments and other detachments of infantry, and a brigade of cavalry.

A Complete Surprise.

"The attack was a complete surprise and the enemy was cornered and practically wiped out almost before the news of their plight reached enemy headquarters. All arms participated, but the lion's share fell to the cavalry, who marched fifty miles, chiefly in night time, to outflank the enemy.

The Anzac mounted troops took the outer circuit and made a junction with the Yeomanry. The infantry advance began at nightfall and succeeded in completely outflanking the enemy. The Anzacs first met opposition ten miles south-east of Beersheba, and later they were held up by a strong redoubt at Tel-El-Saba, defending the eastern approaches to the town. While the fight here was progressing, light horse captured a position a little east across the Wady, establishing themselves on the road to Hebron and cutting off escape in that direction. Tel-El-Saba fell two hours later, but a strong force with guns and machine guns were holding out at Wady, barring the approach to the town. Mounted Anzac reinforcements thereupon brilliantly attacked at sunset. In their charges on the strong positions on the crumbling banks of the Wady in the pale light of the moon, the men on horseback used fixed bayonets as lances and literally swept over all opposition and carried the town with a rush.

First Line Rushed.

"Meanwhile west of Beer-sheba, where the defences were strongest, and aided by great natural advantages, the infantry, after barely an hour's artillery preparation, rushed the first line. London regiments captured Hill 107, a strong redoubt. The bombardment had wiped out the majority of the enemy machine guns, although it failed to obliterate the wiring. Nevertheless, the infantry in the keenest spirit tore down the barbed wire with their hands."

GOT WET FEET TOOK AWFUL COLD

COULD NOT SLEEP FOR COUGH

A bad cold accompanied by a distressing cough that keeps you awake at night is most aggravating, and unless it is attended to at once may develop into something very serious.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is the remedy you should take. It heals the mucous surfaces, relieves oppression and tightness of the chest, removes the accumulation of phlegm, quiets the most obstinate and distressing coughs, and secures rest and sleep at night, not only to the sufferer, but to others whose rest would be otherwise broken.

Mrs. Ezekiel Acker, Lake Pleasant, N.S., writes: "I got wet feet and took an awful cold; could not sleep at night, and would do nothing but cough. My husband got me a bottle of medicine, but it was not worth bringing home. I was going to call the doctor in when a friend asked me to try Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. I told her I had little faith in it, but she urged me to get a bottle. I did, and I must say that of all the medicine I ever took, it is the best, and relieved me the quickest of anything I ever saw."

"Dr. Wood's" is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25c and 50c; manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

"THE PAINTED WOMAN"

By FREDERIC ARNOLD KUMMER

one of the dismal stone-paved rooms on the lower floor of the old Spanish building fronting on the plaza. Originally it had bee the official residence of he governor, now it served the dual purpose of slave barracks and storehouse for captured goods awaiting sale. There were, at the moment, no other occupants of this particular dungeon. A basket of fruit and an earthen jug of water were given them, after which the turning of the great key in the lock bade them abandon all hope of rescue, and prepare themselves for an inevitable fate. The buccaneers, in need of both food and sleep, made their way aboard ship.

Ramona's strength and determination, so long sustained by her pride, at last gave way. She sank upon one of the wooden benches which stood in the room, shaking from weakness. She could not weep; her tears seemed dried up; she choked with dry and hysterical sobs.

Lucia attempted to comfort her, but for a long time her efforts were unavailing. The strain to which her mistress's strength had been subjected had proven too great. It was only after many hours that the girl succeeded in inducing her to eat a little of the fruit and drink some water.

The devastating grief that filled Ramona's soul gradually gave way to a stony indifference. She had undergone too much. Even the emotions, too roughly played upon, become unresponsive, dulled by suffering into a state of insensibility. Nothing but death now remained to her; hope had gone when Barton went. But one thought remained to her; she had saved his life. It appeared that she was of no further use in the world. She had heard the conversation that took place between Portuguese Joe and his companions on their way to the town, and realised fully what fate awaited her.

The Portugee was filled with a bitter hatred—she had defied him, and he meant to be revenged for that. She had heard him openly proclaim his intention—to have her sent to the cane fields. With gloating cruelty he had dwelt upon the horrors of such a life, knowing that she was listening to every word. To her, so physically unfit to endure its hardships death would come, yet it would not come quickly. There would be long days of exquisite torture in the brazen heat, the whip of the slave driver, the insults, and worse, of those she laboured with, before exhaustion put an end to her sufferings. Yet she contemplated the prospect with a singular indifference. Fate had dealt so hardly with her that the few remaining blows she would be called upon to endure mattered little. She dreamed of Barton, pictured him to herself in safety aboard ship, and by now, she believed, well on his way northward toward that land she had once hoped to visit with him. She told herself that it was all just as well, now that he had gone. No happiness could have been possible between them, once he had learned the manner of her life during the past two years. Ormiston had placed upon her soul a scarlet stain; it had been through no fault of hers, yet this could not obliterate it, could not give back what she had lost. At least she would meet her fate proudly. Her people in the past had served God and the king with brave hearts; she owed it to them that her own should be no less brave. If the Portugee expected to extort from her a single groan of despair, she resolved that he should be disappointed. With a face of marble she sat upon the bench, her hands grasping her beads, her lips moving in prayer. Things, immediate things, no longer concerned her. She had the bearing, the spiritual uplifting, from which the bravery of martyrs springs.

Lucia's pitiful attempt to comfort her she ignored, and at last bade the girl be silent. Through the long hot hours of the day, while Barton was vainly searching for news of her, she sat rigid, immovable, resembling some one who has already passed beyond a knowledge of earthly things than a creature of flesh and blood.

Her greatest fear, strangely enough, was that Barton might attempt to rescue her. She convinced herself that she did not wish this, both because of the danger to which he would thus be exposed, and because she had come to the conclusion that Barton's love was not sufficiently great to bridge the chasm that separated her from all that was innocent and good. It was characteristic of her, of her unselfishness, that she should feel in this way toward him. No hope for herself, only for him, for his future. Love such as she held in her heart is a flower that blossoms most beautifully in the soil of adversity. Suffering had made her very tender. She asked no longer for her happiness, only for his.

Toward the middle of the afternoon half a dozen negro slaves were thrust into the pen, broken creatures who huddled in hopeless silence at the far end of the room. Ramona scarcely saw them. Her thoughts were too far away.

As the day drew to a close, a slender breeze threaded the barred windows, high along the side of the room. At the same time noises, sounds of laughter, of many voices, were swept in to them. The crowd was beginning to gather in the plaza, as the cool of the evening awoke the activities of the town. Interminably she heard the urgent voice of the sellers, the bidding of the buyers, as the disposal of the piles of captured goods went on. Well did she know the scene. The noisy crowd would hold many who in the past had been her friends. There would be scores of sailors, of buccaneers; the women of the town would regard the coming spectacle as a choice bit of amusement, arranged for their especial benefit.

Ramona felt a shudder of fear, as she listened to the increasing commotion. Nerve herself as she would to face the ordeal before her, she could not contemplate facing that jeering crowd without a sinking of the heart, a prayer that it might soon all be over. Again she drank some of the water in the jug; it refreshed her a little. She took up some of the fruit, but quickly put it down again. Thought of food choked her.

After a time, the negroes at the rear of the room were taken out, and through the windows she could hear the strident voice of their owner, setting forth their value to the crowd. She looked at Lucia, and extended her hand.

"Good-bye," she said, placing it on the other's shoulder. "Trust in the good God. He will not forsake you. We shall not see each other again."

The girl began to weep.

"Ah, mistress!" she cried. "Ah, mistress! I am so sorry, so afraid."

"Come—you must be brave. I pray that you may find a kind master."

"And you also, mistress."

Ramona shook her head.

"I expect nothing, Lucia," she said. "For whatever fate the good God may have in store for me, I am ready."

The door of the room swung open. Long Rodgers, peering in, motioned toward the mulatto.

"Come out," he said, then glanced toward Ramona. "We shall have you till the last." Then the door clanged behind them.

Ramona did not have long to wait, although the moments dragged with intolerable slowness. The matter of selling a good-looking young woman such as Lucia did not require much time. She listened to the shouts and cries of the crowd with terror in her eyes. Now that the supreme moment had come, it seemed that her courage was slipping away from her. She quivered, and rising, began to move nervously about the room.

All at once the door was again thrown open. For an instant she was almost blinded, as a flood of light, golden yellow from the low-lying sun, fell upon her face. Silhouetted against it she saw Portuguese Joe, a long whip in his hand.

He gave a loud laugh.

"Come out, sweet dove," he cried, "and let these good people see the beauty of you."

The girl hesitated.

"Come out," the Portugee repeated. "Make haste, before I lay the lash about your back."

The presence of the man, his brutal and jeering laugh, restored her courage. She stepped out into the sunlight, and swept the space before her with unflinching eyes.

A sea of faces met her gaze, but she recognized none of them. The Portugee snapped his whip, then pointed in the direction of the block.

"Make haste, you jade," he cried. "Must we wait for you half the day?"

She looked at him, with a flash of her old defiance, and in her eyes he saw the implacable hatred that had before caused him to lower his own. Almost unconsciously he stepped to one side, while she, proudly, as a queen might have moved toward her throne, walked in the direction of the block.

The jeers and cries ceased. Everyone became suddenly silent. There was scarce a whisper, as she mad her way through the crowd. The Portugee, following her, seemed to have grown uneasy, as though his triumph lacked its expected savor.

Length of Wireless Waves.

In articles on wireless telegraphy such expressions as 200 meter wave lengths, 600 meter wave lengths, 15,000 meter wave lengths are constantly used. In reply to a correspondent who asks how the length of the waves is measured the Scientific American gives the following simple explanation:

"The length of an electric wave is determined by a wave meter. The natural wave length of an aerial is four times its linear length, just as the wave length of a note of a closed organ pipe is four times the length of the pipe, and the wave length of the note of a tuning fork is four times the length of the box which is resonant with the note. However, other considerations make it difficult to measure the wave length by a rule, and the wave meter gives a more correct result than can be found by measuring the length of the wire."

Through Customer's Glasses.

"How much experience have you had behind the counter?" asked an electric shop manager of a young man who had just applied for a job as a retail clerk.

"None," admitted the applicant, "but I've had a heap of experience as a customer."

The ability to put on the customer's glasses and see windows, cases and prices from the buying side of the counter is an asset that cannot be too highly valued. Every electric store salesman is also a buyer. He must purchase clothing, neckties and shoes. The electrical man who can remember how other salesmen and clerks showed him their merchandise in a way that invited his interest and encouraged him to buy and who can apply these methods in his own everyday selling is the man who will contribute to the building of a clientele of satisfied patrons for his store.—Electrical Merchandising.

Fragrant Wild Flowers.

Readers of the American Botanist have been trying to decide which is the most fragrant American wild flower, and their opinions on the subject exhibit remarkable diversity. In New England the majority give first choice to the pink azalea, with the white water lily second. There are many votes for the trailing arbutus; but, as the editor suggests, its fragrance is doubtless overestimated owing to the fact that it is the earliest fragrant wild flower of spring. Other candidates for the first place are the partridge berry, the common locust, horned bladderwort (of which John Burroughs says, "In a warm moist atmosphere the odor is almost too strong"), yellow jessamine, spotted wintergreen and some of the magnolias.

Village Life In China.

Chinese village life is essentially democratic, almost communistic. There are not today—have not been for centuries—feudal lords or even great landlords. It is a country of peasant proprietors, clan government, with practically all the men of middle age and over in a community having equal voice and authority in local affairs, with land split up smaller and more equally than in any other country in the world.

Revising an Old Saying.

The old saying that where there's a will there's a way still holds good, with certain restrictions, but the modern way of doing things demands both will and skill. The individual who possesses both these virtues will find the road to success comparatively thornless.

Doing Your Duty.

Those who do it always would as soon think of being conceited of eating their dinner as of doing their duty. What honest boy would pride himself on not picking a pocket? A thief who was trying to reform would.

Contradictory.

"What did Blank say about me?"
"That you owed him $10."

MEAT INJURIOUS TO THE KIDNEYS

Take a Tablespoonful of Salts if Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid, says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead, and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take one tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

The low cost per cup

It is hard to believe that a cup of good, rich tea only costs about a fifth of a cent, but, you see, Red Rose consists chiefly of Assam teas—the richest, strongest teas in the world.

Red Rose easily yields 250 cups to the pound. And it's a tea of rare economy and flavor.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Doctor Bemerton

Unwillingly He Left His Wife to See a Patient.

By ELINOR MARSH

"My dear," said Dr. Joe Bemerton as he threw off his coat and hat, tossing his heavy driving gloves into the latter, "I'll be hanged if I go out again tonight if I'm called by a multimillionaire!"

"Oh, Joe, I'm so glad! You look awfully tired, and just think how long it is since we've had a quiet evening together!"

"Right you are, Pol. I'll get on my velveteen jacket, put on my easy shoes, sit down before these blazing logs with you beside me, and we'll have a real old fashioned evening—like our courting days, eh, sweetheart?"

He tweaked her ear and gave her a kiss.

"Won't it be nice? You can sit in the big chair right before the flame, while I sit in my little working rocker beside you and darn the stockings."

"Oh, no; don't darn stockings! You didn't darn stockings in those days."

As soon as dinner was over the doctor pulled the big chair up to the fireplace and drew his wife down on his knee. She had weighed 100 pounds when they courted. Now she weighed 150. Bemerton had had several obstinate cases during the day and was tired. It wasn't five minutes before he remarked that he had strained a muscle in his left leg when getting out of his auto, slipping on a bit of ice. He thought that they'd better sit side by side. So Mrs. Bemerton got off his knee and with an effort succeeded in squeezing in beside him. If she had gained fifty pounds he had gained more, so that instead of the aggregate bulk of 215 pounds between the two arms of the chair, as in their courting days, there were now 350. However, they managed to wedge themselves in, and Mrs. Bemerton leaned back on her husband's arm.

"Just as nice as ever it was," he said gallantly.

They sat chatting for awhile, but the topics they talked about as lovers did not seem to rise up with the spontaneity of former days. There were long gaps in the conversation. The doctor yawned.

"We don't need to talk all the while," she said drowsily. "Remember what a clatter we used to keep up?"

"I wonder how we did it."

"Did it! We didn't do it. It did itself."

There was a lull, during which the doctor's eyes closed, and he was beginning to draw the heavy breath of slumber when his wife started in anew.

"Do you know, Joe," she said, "that wretched butcher sent in the most abominable steak this morning—all bone and gristle?"

"Yes, dear, but my arm is cramped. If you'll rise a bit I'll move it."

He moved the arm and was sinking again to a snooze when the telephone bell rang.

"I'll go," said Mrs. Bemerton, starting up.

"No; you wouldn't understand." And the doctor went to the telephone.

"Yes, I'm Dr. Bemerton."

Reply.

"I'm pretty tired."

Reply.

"Is he?"

Reply.

HORSES TOO, WEAR GAS MASKS AT THE FRONT—Both men and horses now wear gas masks at the front. The troops in the front trenches long ago found the necessary protection against the poisonous fumes blown over from the German trenches, but it is only recently that protection of the same sort has been devised for the horses used at the front, though they are as susceptible as their masters to poison gases.

"Suffering much?"

Reply.

"Well, I suppose I'll have to go."

Mrs. Bemerton, who was listening, sighed. The doctor came back into the room the picture of woe.

"Now, Joe, you said you wouldn't go out again tonight for a millionaire. You're tired out. In another moment you'd have been asleep. Why didn't you refuse?"

"How could I? If you were suffering and called for a physician to relieve you and he declined to go, what would you think of him?"

"Well, I suppose it can't be helped. Will you ride?"

"No; it's not far. I'll walk."

She helped the poor man on with his overcoat. He gave her a parting kiss and as he went out said:

"If I'm going to be delayed I'll telephone you, and you're not to sit up, but go to bed like a dear, good little woman, and I'll come in without disturbing you and sleep in my own room. Ta-ta, sweetheart!"

Mrs. Bemerton's regret was that her liege lord must go out after a hard day's work into a cold night to incur more responsibility. She was a practical woman and had discovered very soon that the return to courting days would not be a success.

As soon as the front door closed behind him Dr. Bemerton hastened his steps. A few blocks away was his club, and thither he went. Leaving his overcoat at the coat room, he went into the cafe and there found Drs. Nichols and Gilson, who hailed his entrance with shouts of satisfaction.

"What did you mean," exclaimed Bemerton to Nichols, with mock severity, "by telling me that the patient was suffering and I must come at once to relieve him?"

"I mean this," replied Nichols—"that Gilson is suffering for some one to split a bottle of ginger ale with him. As for me, I'm suffering for something of the same kind."

"Ha, ha!" laughed Bemerton. "You fellows will be the death of me some day. It doesn't seem as if one of us can have any fun without the other two or any two without the other one.'

Dr. Bemerton sat down, and Nichols pushed the button, and when beverages had been ordered Bemerton said to the waiter:

"Peter, I wish you to telephone my wife that the case is very serious, there are three doctors in consultation, and I'll probably be detained till a late hour. Say I haven't even time to do the telephoning. Now, be careful, Peter. Don't give away where the message comes from."

"Ha, ha!" laughed Nichols. "Three doctors in consultation! Good! Very good!"

"Consulting as to which is preferable as a diluent—ginger ale or fizz water," laughed Gilson.

Peter had served twenty years at the club and knew how to send such telephone messages very well, but he was head waiter, and his responsibilities were multifarious. Being especially crowded tonight, he transferred the order to a greenhorn who had worn the club's button but a few days. This was the message sent to the doctor's wife:

"Dr. Bemerton is here at the club in consultation with two other doctors. He won't be home till late, mum."

"All right," came the response. "Tell the doctor not to hurry and that I think a Welsh rabbit or a stuffed crab will do him good."

Then the greenhorn goes to the three doctors in consultation and says to Dr. Bemerton:

"Docther, Mrs. Bamerthon says yer not to hurry, and she thinks a stuffed crab or a rabbit'll do ye good."

Bemerton, who was raising his glass to his lips, stopped it on the way.

"Who phoned her?"

"I did, sor. Peter told me to. He was busy."

"And did you tell her I was at the club?"

"Shure, sor. Where else would I tell her?"

Nichols and Gilson leaned back in their leather covered chairs and roared.

"That'll do," said Bemerton to the waiter, who went off puzzled.

"Well, boys," said Bemerton, "I'm in for it." And he told the story of how he had started in for a return to courting days, accusing them of breaking in upon his and his wife's happiness.

"You must do something mighty nice," said Gilson, "to get out of this muddle. My wife would never forgive me for a thing like that."

"What can I do?" asked Bemerton.

"Give her a sealskin," suggested Nichols.

"She has one. Besides, that would require time. I've got to face her to night when I go home."

"The only thing you can do," said Gilson, "that can be done tonight is to telephone to a flower shop and have it send you a fine bouquet of flowers to take home with you."

Bemerton was not favorably impressed with the plan. He said that he had forgotten every anniversary of his wedding day as it came round and the customary gift, his wife reminding him of it a month after it had passed. To take her flowers now seemed like giving her taffy. However, at that hour it was the only thing he could do; so, calling up a flower shop, he directed the proprietor to send the handsomest basket of flowers he could make up. Then he threw off care and, with his friends, spent a delightful evening, marred only by a telephone message from Dr. Gilson's better half to know if he was at the club and one from a patient of Dr. Nichols asking if the medicine he had ordered had better be taken at 11 o'clock or a quarter past 11.

But all good times must come to an end, and the trio at last separated. At the door of the club Bemerton's two friends admonished him to do a lot of petting when he got home, confessing himself a brute and relying on the floral gift to set matters right. Bemerton didn't say anything. He knew his wife and that she was not one to be coddled.

When the doctor opened his front door he found the lights turned down and the silence of oblivion. Excellent! Perhaps his wife was asleep. He would not have to face her till morning. Taking off his shoes and leaving the flowers in the hall, he crept upstairs.

"That you, dear?" came a voice from his wife's bedroom. "Had a good time? Hope you didn't eat anything to upset your stomach."

"Only stuffed crab, as you suggested. You're not angry with me, are you, dear?"

"Angry! Why should I be? I was well pleased when I learned you were at the club instead of being with sick people. Only you might as well have told me where you were going. It would have been a relief to me."

"By Jove, what a sensible woman you are! Both Gilson and Nichols said their wives would be furious. They suggested that I bring you a ten dollar basket of flowers to pacify you."

"Flowers! Don't you bring me flowers when Billy needs a new overcoat and Jennie hasn't a decent dress to her name. If you had spent $10 for such worthless things I'd have sent them right back tomorrow to the shop you got them from."

Mrs. Bemerton didn't see her husband or his expression when she said this, and it is well she did not.

"I'll just go down and fix the furnace before turning in," he called. "It's going to be a cold night."

Mrs. Bemerton heard coal shoveled into the furnace, but she did not hear a beautiful ten dollar basket of flowers thrown in at the same time.

The next morning Dr. Bemerton made his first call at the flower shop, where he paid for the penitential gift.

A Powerful Prince.

The Aga Khan, who states in the Times the Indian view for Englishmen, is practically resident in London. Though he is one of the greatest of Indian princes, he has no territorial jurisdiction, his great influence arising from the fact that he is head of the Ismaili Mahomedans. He is a man of great wealth, and, like the other Indian princes, has given lavishly to the war funds and charities, but his greatest service to the empire is the loyalty with which he has inspired his religious followers. In London the Aga Khan wears European dress, and before the war was a notable figure in society. He and the Jam Sahib of Nawanagar (Prince Ranjitsinbji) are the two most Europeanized of Indian princes. Aga Khan takes great interest in all British sports, and is a keen golfer. —Dundee Advertiser.

FEEDING GREAT BRITAIN.

Farmers on Tight Little Islands Move Slowly.

In view of the fact that Germany's U-boat blockade (so-called) is attempting to starve England into defeat, what are England's farmers doing to produce wheat at home? The answer is somewhat complicated.

If this were to be another Thirty Years' War, England's farmers could, long before its end, raise on their own land enough food to support the country. But this is not to be a Thirty Years' War, and to-day, after three years of it, the farmers of England are raising enough wheat in a year to last the country just ten weeks.

Nor is this to be taken as a scare story. I looked last week at an enormous elevator in a remote part of England, far from air raids, where was stored enough wheat to last the island one year. Nor is it likely that this great supply will have to be tapped. For the promise with which the Kaiser launched his piratical ocean blockade—bringing England to her knees within three weeks—has long ago fallen flat.

It has been suggested that an increased yield per acre in the absence of a large increase in actual acreage would help, but raising the average yield of a British crop is an herculean job. Forty years ago the British farmer was getting his 30 bushels of wheat out of an acre. To-day he is getting 32 bushels. And by the time he gets 33 it is probable that the war will have been long ended.

And here arises a curious condition. France is getting only 15 bushels to the acre, but French farmers are feeding the nation without outside help. French crop rotations, which allow heavily for the cereals, are the explanation, however. A more liberal use of the artificial fertilizers also helps to explain the French situation.

Most of the wheat grown in Great Britain is grown in England, for among farmers on this island wheat is essentially an English crop. Of the 1,911,000 acres given to wheat in the island, only 40,000 acres are in Wales and 60,000 in Scotland. Scotch farmers are a great deal fonder of oats, over 1,000,000 acres of oats having been grown in the north country in 1914. There is, however, a large acreage in the lowlands of Scotland which is quite suitable for wheat. It is in the highlands of Scotland that much of the 24,000,000 acres of barren land in Great Britain lies.

This difference between the total acreage of the island (56,000,000) and the 32,000,000 acres available for cultivation is made up of mountains, forests, barren heaths, and fells, and the fact that it is quite devoid of farming possibilities, is attested by the further fact that for centuries, even during long periods of food scarcity and high prices, it has lain in its present barrenness.

While the actual acreage in wheat has shown a small decrease this year under last year's figures, the barley, oats, and potatoes acreages have shown enormous increases. Here is the table:

	Acres.	Inc.	Dec.
Wheat	1,911,000	.....	1,000
Barley	1,458,000	127,000
Oats	2,220,000	145,000
Potatoes	594,000	76,000

This is due to the fine farming push, engineered by the food controller, the war office, and the agricultural executive committees, a push which has displaced flowers with vegetables generally in gardens throughout the island and has dealt with derelict estates which, heretofore, have produced nothing.

The fact still remains, however, that in the deep-seated hopes for an early peace, England's farmers are producing annually 52,000,000 bushels of wheat, or a fifth of the 236,000,000 bushels necessary to feed her 43,000,000 population for a year.

King's Official Reporter.

In these days of tape machines the office of the King's Parliamentary Reporter has lost a good deal of its importance. There were times when the duties Mr. Pratt has temporarily taken upon his shoulders provided material for history, but the report which is handed to his Majesty nightly is more or less of a luxury nowadays. Once upon a time it was the duty of the Prime Minister to furnish the report, and Pitt is recorded as having done it with the assistance of a bottle of port after supper. On more than one occasion Queen Victoria conveyed her thanks to Randolph Churchill for the excellent way in which he performed the task, and Disraeli's efforts also won no small amount of praise.

REAL VALUE
is based, not on the price paid for a commodity, but on the benefit derived. That is why Zam-Buk is the cheapest skin healer on the market—because the benefit derived is 95% greater than can be got from ordinary ointments. This is due to the fact that Zam-Buk is all medicine—100%. Ordinary ointments are 5% medicine and the balance animal fat.
The superiority of Zam-Buk is proved by the many cases of chronic skin trouble and old sores which yield to the power of Zam-Buk after all other treatments have failed.
The unusual power of penetration which Zam-Buk possesses enables it to reach the underlying tissues, where skin troubles have their "root." Then the germicidal properties in Zam-Buk destroy all germs. Until this is done healing can never be thorough. The reason why sores that have been treated with ordinary ointments break out again is because the remedy has never got to the seat of the trouble, but has only healed over the outer skin. Zam-Buk, on the contrary, uproots skin disease, and the cure is complete and permanent.
Zam-Buk should always be used for eczema, ringworm, scalp sores, pimples, abscesses, ulcers, blood-poisoning, bad leg, piles, cuts, burns and scalds. All dealers or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto. 50c. box, 3 for $1.25.

We Can Help You Stimulate Business
A little stimulation in Midsummer may put you back in the running again, and even yet, if you concentrate your efforts, use liberally the means that have made others prosper in your line of business you can succeed as they did.
Some Merchants Say:—
"As Soon as Business Picks Up I'll Advertise"
This is not consistent. The farmer does not wait until harvest time to sow his seed—and, remember this, that if you ever reach the point in business where you believe you can get along without advertising, somebody else will own your business. THE TORPEDO SPEAKS.

Tells Its Own Story of Its Doings In War and Peace.

Well, well, well! I am surprised! With all the notoriety that I have gained and the destruction that I have caused that nobody would tell you what I am made of and what I am capable of doing!

I am twenty-one feet in length and twenty-one inches in diameter, and ordinarily I am assembled in three parts known as the tail and afterbody, the flask and the head. My tail contains the machinery which turns the propellers that force me through the water; the flask carries my fuel in the form of compressed air that sends me on my mission of destruction—and when I start, woe unto them who may be in my path, for I am the most dreaded weapon that ever sailed the seven seas.

I cost $9,000 and can run for 10,000 yards before my energy is used up, traveling that distance at the rate of about fifty feet per second. I am a monster made of forged nickel steel and weigh 2,000 pounds and have turbine engines, which are capable of making 1,760 revolutions per minute. In my head I carry a high explosive called guncotton, which explodes upon contact.

In times of peace, when I am practiced with, the guncotton is taken out of my head and water is substituted to compensate for its weight. When I have been fired in practice and have made my run and expended all my energy I have lost sufficient weight to float to the surface until I am picked up, recharged and refired.—A. Freed, Gunner's Mate, U. S. N., in Washington Star.

THEY FEAST ON SNAKES.

A Queer People With Queer Tastes Are the Philippine Pygmies.

High up on the slopes of Mount Mariveles, in the Philippine Islands, dwell the last remnants of an ancient and most mysterious race, the Negritos, or "little negroes." Scientists differ hopelessly as to their origin and history, but the traveler who is fortunate enough to penetrate into their carefully hidden villages finds the quaint little people extremely interesting.

Though disinclined to work, the Negrito is indefatigable in the chase. He will hunt all day without eating anything but the mango or banana that he seizes as he rushes by. If dogs are scarce for any reason women are pressed into service, and these go loping through the brush, yelping in imitation of the canines.

Sometimes a beater will emerge from the brush carrying a pig he has encountered and killed or, more important still, bringing news of the sighting of a python. In this case the whole hunt is called in and its energies directed to the capture of the big snake, which when killed is carried in triumphal procession to the village, where it furnishes a feast

An Interesting Test of Wits.

A game that affords fun and an interesting test of wits is "your native town." At a party it will tide over any dull moments that threaten. Provide the players with paper and pencils and ask them all to write the places of their birth. Then give them a limited time in which to make a sentence consisting of words that begin with the letters in the name of the town and follow the same order.

For example, if the city is Baltimore, then the sentence might be, "Behold, a large town in Maryland, old, rich, enterprising!" The more aptly descriptive of the town the better is the sentence. At the end of a specified time have the players read their sentences, and, if you wish, award a prize to the best one.

Igorrote Dog Eaters.

During our trip through the Philippines we visited the dog market, where the Igorrotes bought and sold half starved canines with visions of a great feast off the protruding ribs. The Igorrotes are about as much like the cultured Filipinos as they are like cultured Americans or cultured Japanese. But the fact that the Igorrotes eat dogs has done as much to prejudice us against the Filipinos as has the story that the Chinese eat rats to turn us against the well bred Chinese, who not only do not eat rats, but even have a distaste for caviar and limburger. — Maynard Owen Williams in Christian Herald.

How German Forces Are Moved

	Divisions of 3 or 4 Rgts.	Battns.
On the western front ..	125	1,376
On the eastern front ..	48	574

A fresh awakening of activity in the east was occasioned when Roumania came into the war. This brought further changes in the proportional strength of the German forces on the respective fronts. In December, 1916, they were as follows:

	Divisions of 3 or 4 Rgts.	Battns.
On the western front ..	129	1,312
On the eastern front ..	79	899

In July, 1917, which saw the opening of both British and French offensive movements, the Germans were compelled to reinforce their armies on the western front, and this brought with it a reduction of their strength on the eastern frontier. The totals were then:

	Divs. generally of 3 Rgts.	Battns.
On the western front ..	155	1,456
On the eastern front ..	79	860

Owing to events connected with the revolution in Russia, Germany threw some more troops into the eastern field of operations, and on Sept. 1 the situation was as follows:

	Divisions of 3 Rgts.	Battns.
On the western front ..	147	1,369
On the eastern front ..	92	965

These figures refer merely to the troops engaged in the fighting line, and leave out of account those in garrison in the interior of the country, as well as those on the lines of communication.

At the beginning of the war the strength of a German battalion was about 1,000 men. On the assumption that this strength has been maintained, the correspondent's statement indicates the presence of 1,369,000 troops on the western front in September.

TROUBLED WITH CONSTIPATION

From 16 to 20

Constipation is one of the commonest ills of mankind, and one too often allowed to go unlooked after until some serious complication sets in.

If the bowels are properly looked after there will be no constipation, jaundice, sick or bilious headaches, heartburn, coated tongue, sour stomach, floating specks before the eyes, etc.

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills will keep your bowels so regulated that in no time the constipation will disappear entirely.

Miss Emma E. Melanson, Halifax, N.S., writes: "I am now 20 years of age, and since I was 16 I have been greatly troubled with constipation, so much so that at times I would be in bed 3 or 4 days a month. I tried all the old-fashioned remedies, castor oil, cascara, etc., with only temporary relief, until my sister-in-law gave me some of Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills. From the first they seemed beneficial, and I gave them a fair trial. This was two years ago, and with an occasional dose I have kept entirely free from constipation for the period mentioned."

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills are 25c a vial at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Judge Ben B. Lindsey, of Denver, was lunching one day—it was a very hot day—when a politician paused beside his table. "Judge," said he, "I see you're drinking coffee. That's a heating drink. In this weather you want to drink iced drinks, judge — sharp iced drinks. Did you ever try gin and ginger ale?"

"No," said the judge, smiling, "but I have tried several fellows who have."

"Men certainly do hang together," according to Brown.

"For instance, I have a friend who lives in a suburb where many wealthy folks live. Recently he had a motor accident at a lonely spot on the road, where he found it impossible to reach a telephone to notify his wife.

"Now, it happened that he was happily married, very domesticated, and not accustomed to staying out at night. So at mid-night his wife became very nervous. She dispatched the following telegram to five of her husband's best friends in the city: 'Jack hasn't come home. Am worried. Is he spending the night with you?'

"Soon after this her husband arrived home and explained the cause of his delay. While he was talking a boy brought in five answers to her telegrams, all worded practically as follows: 'Yes, Jack is spending the night with me.'"

Combing Won't Rid Hair of Dandruff

The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp, and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

Do this to-night, and by morning most if not all of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirey destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop at once, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and never fails to do the work.

GOOD SHORT STORIES.

It took place at the officers training camp.

The replacement bunch was new, but earnest. Its members were well equipped—you could see that with half an eye. And they were conscious of their equipment—you could see that if you were born blind.

Forward, march! shouted the person in command. They stepped off briskly.

Halt! And they halted almost all at once

Mark time. And at the response, the person in command fainted away.

For at the word, every soldier had shot up his sleeve and taken a glance at his new wrist watch.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

BRITISH ATTACK ON FLANDERS FRONT
ITALIAN RETIREMENT IS ANNOUNCED

British Attack In Flanders With Satisfactory Results

War Office Announces a Resumption of the Offensive This Morning---Italians Admit the Evacuation of Territory in Mountainous Area North of the Plains of Northern Italy---French Break Into German Lines.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(By The Associated Press.)

BRITISH FRONT IN BELGIUM, November 6.—A sharp battle is being waged at Mosselmarkt village, north of Passchendaele. A struggle also is proceeding at Polderneck Chateau.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, November 6.—The British casualties during the week ending to-day were:
Killed or died of wounds—Officers 241, men 4,976.
Wounded and missing—Officers 813, men 15,861.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, November 6.—The Commons to-day discussed the peace motion proposed by Hastings B. Lees-Smith, one of the founders of Ruskin College, Oxford. The motion which is supported by the Pacifist group declared—"This House is of the opinion, providing satisfactory guarantees can be obtained with regard to the independence and restoration of Belgium, and the evacuation of occupied territory, that no obstacle should be placed in the way of preliminaries towards negotiations for peace at a length which ought to embody as equitable a solution of the problem of Alsace-Lorraine and of devising the enforcement of effective international machinery for the avoidance of future wars." A. J. Balfour, the British Foreign Secretary, is expected to reply to the motion.

Russia Will Continue To Do Her Duty

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, November 6.—Russia is still doing her utmost to carry on the war. She will continue to do her duty. These are the views of Premier Kerensky, whose secretary in his name protested to-day against any other interpretation of the recent interview with the Associated Press.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, November 6.—The British attacked this morning on the Flanders front in the neighbourhood of Passchendaele, the War Office reports, that satisfactory progress is being made.

ITALIAN RETIREMENT OFFICIALLY ADMITTED

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

ROME (Official), November 6.—The Italians have been compelled to evacuate territory in the mountainous area north of the plains of Northern Italy in order to establish new lines. The enemy occupied this territory after the Italian withdrawal.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS (Official), November 6.—The French broke into the German lines at several points last night and took prisoners. A German attack near Carnillet on the Champagne front was repulsed.

Had Never Seen A Train In His Life

Military Service Act Brings Young Man From the North Country

MINDEN, Nov. 5.—The far-reaching effect of the Military Service Act was illustrated here on Saturday, when a well built young man from the north country called at a local merchant's store and informed the man behind the counter that he had driven into Minden on his way to Lindsay to be medically examined, intending to take the stage to Gelert and the train from there to Lindsay. The draftee confided to the merchant that he had never seen a train in his life, and that this was his first trip away from home. He, however, had $40 to spend, and demanded the best cigarettes in the store. He might have to serve in the Army, but he was going to have a good time nevertheless.

HOME FROM CONVENTION

Dr. Walmsley has returned from Buffalo, N.Y., where he was in attendance at the annual convention of the New York State Osteopathic Association. Several hundred osteopaths were present at the convention, which was an interesting and profitable one. The Ontario Association of Osteopaths were the guests of the New York Association, and there was a fine representation from this province. Dr. Walmsley was accompanied by Mrs. Walmsley.

TRAINS BLOCK STREET CROSSINGS

At a joint meeting of the Property committee of the City Council and the Board of Health, held last evening, Dr. C. H. Amys, Medical Officer of Health, took exception to the methods employed by the Grand Trunk Railway in connection with their shunting operations on Bethune street. Dr. Amys said that some of the street crossings were blocked for as long as fifteen minutes. Dr. Amys also referred to the frequency of "flying shunts," which is regarded as contrary to the city by-law governing such matters. A few days ago a "flying shunt" was made into the plant of the Matthews Blackwell Company on George street. The car stalled right on the street car tracks, and and it was several minutes before it could be removed as the engine was some distance away. This particular instance was on the C.P.R. tracks crossing George street.

CASUALTY LISTS WILL BE HEAVY

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

OTTAWA, Nov. 6.—The first midday casualty list in many weeks issued to-day contains nearly 200 names of whom forty-four were killed or died of wounds, and 127 wounded. These casualties, the result of the recent brilliant fighting on the Flanders front, are now being issued by the Records Office. There is every indication that the lists will be heavy for some days.

PTE. HARRY E. LLOYD, Mounted Services, formerly of the 93rd Battalion, who is officially reported wounded. His home is at 868 George street.

REGISTRATIONS ARE INCREASING AT POST OFFICE

With the Time Limit For Reporting Under Military Service Act Coming to a Close There Are Signs of a Rush to Register

EXEMPTION TRIBUNALS

With the time limit for reporting under the Military Service Act rapidly drawing to a close, there is an appreciable increase in the number of registrations at the local Post Office, and there is every indication of a rush for the balance of the week. Yesterday there were sixty claims for exemption and two reports for service, while to-day there has been a steady stream of Class One men into the Postmaster's office.

The total registrations up to noon to-day were 594, made up of 566 claims for exemption and 28 reports for service.

Instructions have been issued to the Exemption Tribunals in preparation for the commencement of the sittings on Thursday. It is stated in them that the tribunal may place a man known or apparently an idiot, permanently bedridden, blind or lacking a limb, in Category E without the man in question taking any medical examination. There are eleven possible decisions that a tribunal may make, as follows:

(1) Disallowance—(a) Disallowed; (b) disallowed by default.
(2) General postponement.
(3) Postponement until a later class.
(5) Allowed until he ceases to be employed in some special work.
(6) Allowed if he secured employment within —— days in some work of national importance and until he ceases to be so employed.
(7) Allowed for a given period until he has completed his education or training.
(8) Temporary exemption by reason of financial obligations.
(9) Temporary exemption because of business obligations.
(10) Temporary exemption by reason of domestic position.
(11) Until the services of men in other categories than "A" are required.

CANADIANS WIN AGAIN

Dominion Troops Have Advanced Northwest of the Famous Village of Passchendaele and Are Established One Hundred Yards Beyond

OFFENSIVE RESUMED

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

(By William Philip Simms.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN FLANDERS, Nov. 6.—The first shock of another smashing blow by Field Marshal Haig early to-day carried the Canadian troops up the Meecheele (Bellevue) spur and into Mosselmarkt, beyond and to the northwest of Passchendaele.

Headquarters advices received as this is despatched report the fighting to be unusually bitter, the Germans vigorously contesting every inch of the ridge. Meechelle Spur was carried by a storming attack, its defenses beaten down by the Maple Leaf troops after a violent combat.

Mosselmarkt is a village forming one of the suburbs of Passchendaele. It lies almost on the very top of the spur. If its ocupation is maintained by the British, the City of Passchendaele will have been half way encircled, since Haig's push of a week ago brought the British to the outskirts of the city on the southwest.

Canadian Press Despatch:

LONDON, Nov. 6.— The Canadian forces in their offensive against the Germans this morning north-east of Ypres, on the Belgian front, have established themselves at a point a hundred yards beyond the village of Passchendaele, says a telegram from Reuter's correspondent at British headquarters in France.

Major Davidson Returning From Overseas Soon

Will Resume His Duties at St. John's Church After Christmas

It will be good news for the people of St. John's church, as well as for citizens of Peterborough generally, to learn that Major J. C. Davidson, rector of St. John's and formerly chaplain of the 93rd Battalion, is returning from overseas service at Christmas, and will resume his work at St. John's. The news of Major Davidson's return is coicident with the announcement that Rev. Canon Cornish, of Yorktown, who had been engaged by St. John's church to act as rector for the duration of the war, had been offered the rectorship of Grace church, the second biggest church in Regina, and had been requested by the Bishop of Saskatchewan to ask St. John's church to release him from his contract here. The Bishop of Toronto, with the concurrence of the Wardens and Advisory Board of St. John's church, has released Canon Cornish from his local engagement and he is free to accept the Regina offer, while Major Davidson will be here at Christmas to resume his duties.

Major Davidson went overseas as chaplain of the 93rd Battalion and after being engaged for some time as chaplain at the Ontario Military Hospital at Orpington, England, went to France as chaplain of an hospital, where his work has been warmly commended.

PTE. DAVID O'GRADY.

Mrs. O'Grady, 190 Lake street, has received a wire from Ottawa, informing her that her husband, Pte. David O'Grady, formerly of the 93rd Battalion, who has been reported missing since May 3rd last, is now officially reported killed in action on May 3rd. Pte. O'Grady, who was the son of Mr. and Mrs. David O'Grady, Sr., of Douro township, enlisted here with the 93rd Battalion, and went overseas as a member of the machine gun section, being transferred to the 1st Canadians at the front. He was born in Douro and had lived all his life in and around Peterborough with the exception of four years in Edmonton. He is survived by his wife and two little daughters, and by his parents and several brothers and sisters.

PTE. HARRY KNOWLES, Sr.

Mrs. Knowles, 407 Donegal street, has been notified that her husband, Pte. Harry Knowles, formerly of the 93rd Battalion, has been killed in action. Pte. Knowles went overseas with the 93rd and was transferred to another Canadian battalion at the front. He is survived by a wife and seven children. One son, Pte. Harry Knowles, is also overseas.

SAPPER VINCENT LEAHY.

Miss Elizabeth Leahy, student at the Peterborough Business College, received official word to-day that her brother, Sapper Vincent Leahy, of the Canadian Engineers, has been killed in action. Sapper Leahy was born in Douro, and was a graduate of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute. He enlisted in Toronto and went overseas only last August. He had been at the front but a few weeks. Sapper Leahy's parents are dead, and he is survived by several sisters residing in Douro.

MAJOR FRANK BRADBURN.

Mr. T. E. Bradburn, ex-M.P.P., received notice from Ottawa this morning that his son, Major Frank Bradburn, M.C., has been wounded, and admitted to hospital on Oct. 30. This is the second time that Major Bradburn has been wounded. He went overseas as a captain with the 51st Edmonton Battalion and reverted to lieutenant to go to France. Since then he has been twice promoted on the field and has won the Military Cross for bravery. His many friends will hope his injuries are not serious.

PTE. HARRY ERNEST LLOYD.

Mrs. Lloyd, 868 George street, has received official word that her son, Pte. Harry Ernest Lloyd of the Mounted Rifles, had been admitted to a casualty clearing station on Oct. 30th, suffering from a gunshot wound. Pte. Lloyd was one of the first to enlist in the 93rd Peterborough Battalion and went overseas as a member of A company. He has been in France for over a year.

PTE. JOHN MURRAY.

Mr. John Murray, 503 Parnell Street, has received an official message from Ottawa stating that his son, Pte. Jack Murray, of the 58th Canadian Battalion, is reported admitted to No. 6 General Hospital, Rouen, on October 27th, suffering from a gunshot wound in the left leg. Pte. Murray enlisted with the 98th Welland Battalion, and was transferred to the 58th. He had been in France for over a year.

Corp. F. H. Dainton, who went overseas with the C.M.R., and Pte. Martin Neary, formerly of the 93rd Battalion, arrived home from overseas last evening and were welcomed by the civic authorities. Pte. Neary is suffering from shell shock.

"COLONEL" MACKLEM FOOLED EVERYONE FOR A LONG TIME

Man Arrested at Detroit Who Claimed to Be a Staff Officer and Wore Several Decorations Was Discharged From the Army as a Private

MINISTERS DECEIVED

(Special to the Toronto Star and the Peterborough Examiner).

OTTAWA, Ont., Nov. 6.—"Colonel" Omer L. Macklem, arrested in Detroit, appears to have pulled off the Dr. Cook trick on all Canada and part of the United States, and it has taken a long time to find him out. Last session, for about a week, his slim figure, attired in the uniform of a colonel of staff, and with his red banded cap surmounting a strangely distorted face, were familiar in the halls of Parliament. He was in frequent converse with Sir Edward Kemp, the Minister of Militia, and even gained access to the Prime Minister. In fact, he was introduced round the corridors as one of the real heroes of the war, and nobody who looked upon his wounded face and broken nose cared to doubt his claims. He had entry to the offices of the headquarters staff, and later went West.

ENLISTED AS PRIVATE.

Inquiry at the Militia Department elicits the information that Macklem, who originally came from Tilbury, Ontario, had enlisted in the 33rd Battalion, second reinforcing draft at London, Ont., March 13, 1915. He subsequently went overseas, joined the 100th Battalion at the front, and was wounded in the head by a piece of shrapnel. Then he was sent back to London, but was discharged from that institution in November, 1916. In December he was discharged from the Canadian forces in England as a private. This information was verified in a cable received by the Militia Department from the Record Office in London, England.

What about medals? With regard to the decorations the Militia Department here knew nothing. It was pointed out, however, that if there had been such an award to Macklem his name would have appeared in the London Gazette, and that his papers in the Record Office here would have shown this fact. Obviously, therefore, the medals in question had never been awarded to Macklem, and he had no right to wear the ribbons. The department pleads that it did not know anyhing about the deception until the Secret Service called their attention to the man's real identity. They do not consider that he has

UNITED STATES AND JAPAN REACH A COMPLETE AGREEMENT

Have Arrived at a Clear Understanding as to Military, Naval and Economic Co-operation in the War Against Germany

THE CHINESE SITUATION

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

(By Robert J. Bender.)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6. — America and Japan have entered a formal agreement reaffirming the "open door" policy in China and recognizing Japan's "special interests" in that country.

The momentous pact, confirmed by an exchange of notes between Secretary Lansing and Viscount Ishii of the Japanese Mission Nov. 2, will go down in history as one of the greatest developments of the world war.

In announcing the agreement today Secretary Lansing plainly indicated it would entirely remove an increasingly critical situation developing between the two countries.

The pact recognizes Japan's special interests in China, avows that China's sovereignty shall not be impaired, provides that there be no discrimination against the trade of other nations, denies any intention to infringe on China's territorial integrity, reaffirms "open door" policy and avows opposition to the acquisition by any government of special privileges which would affect China's independence. The administration regards the new agreement as a great and important step in binding Japan and America with a bond of friendship and co-operation.

A BLOW TO GERMANY.

It may be stated semi-officially that the pact is designed as a blow to Germany's efforts to alienate Japan and the United States.

In addition to the agreement on China, Secretary Lansing announced that a complete understanding has been reached between the United States and Japan regarding co-operation in the war and that the question of joint naval operations in the Pacific had been satisfactorily settled.

The China agreement first reached orally between the two governments was submitted by Secretary Lansing to Ishii for formal approval in writing Nov. 2. It was confirmed by Ishii on behalf of his government the same day.

Canadian Press Despatch:

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—Japan and the United States have reached a complete agreement in regard to China, and at the same time have arrived at a clear understanding as to military, naval and economic co-opertion in the war against Germany. This momen-

SHOULD BE REMEDIED.

The revelations of abuses and conditions at Burwash Prison Farm, in the enlightened province of Ontario, are not pleasant reading for Canadians. We had thought that we had reached a stage of, and had been provided with a humane system of dealing with our criminal population that eliminated the cruelty and barbarity of old-time prison methods; that the lash, which as a punishment had been discarded in the army, was also discarded in the application of prison discipline. But when prisoners, as was done at the Prison Farm, are strapped to a steel triangle and knouted as in the degenerate days of Russia, we are disappointed.

There is also gross carelessness of officials, that permits or, rather, forces prisoners to work in mud and water and snowy slush, with broken and leaking boots, something reminiscent of the rotten shoes provided for Canadian soldiers in the earlier days of the war. Prisoners were also made to sleep in their wet clothing after a hard day's work. This is not creditable to Ontario, and it is hoped that the praiseworthy attitude of the Provincial Secretary towards the abuses reported will result in strict disciplining of the offending officials, and purge Canada of the disgrace of the conditions revealed. He showed a proper sense of responsibility by personally visiting the farm and seeing for himself conditions as they were. We cannot afford to tolerate in this province, methods in dealing with those in our power that smack too strongly of Hun methods, applied by the German authorities to those unfortunate enough to become subject to their cruelty. We are fighting for civilization, but not that of the German brand.

The Union government may not fall in with Sir Wilfrid Laurier's proposal to suspend conscription, but it might, meantime, suspend Bourassa in the punitive sense.

FAITH IN CANADA.

A member of the Imperial Munitions Board stated in Montreal that, to date, shells to the value of 900 million dollars have been made in Canada. He sated also that enough steel had been used in the making of shells in Canada to build nineteen Quebec bridges or sixty-six 18,000-ton Dreadnoughts. Yet so great is the consumption of shells on the battle front that all of the shells made in Canada would last only twenty days in such fighting as that which raged at Vimy Ridge recently.

There are two little lessons in Canada's immense production of shells. One is that much money has been put into circulation, and that indicates a large popular capacity by Canadians for subscribing liberally to the Victory Loan. Another is that Canada has shown her capacity to do things. Of course, munitions have been made under the spur of necessity; but all the same Canada's productive capacity and the extent of her material resources have also been demonstrated. We have an urgent call to do more shipbuilding. We are, to some extent, doing that under the spur of necessity, but unlike the making of munitions, shipbuilding may be made to remain a permanent industry, whose value to the country in the way of national development or its value to the Allies in this crisis cannot be overestimated.

After the war there will be, or should be an immense development of all our resources—of soil, mine, and fisheries. If we are to hold our own in the new markets to be opened, we must be prepared, not only to produce, but to deliver our products. The latter can only be done to the fullest advantage to this country by moving our produce by our own shipping, thus giving us full control and, incidentally, the fullest measure of profit.

There is no doubt of Canada's ability to build ships. We have ambitious and busy shipyards in Toronto, turning out from time to time large ocean-going craft. We have shipbuilding plants at Montreal, Quebec, Collingwood, and Port Arthur. In the Toronto yards two thousand men are busy on ocean tonnage to make up for the loss of shipping by submarine activity.

We must put ourselves to the front in the matter of shipbuilding, one of the very first essentials of helping win the war, and one of the prime conditions of our future commercial and industrial development.

We must have faith in our capabilities, and these could have been more highly developed before if we had taken advantage of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's imperial ideal of a Canadian Navy, built at home. We should hve built that Navy and, incidentally, given such an impetus to other shipbuilding that our shipping interests would have been revolutionised. Sir Wilfrid's naval policy was an expression of national confidence in our ability to build ships, and it was an unfortunate thing for Canada that petty political interests were allowed to discredit the nation's ambition and blacken the country's reputation for courage and achievement by falling in with Sir Robert Borden's partizan pessimism, expressed in his unpatriotic and disparaging statement that "Canada could not build a navy in twenty-five or fifty years"—something that is abundantly disproved. We have evidence that the policy, in the matter of a navy, of Sir Wilfrid Laurier was the right national policy, the great principle implying fidelity to national duty, faith in ourselves, our resources, and our capabilities as the indispensable essentials of true national progress and development. We know that we need not take second place to any other country in fighting the battles of war, and we should show, as we can do, that we can wage and win the battles of peace.

Hon. Frank Carvell, at Hamilton, struck a responsive string in saying that "when our soldiers return disabled or wounded they simply must be taken care of by the State, no matter where the money comes from."

WITH THE CHILDREN ON SUNDAYS.

The Examiner has received a copy of a book, which is admirably designed to take out of the Sabbatarian Sunday the hum-drum and put in the happy. This book by Sylvanus Stall, D.D., strikes a new note.

The author of the book was a lover of children, and he evidently knew how to win them. His avowed object is to render Sunday a delightful time without in any way detracting from the sacredness of the day. Realizing that the normal child mind is the same on every day of the week, he introduces the idea of "Playing Church." The little ones drive to church, with chairs for horses. They act as ushers to their parents, their dollies and imaginary auditors. A regular service is conducted. The children themselves do some of the preaching, and at the close of the service a chapter from "With the Children on Sundays" is read. Questions are asked concerning the lessons taught, and at the conclusion, the children and their parents take the imaginary ride back to their home.

In addition to this there are many Old Testament scenes which are enacted: The boy behind the sofa is Joseph in the Pit; the boy looking through the slats of the chairs which are placed around him, is Daniel in the Lion's Den, and so on. The entire book is new in the direction which it takes, and there never has been any book like it. Each of the 52 object sermons has a number of illustrations, and the full colour page pictures and the half tone illustrations make the book exceedingly attractive. There is nothing controversial on its pages, and all parents will find it useful, especially the questions and little items of out of the way information. The chapters are all so interesting in this volume that one could scarcely speak of them as studies, but rather as illuminating conversations with the young. Those who have much teaching to do, and often find that their lessons fall flat and are stale and unprofitable, will find it full of suggestions, bright and stimulating from the first page to the last.—The Vir Publishing Company, 200-214 North Fifteenth Street, Philadelphia. Quarto. 350 pages. Price $1.50.

Make It An Over-Subscription!

(By Archbishop McNeil.)

Men, money, munitions—these are strictly the sinews of war. Not all of us can aid King and Country by going to the front or by working in munition factories; but all, both men and women, can and should aid by lending money to the Government for war purposes. The Victory Loan is being placed before the people for subscription in large or small sums, and it is our patriotic duty to see that the Victory Loan is over-subscribed. Anyone who allows the desire for unnecessary luxuries to stand in the way of buying a Government Victory Loan Bond is deficient in patriotism.

The future of Canada is involved in these Government Loans. One of the serious drawbacks of Canada in the past has been the fact that it was entirely a debtor country. We derived no public revenues from investments in other countries, and a large percentage of the revenues raised by taxation went abroad in payments of interest. The war has given us the opportunity to reverse the process. We now lend money to England and spend it in Canada in the manufacture of munitions. This money will be refunded to Canada with interest. Of course, Canada must use a large part of the loans from the people to finance the Canadian Expeditionary Forces; but if we all became really thrifty in our personal expenses and lent to the Government what can thus be saved, Canada would not suffer seriously during the financial reaction and adjustments after the war.

Voice of The People

Correspondence under this heading containing or involving attacks on individuals, or violent or extreme statements, must, to secure insertion, be signed with which thus assumes the responsibility.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—In Saturday's issue you have a column-long editorial in which you charged the Union government at Ottawa with all manner of crookedness. The most direct of your many statements is the following:

"The election of supporters of a non-partizan, win-the-war government, is to be conducted under the provisions of a win-the-election franchise, concocted, devised and bulldozed through the House by a partizan government in its own interests, to insure its own safety.

It is true that a party government put the franchise bill through, but the Liberal members of the Union government have approved of it and will fight under it. It is a proper wartime measure. How are the Liberals discriminated against? But you are evidently against the Union government and all its works. You are for Laurier and Laurierism in this struggle. Is that true or is it not? You have told us how good and sincere we are not. Will you be good enough to tell us in detail why Sir Wilfrid Laurier should be supported in preference. It is said that the coming local Liberal convention intends to bring out a straight Laurier candidate. Many Liberals will be shocked to hear that. You have spoken of a saw-off somewhere between East and West Peterborough. I can tell you that you will find that there will be no compromise or saw-off with Laurierism or a Laurier candidate. Rival party Union candidates can easily and will cheerfully arrange with each other if necessary, although where all are for Union what need is there of compromise? But there will be no compromise with Laurier and what he stands for. If we lose we will lose, and so much the worse for Canada—but there will be no compromise. I must say that I am astonished at your attitude.

J. H. BURNHAM.

The Examiner is good-natured in allowing Mr. Burnham his fling, but it does not recognize his right to put it in the witness box. His letter as published above is characterstic of the man. A responsible public man will not peddle such gossip as that relating to a "saw-off." The Examiner has said nothing about a saw-off between East and West Peterborough; that is one of the fables such as Mr. Burnham's organ is inventing day after day. It ill becomes Mr. Burnham to talk of "rival party Union candidates." There will be no Union candidate selected or agreed upon here if he can prevent it. He does not see the need of one so long as he is in the field. He is the stumbling block to a Union candidate. He himself is estopped from being a Union candidate by the declaration of Sir Robert Borden that he would recognize no person as a Union candidate who was the nominee of a party convention. Mr. Burnham was nominated by a party convention. In a spasm of "independence" he resigned his candidature because the conscription bill did not conscript wealth as well as men. He "reconsidered," on receiving a promise that wealth would be included in the conscription. This never was done, yet he still clings to his candidature and is doing all he can to force himself into the field as a "Union candidate," thus keeping out, if possible, a better man. If party is to be a passport to candidates for the Union government, why was it necessary to make a show of fusing or presumably eliminating party in its formation?

"If we lose, we lose," says Mr. Burnham. Who is "we?" What right has he to use the word? He is not the Union candidate and cannot be so long as he hangs on as the candidate of a party.

THE ROYAL TANK CORPS.

New Army Unit Established by Warrant.

The tank has come to stay, both the formidable war engine and the name the army gave it when it first waddled out in the Somme, flattened the German wire and scared the Kaiser's soldiers into wholesale "Kameraderie." Hitherto it has been officially known as Machine Gun Corps (Heavy Branch), but an army order gives particulars of a royal warrant authorizing the formation of the Tank Corps.

The new unit of the British Army will consist of two parts—technical personnel and non-technical. The latter, both officers and rank and file, are to have the rates of pay and the conditions of service applicable to the Royal Field Artillery.

For the technical section the daily rates of pay range higher than for any other unit of the army:

Officers: Major, 19s to 21s; captain, 15s 6d to 17s 6d; lieutenant, 10s 6d; second lieutenant, 9s 6d.

Other Ranks: Mechanist staff sergeant-major, 6s; staff sergeant, 5s 3d; technical quarter-master sergeant, 5s 3d; tank mechanist sergeant, 4s 3d. Tank mechanist, first class: Corporal, 4s; lance-corporal, 3s; private, 2s 8d. Tank mechanist second class: Corporal, 3s 6d; lance-corporal, 2s 6d; private, 2s 2d.

Officers will be obtained by granted commissions to selected cadets from the Tank Corps Officer Cadet ...talion and from officers seconded or transferred from other units in the army.

The following will be included in the technical section as tank mechanists, and will be graded as 1st or 2nd Class Mechanists, according to their technical efficiency, which will be determined by tests to be laid down from time to time by the Director-General Tank Corps:

Acetylene welders, blacksmith, boilermakers, coppersmiths, electricians, draughtsmen, fitters and turners, painters (camouflage), tank drivers, tractor drivers, and wheelers.—London Chronicle.

Are They Worthy of Your Money?

Your friend—he did his "bit" when he left a leg at Vimy Ridge. But to the end of his days he will go handicapped, earning less because of his sacrifice—

And that aviator you knew, who was brought down over the German Lines. He gave his all—

And your brother—or was it your own son?—who is now passing "Through the Valley of the Shadow." He offered his life that the World might be saved for Freedom—

And that girl you knew, who—on the threshold of Love—put great happiness aside, and went overseas according to the high traditions of the Red Cross—

And that doctor, who had a good practice, but who gave it up to serve his fellow men.

You will shortly have an opportunity to prove yourself worthy of the sacrifices of the legless man, the aviator, the wounded soldier, the nurse and the physician. The government is about to ask the people—and you, as one of the people—to lend Canada sufficient money to back up the efforts of these brave men and women.

Costly Chime of Bells.

What is said will be the most costly chime of bells in America and one of the most musical sets in existence, is now being made at a foundry in Troy, for the massive tower of Cadet chapel, Rev. H. P. Silver, chaplain, at the United States Military Academy, West Point, as the gift of Mrs. James M. Lawton in memory of her father, the late Major-General Robert Anderson, who was graduated from the academy in 1825, and whose brilliant command of Fort Sumter at the outbreak of the Civil War has thrilled millions of readers of American history. There will be twelve bells in the chime, the largest weighing nearly two tons and measuring fifty-six inches at its mouth.

The Cadet chapel is of stone, quarried from rock found on the military grounds, and cost to build about half a million dollars. Its commanding position on the hill back from the Hudson River makes an ideal place for bells, and the patriotic airs from the chime will sound throughout the beautiful highlands, in the midst of which the military academy is situated, and prove a source of inspiration to the future generals of the United States army that will always linger with them pleasantly.

What Emperor Said.

Here is a report of the speech delivered by Kaiser Wilhelm to his troops during the Boxer trouble in China:

"As will have been expected, the speech of Emperor William at Bremerhaven to the German contingent on its departure for China last Friday has created a most unfavorable impression throughout the world. The first reports sent out appear to have caught its spirit, if not its language, as the following translation of the Kaiser's exact words testifies:

"If you meet the enemy you will defeat him, give no quarter, make no prisoners; let whoever falls in your hands be doomed. Just as a thousand years ago the Huns, under their King Etzel, made for themselves a name, which to this day is a mighty one in tradition, so may your appearance make the name German be feared for a thousand years in China, so never again will a Chinaman dare to look askance at any German."

Eagles have been known to fly at a height of six thousand feet.

A TALE OF THE SOUTH

ARMY OF BRAZIL DEFEATED BY SEVENTY PATAGONIANS

Remarkable Story of Successful Defence of Isolated Little Colony at Carmen on the Rio Negro by a Clever Band of Dauntless Patriots Who Used Brains to Save Their Country.

THE isolated little colony at Carmen, on the Rio Negro in Patagonia, was once the scene of a strange and almost incredible episode which has historical foundation and is related in W. H. Hudson's account of his adventures in the southernmost country of South America, "Idle Days in Patagonia":

"Very early in this century the Brazilians became convinced that in the Argentine nation they had a determined foe to their aggressive and plundering policy, and for many years they waged war against Buenos Aires, putting forth all their feeble energies in operations by land and sea to crush their troublesome neighbor, until 1828, when they finally abandoned the contest. During this war the Imperialists conceived the idea of capturing the Patagonian settlement of El Carmen, which they knew to be quite unprotected. Three ships of war with a large number of soldiers, were sent out to effect this insignificant conquest, and in due time reached the Rio Negro. One of the ships came to grief on the bar, which is very difficult, and there it eventually became a total wreck. The other two succeeded in getting safely into the river. The troops, to the number of 500 men, were disembarked and sent on to capture the town, which is twenty miles distant from the sea. The ships at the same time proceeded up the river, though it was scarcely thought that their co-operation would be required to take so weak a place as the Carmen.

"Happily for the colonists, the Imperial armada found the navigation difficult, and one of the ships ran on to a sand bank about half way to the town; the other proceeded alone only to arrive when it was all over with the land force. This force, finding it impossible to continue its march near the river, owing to steep hills, intersected by valleys and ravines and covered with a dense forest of thorns, was compelled to take a circuitous route leading it several miles away from the water.

"Tidings of the approaching army soon reached the Carmen, and all able-bodied men within call were quickly mustered into the fort. They numbered only seventy, but the Patagonians were determined to defend themselves. Women and children were brought into the fort; guns were loaded and placed in position, then the commander had a happy inspiration, and all the strong women were made to display themselves on the walls in male attire. Dummy soldiers, hastily improvised from blocks of wood, bolsters and other materials, were also placed at intervals; so that when the Brazilians arrived in sight they were surprised to see four or five hundred men, as they thought, on the ramparts before them. From the high ground behind the town where they had halted they commanded a view of the river for several miles, but the expected ships were not yet in sight.

"The day had been oppressively hot, without a cloud, and that march of about thirty miles over the waterless desert had exhausted the men. Probably they had been suffering from seasickness during the voyage; at any rate, they were now mad with thirst, worn out, and not in a fit state to attack a position seemingly so strongly defended. They determined to retire and wait for a day or two, and then attack the place in concert with the ships. To the joy and amazement of the Patagonians, their formidable enemy left without firing a shot.

"Another happy inspiration came to the aid of the commander, and as soon as the Brazilians had disappeared behind the rising ground his seventy men were hastily dispatched to collect and bring in all the horses pasturing in the valley. When the invaders had been about three or four hours on their spiritless return march, the thunder of innumerable hoofs was heard behind them, and looking back they beheld a great army, as they imagined, in their terror, charging down upon them. These were the seventy foes spread in an immense half-moon, in the hollow of which over a thousand horses were being driven along at frantic speed.

"The Brazilians received their equine enemy with a discharge of musketry; but though many horses were slain or wounded, the frantic yells of the drivers behind still urged them on, and in a few moments, blind with panic they were tramping down the invaders. In the meanwhile the Patagonians were firing into the confused mass of horses and men; and by a singular chance—a miracle it was held to be at the time—the officer commanding the imperial troops was shot dead by a stray bullet; then the men threw down their arms and surrendered at discretion—500 disciplined soldiers of the empire to seventy poor Patagonians, mostly farmers, tradesmen, and artisans.

"The honor of the empire was very little to those famishing wretches crying out with frothing mouths for water instead of quarter. Leaving their muskets scattered about the plain, they were marched by their captors down to the river which was about four miles off. Like a herd of cattle maddened with thirst, they rushed into the water, trampling each other down in their haste, so that many were smothered, while others, pushed too far out by the surging mass behind, were swept from their feet by the swift current and drowned. When they had drunk their fill they were driven like cattle to the Carmen and shut up within the fort.

"In the evening the ship arrived before the town, and going a little too near the shore on the opposite side, ran aground. The men in her were quickly apprised of the disaster which had overtaken the land force; meanwhile the resolute Patagonians, concealed among the trees on the shore, began to pepper the deck with musket balls. The Brazilians, in terror for their lives, leaped into the water and swam to land; and when darkness fell the colonists had crowned their brave day's work by the capture of the Imperial war vessel Itaparica. No doubt it was soon pulled to pieces, good building material being rather expensive on the Rio Negro; a portion of the wreck, however, still lies in the river and often when the tide is low and those old brown timbers come up above the surface like gaunt fossil ribs of some gigantic Pliocene monster, I have got out of my boat and stood upon them, experiencing a feeling of great satisfaction.

"Thus the awful war-cloud burst and the little colony, by pluck and cunning and ready to strike at the proper moment, saved itself from the disgrace of being conquered by the infamous empire of the tropics."

SCHOOLGIRLS AS HEROINES

Apparently They Are Considered Out by American Authors.

Scott never mentions a schoolgirl, says H. D. Sedgwick in the Atlantic. Imagine Thomas Hardy fashioning a schoolgirl out of Wessex clay or George Meredith venturing to describe Diana of the Crossways in those early years. Arnold Bennett would have created a little miniature old wife, as Van Eyck and Memling paint babies like miniature old men. H. G. Wells would depict her as incipient temptation to lead Mr. Britling, for instance, into one of a dozen romantic adventures.

Galsworthy would try to fit her into an ethical system, into a niche of social justice or matrimonial ventures. Mr. Howells, one may imagine, might have essayed the task, but he would have tried to meet the difficulty of getting the right values—as a painter daubs blues on yellows to make a green—by adding to a primness reminiscent of the "Vicar of Wakefield," a few delicate boydenish touches.

As there is no such thing as a schoolgirl on the continent, French and Italian novelists do not mention her. Indeed, the schoolgirl, as we see her, is an American product and modern.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Many Subscriptions For The Victory Loan Have Already Been Offered In Amounts Up To $5,000

The Victory Loan office in Peterborough has already had numerous offers from citizens who wanted to be among the first purchasers of the new Canadian war loan bonds. On the day the office opened, one man asked for $1,000 worth of bonds, and since then applications have been made for amounts up to $5,000, indicating that there will likely be a spontaneous and brisk support to this new loan. Mr. R. L. Warren, the organiser for Peterborough County, informed these citizens that the campaign did not open until 12th Nov., and that no business would be transacted until that date. These subscriptions will be among the first accepted, however, as the citizens stated that they were ready to contribute to the loan as soon as the campaign opened.

City Team Captains.

The city team captains have been appointed as follows:

D. H. Moore, V. J. McElderry, T. W. Robinson, Peter Campbell, E. Walton, Geo. A. Benor, Frank Whites house, D W. Lewis, Ross L. Dobbin, Herb. McCannon, Ward Patterson, C. H. Moore, W. Dean Tyrer, J. D. Cameron, Asa L. Huycke, H. Rush, John H. Corkery, G. O. Cameron, Geo. W. Johnston, W. R. Scadding.

County Leaders.

Team workers will also be selected for each township, and will be announced shortly.

Mr. Warren is in Lakefield to-day conferring with the Victory Loan workers there and assisting in the organisation for the village.

Mr. W. L. McKinnon, of Toronto, will meet the local team workers on Thursday evening, explaining the details of the campaign and giving all the information required.

REDEMPTION A GREAT PICTURE

"Redemption," the remarkable film play presented under the direction of Julius Steger at the Grand yesterday afternoon and evening, and featuring Evelyn Nesbitt and her son, Russell Thaw, proved one of the most interesting pictures seen here in a long time. "Redemption" is a photo-drama taken from life and is convincing and realistic, holding the interest of the spectators from start to finish. Evelyn Nesbitt does not depend upon the notoriety of her name to make her famous. Her work in "Redemption," the story of which is based on the tragedy of her own life, stamps her as a wonderful motion star, and her acting was a revelation to all who saw her yesterday. Her performance shows her to possess unusual histrionic ability, and she was as charmingly natural in the lighter moments of the picture as she was strong and sure in the heavier scenes. Probably the most striking feature was the scene in which she tells her son of the circumstances which made her the plaything of a libertine. The supporting company is a clever one, and the whole picture is a striking proof of what can be accomplished on the screen. 'Redemption" will be seen at the Grand again to-night and twice to-morrow.

Ald. McIntyre Would Replace The Present Ward System By A General Vote

Matter Was Introduced at Last Night's Meeting of the City Council —North Ward Alderman Also Favours Appointment of a Fuel Inspector—City May Take Over Garbage Collection—Aldermen Had a Busy Night.

REGULAR COUNCIL MEETING

Last evening was a field night for meetings at the City Hall. At seven-thirty o'clock the Property Committee of the City Council and the Board of Health met in joint session by way of a curtain raiser. This was followed by a meeting of the Committee of the Whole Council and later the Council met in regular session and disposed of considerable business all within the short space of a couple of hours which is almost a record. The work of the City Council was carried out in a business-like manner and the aldermanic jokesmith found scant encouragement for his activities. Even at that the motion for adjournment was moved three times before the closure was finally applied stemming the rising tide of requests for sidewalk repairs and numerous other minor matters which the Mayor asserts, should be brought direct to the attention of the departments effected and not before the Council.

Ald. McIntyre Favours A General Vote

Alderman McIntyre gave informal notice of his intention to introduce at the next Council meeting a recommendation in favour of a general vote throughout the city in place of the present ward system of electing aldermen.

Alderman Smith did not approve of such a measure. He said that the chief objection of the Trades and Labour Council to the ward system was that there were too many elections by acclamations. "This could be remedied," said Alderman Smith, "by the Trades and Labour Council nominating candidates."

Alderman Dobbin said that the fact that the people deliberately went back to the ward system was sufficient reason for believing that the ward system was approved of by the ratepayers generally.

Mayor Duffus said that the whole question was to elect men who had ability, time and experience to do the work involved.

Favours Appointment Of Fuel Inspector

Alderman McIntyre referring to the coal situation, thought that a census should be taken of the coal supplies in the city. He also favoured the appointment of a fuel inspector who would be empowered to find out where all the coal is stored, which the local dealers have been delivering all summer and fall. The North Ward representative predicted a shortage of coal during the coming winter.

Alderman Dobbin proceeded to make a speech in reply and was interrupted by Mayor Duffus who requested that Alderman Dobbin stand up when making a speech. Alderman Dobbin complied with the Mayor's request and stated that steps have been taken to find out how much coal the local dealers have handled. Alderman Dobbin assured the members of the Council that he would keep them informed of future developments. Deliveries from the Municipal Coal Yard are being restricted to half ton lots. A very distressing fact is that those least able to pay for coal are the worst off. Every possible effort is being made to meet the situation.

Alderman Weir drew Alderman Dobbin's attention to a letter which appeared in the local papers in which it was stated that two tons of coal were delivered to a house in the city, and it was necessary to shovel three tons of coal back in order to get the two tons of city coal in the cellar. Two tons of coal were stored in a shed and twelve tons in the cellar. Alderman Dobbin said he did not believe the statements made in the letter.

Alderman Weir said that he had been informed by an authority that one hundred and fifty thousand tons of hard coal were being sent to Italy and that the United States Navy had asked for ten million tons in place of a normal supply of three million tons. These and other conditions had a decided tendency to make conditions worse rather than better.

Engineer George Jamieson Wants $1,200 a Year

Alderman Dobbin, chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee, reported that Engineer Jamieson of the Fire Department had insisted on a salary of twelve hundred dollars a year, the extra two hundred dollars to cover his services as engineer at the Fire Station, and also for his services at the pumping station. Alderman Dobbin also reported that Fire Chief Grange was in a position to secure a competent engineer at a salary of eleven hundred dollars a year. The latter has been employed as an engineer on the steamer "Bob Hall."

Alderman Smith did not think that the position was worth more than eleven hundred dollars a year. "When he is looking after the fire engine or the pumping station, he is not doing anything else," said Alderman Smith. This view was concurred in by Alderman Worth, who seconded the former's resolution fixing the salary for the position at eleven hundred dollars. This resolution was adopted by the Council and the matter of retaining Engineer Jamieson or employing another man, will be left to Fire Chief Grange.

A License For the Municipal Coal Yard

Alderman Dobbin's request for permission to secure a license covering the operation of the Municipal Coal Yard in accordance with a recent Provincial enactment, was granted by the Council.

The Council approved of the action of the Water Commissioners in disposing of the water main on Quaker street to the Quaker Oats Company at a purchase price of fifteen hundred dollars. Quaker street is now a part of the Company's proptrty, and the water main in question is destined to become a part of the Company's fire protection system. A by-law to this effect was passed.

The City May Take Over Garbage Collection

Alderman Smith suggested that the time limit of the city's garbage collecting contract be extended from one to three years, as many prospective contractors were not desirous of undertaking the work on a yearly contract.

Alderman Stratton was strongly in favour of the city undertaking the work and providing a first-class service.

Mayor Duffus said that City Engineer Parsons was seeking information from other cities in connection with this matter, and a report would be submitted at a meeting to be held in a few days.

City's Advantages To Be Widely Circulated

Mr. D. C. Nixon representing Municipal Canada," appeared before the Council with a proposal to include the City of Peterborough in a new publication to be issued under the heading of "Municipal Canada," and to be distributed by the Department of Trade and Commerce to the extent of five thousand copies. One full page in the above mentioned issue will cost the city two hundred dollars, and the distribution will be world-wide. Several changes were made in the company's contract in the interests of the city, after which the Council decided to invest in the page at a cost of $200. In addition to this the city will receive five hundred phamplets for local contribution and two copies of the publication for the local archives.

Will Claim Damages.

Mr. Guise Bagley, acting for Mr. Matthew Shannon, has notified the city of his intention to claim damages for injuries alleged to have been caused to his son, John Shannon, while the latter was said to have been playing around a road scraper belonging to the city. It is claimed that the scraper was left on private property at the corner of Park and Romaine streets. The accident which took place on October 26th, resulted in the amputation of one finger.

Wants Taxes Remitted.

A letter was read from Mr. W. H. Denham, superintendent of the Quaker Oats plant, concerning the Company's application for a reduction in the taxes levied on the Hunter street plant. The application was made to the Court of Revision, but the latter claimed to have no jurisdiction in a case where the buildings are totally destroyed by fire. Mr. Denham asked the Council to consider the matter in the light of right and wrong. The company is seeking a remission of the war tax, garbage rate and Patriotic Fund levies. There is no municipal levy as the company has a fixed assessment. The matter was referred to the Finance Committee of the City Council. It was pointed out that while the company may have to pay taxes in 1917 on an assessment that was made in 1916 when the plant was in operation, such will not be the case next year, as the assessment made this year would take into consideration the condition of the plant and as a result next year's taxes may be little or nothing, regardless of the fact that the new plant may then be complete.

Will Put in Drain.

The Hydro-Electric Power Commission was granted permission to put in a drain near the street railway "D" rail on Charlotte street.

"Colonel" Macklem Fooled Everyone

committed any crime, beyond that which made Anaanias a household word.

It will be remembered that Macklem, on his return to Canada, posed as a Colonel, stating that he had been promoted by reason of an invention he had perfected, and that had been adopted by the British War Office. He came home wearing several decorations, and, as the above paragraphs show, his story was everywhere accepted as genuine.

United States and Japan

tous development was announced today by Secretary of State Lansing, who made public notes exchanged by him and Viscount Ishii, the Special Japanese Ambassador, formally recording an agreement recognizing that Japan has a special interest in China, but pledging the independence and territorial integrity of the great Eastern Republic and reaffirming the doctrine of open door for commerce and industry.

In the statement accompanying the note Mr. Lansing said Viscount Ishii and the members of his Mission now on their way home had performed a service of the highest value to the United States as well as to Japan. Secretary Lansing spoke of an attitude of a campaign of falsehood adroitly and secretly carried on by the Germans and said that a propaganda of years had been undone in a few days.

The Military Service Act, 1917

DON'T DELAY! Do It TODAY

THE MILITARY SERVICE ACT is passed; the Proclamation issued October 13th. It is now the bounden duty of every man in Class One to report for service or claim exemption. This includes all bachelors and widowers without children (not otherwise excepted) who were 20 years old on the 13th October, 1917, and whose 34th birthday did not occur before January 1st, 1917.

What To Do

Go to your Post Office and ask for the form for reporting for service or for claiming exemption. The form contains clear instructions for filling in. Do this not later than NOVEMBER 10th.

Beware of the Last Minute Rush

With so many thousands of reports and claims to be dealt with, the rush of Class One Men will grow heavier day by day. You will waste less of your time and serve your own best interests if you avoid the inevitable rush on the last days.

The law is being enforced with the Government and the People firmly behind it. Obey the law. Do it today.

12th ANNIVERSARY ANNEX

To-Morrow, Nov. 7th

SEE WINDOWS SEE WINDOWS

Our Great Bargain Department is twelve years old to-morrow, so we planned a fitting celebration to commerate the establishment of this unique bargain section. The Peterboro public have recognized the advantages that it offers, with the result that many households in the City and County annually reduced their expenditures. Often the question is asked "how are such low prices possible.?" We consider this an opportune time to reply. The Annex disposes of large quantities, and this in many cases permits us to deal direct with the manufacturers. The wholesalers and manufacturers allow a liberal discount for cash payments. This also reduces the price for the consumer. When the wholesalers and makers have travellers' samples or broken lots to dispose of at the end of a season, the Annex has a reputation, throughout the trade, as an outlet for such lines. A word about To-Morrow's list of merchandise. It is a noteworthy collection that has been assembled with a view to your requirements for the winter season. The prices are so exceptional that it will be decidedly unprofitable for you to overlook any one item on this page. See Windows for many of the Sale Lines.

Dealers Who Will Handle Government Fish

Fish Committee of City Council Present Report

The committee appointed by the City Council to consider and act with regard to a supply of fish for Peterborough supplied under the jurisdiction of the Department of Game and Fisheries, submitted the following report at last night's meeting of the City Council.

The committee met in consultation with Messrs. Douros, of Douros & Gettas Fruit Company, Mr. R. C. Braund, and Mr. G. A. Pringle. The general regulations as governing the supply in accordance with the communication from the Department were agreed to at once.

The Report.

The committee recommended that the local distribution be left in the hands of those noted above, namely, Messrs. Braund, Douros and Pringle. These men agree to have placed for each, orders as follows:

Pringle—250 lbs. ordered on Mondays for Tuesday's trade, in proportion of half trout, quarter whitefish, quarter pickerel.

Braund—100 lbs., ordered on Mondays for Tuesday's trade, in proportion as noted above.

Repeat orders each Thursday for Friday's trade. This to continue until otherwise advised.

It is suggested that the initial order be arranged so as to have the first sales day on Tuesday, November 6th. It is suggested that some publicity be made of the arrangement in the papers, that the sales may be as large as possible.

Few Dealers.

Ald. Dobbin said it was the desire of the committee to confine the sale of the fish to as few dealers as possible. At first it was decided to have two dealers handle the fish, but after some consideration this number was enlarged to take in Mr. Braund, who serves a large district in the south end of the city. "The profit is small," said Ald. Dobbin, "and our chief desire in selecting men to handle the fish was to eliminate middlemen and those who contemplated delivery of the fish. The matter was considered from the standpoint of the public and not from the dealers'. The latter have agreed not to deliver the fish at the prices fixed. The fish is sold at fourteen cents a pound, with the exception of Lake Erie herring, which sells for ten cents. These prices are fixed by the department, allowing a small profit for the dealer. The city has to guarantee the account.

Request Refused.

A letter was read from J. Steinberg, local fish dealer, asking for consideration in the matter. Both Mayor Duffus and Ald. McIntyre were of the opinion that Mr. Steinberg should be considered, but after hearing Ald. Dobbin's explanation, the Council voted down Mr. Steinberg's request, and adopted the report presented by the Fish Committee.

ARE YOU "MUSIC HUNGRY?"

Call and have a talk with Mr. J. W. Stuart at 372 Water Street. He has the agency for the Willis and Gerhard Heintzman Pianos, and can satisfy your "music hunger." He will put you wise about the right way to buy on an easy instalment plan.

DR. BOUCHER VERY MUCH ALIVE

Through an unfortunate error, the name of Dr. Beauchamp Boucher was inserted in the Honour Roll of St. John's Church among the names of former members of the congregation who had passed away overseas and was read on Sunday. Dr. Boucher, who has been invalided home from overseas service, was, as a matter of fact, in attendance at St. John's on Sunday, and had the unusual experience of hearing his name read in the list of dead heroes.

A 4 Day's Special Selling of Rugs and Carpets Begins Wednesday

Wilton, Axminster, Brussels, Tapestry and other Popular Rugs. Also Carpets by the yard, all at Greatly Below the Usual Prices.

Affording a golden Opportunity for those who require Floor Coverings for Hotels, Clubs, Offices, Etc., as well as for Private Houses.

And the values are greater even than would appear from this statement, for all the goods are taken from our regular stock, bought before the recent great increase in prices. Moreover, many of the rugs were originally bought under very advantageous terms, and were marked at very close figures. So now is the time to obtain rugs and carpets at extraordinarily low prices. The variety is great, both in designs and in weaves; indeed, there is scarcely a rug of popular shade which will not be featured in this special selling during the week, and though only a few qualities are mentioned in the following list, many more can be seen in the department. Do not forget to bring the sizes of your rooms.

Laurier And Borden May Run in Ottawa

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

OTTAWA, Ont., Nov. 6.—There is a strong possibility that Sir Robert Borden and Sir Wilfrid Laurier will be opposed to each tother in the City of Ottawa. The dissension which has arisen regarding the Union convention two weeks ago when Messrs. Fripp and Chabot were renominated, has resulted in strong pressure being brought to bear upon Sir Robert Borden to run in the place of Mr. Fripp, so that the situation may be cleared up. It is expected in any case that A. K. McLean will be the Protestant Union candidate in Halifax. In such case Sir Robert will have to find another seat and what so natural than that he should run where he resides.

The fact that Sir Robert may run here and the further fact that trouble has been experienced in deciding upon a French-Canadian candidate for Ottawa on the Opposition side, weigh toward inducing Sir Wilfrid to run against the Premier. There are three aspirants for nomination, Messrs. Provost, Chevrier and Lemieux. Those three men waited on Sir Wilfrid yesterday afternoon, and it is stated all agreed to withdraw in his favour. It is understood that Sir Wilfrid accepted the offer. The Opposition leader will also run in Quebec East, his former seat. The fight would be an interesting and spectacular one. The Ottawa vote is about one-third French, while there is also a heavy Irish vote. Protestant and Catholic are about evenly divided.

SIR WILFRID TO RUN.

OTTAWA, Ont., Nov. 6.—Opposition executive officers here confirm this morning's report that Sir Wilfrid Laurier will run in Ottawa. They declare that he has given his assurance that he will do so, and the convention will be held next week.

It is stated that his decision has not been reached so much through a desire to patch up local differences as the desire to contest an Ontario seat. Sir Wilfrid ran in Ottawa in 1908, on that occasion he was elected by a large majority.

ALL CLAIM A VICTORY

Canadian Press Despatch:

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—New York is holding its quadrennial mayoralty election to-day. The fair weather that ushered in the day led to predictions by the various campaign managers that a record breaking vote would be polled. Of 696,809 voters who registered, it was expected that at least 675,000 would cast their ballots. Many close political observers believe that the result may hinge upon the vote of these fighting men now stationed in training camps on this side and overseas. The soldier-sailor vote has been estimated at about 50,000, and it will be about a month before it is known how these men voted.

At the close of a campaign almost unparalleled for its bitterness and many sensational charges and counter charges, campaign managers of the four parties issued statements claiming victory. The Fusian party predicted that Mayor John Purroy Mitchell would be re-elected by plurality of at least 50,000, while Tammany Hall claimed that County Judge John F. Hylan, Democrat, would be elected by 70,000 plurality. Other candidates also claim victory.

Extremely Limited Supply of Potatoes in Peterborough and Farmers Are Holding Crops

The potato situation in Peterborough is becoming more acute every day. It seems incrediible that with the large yield in this district during the past season, that there should be no more than a few hundred bags among the local retail dealers, and that they are operating with practically no reserve supplies, but such is the case. One or two grocers have perhaps sixty or seventy-five bags, but the rest have extremely light stores, and there are few indications that the farmers will market their stocks until the prices have soared to figures that will tempt them.

Mr. W. J. Oke stated this morning that he has not been able to buy a single carload this fall. "There are all the potatoes I have," he said, pointing to a small pile that wouldn't make an impression as the average man's requirements for winter. "The people should understand right now," continued Mr. Oke, "that the dealers are not to blame for the present scarcity or for the increasing prices. We simply can't get potatoes. It may sound preposterous that with a good crop in this district there should be any occasion to talk of a scarcity, but the farmers are holding their supplies. They have refused $1.60 a bag, and even $1.75. I have had men in the country, but they can't do business with the farmers. As a result, the local dealers are selling from hand to mouth, getting a bag or two at a time from me, and there is all that I have left."

Another man remarked that it was strange that the Government could control the price of paper and commandeer the supply, but was unable to regulate the staple foods and fuel that are absolutely needed by the people.

How To Remove Wrinkles Quickly

If the average woman only knew it, it is not at all difficult to preserve the youthful contour and velvety smoothness of complexion. Every woman hates to see her face wrinkled or baggy, and practically every one has experimented with some sort of patent remedy in the effort either to remove such condition or ward it off.

As a matter of fact, the most effective remedy in the world is one that any woman can easily make up herself at home, in a moment's time. Let her take one ounce of pure powdered saxolite, which she can purchase at any drug store, and dissolve it in a half pint of witch hazel. Apply this harmless and refreshing solution to the face every day for awhile. The results are surprising—and instantaneous. Even after the very first application a marked improvement is apparent. The wrinkles are less in evidence and the face has a comfortable, snug feeling of firmness that is most delightful.

Will Pay Tribute To Late Dr. Carman

At the Wednesday evening service at George Street Methodist Church the pastor will pay a tribute to the memory of the late Dr. Carman, General Superintendent of the Methodist Church in Canada. He will give a short review of his life and speak of the value of the service Dr. Carman has rendered the church.

Ald. Stratton Would Avoid An Election

Suggests a Third Term For Mayor Duffus and Another Year For Present Council

At last night's meeting of the City Council, Ald. Stratton suggested that the Council make some effort to avoid an election and save the money involved for the city. He referred to Mayor Duffus as a good administrator, and intimated that the Mayor might be prevailed upon to serve for another year.

Ald. Weir mentioned the De Laval By-law concerning the closing of a street. This by-law will have to go before the ratepayers in January.

Ald. Stratton was of the opinion that the company would be satisfied to have the by-law deferred.

The Council adjourned without taking any action.

REMAINING SON TO BE EXEMPTED

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

TORONTO, Nov. 6.—Where there is only one son remaining of a family and his brothers are all at the front, his claim for exemption made before a proper tribunal will not be opposed. And where two or more sons have gone from the household the claims of remaining brothers for exemption may also be allowed. These are instructions received by the local boards from Ottawa to-day.

Choice Recipes

Peach Pudding.

One egg, one tablespoon butter, two tablespoons sugar, half a cup sweet milk, one teaspoon baking powder, three-quarters cup flour. Pare and slice enough peaches to cover the bottom of a baking dish. Mix and beat well the above batter, pour over the sliced peaches and bake fifteen minutes. Serve with cream.

Peach Butter.

Take ripe peaches that are too soft for canning, halve and pare. Weigh peaches and run through food chopper. To ten pounds of peaches take five pounds sugar and mix sugar and peaches together. Let stand several hours, overnight, if more convenient. Stir occasionally, to have fruit and sugar mix well. Boil about one hour, put in jars and seal. You will find this delicious.

Apple Syrup.

One of the most economical things one can have in the house where there are children is an unlimited quantity of good syrup. The children eat it freely on bread or biscuit or cakes, and it does them good. This is one of the things which can be made on the farm where there is an orchard or a supply of waste apples. Too frequently these apples are made into hard cider, which becomes a nuisance and a danger. The apple juice may be made into a good syrup by adding lime and thoroughly boiling. The U.S. Agricultural Department gives the following plan: The lime unites with the acid so that it settles to the bottom:

Select fresh cider of good quality, and to every seven gallons of cider add five ounces of powdered calcium carbonate (lime), which can be obtained from any druggist at slight cost. After adding the carbonate stir the mixture well and heat to boiling in porcelain-lined kettles not more than two-thirds full. Boil for about five minutes, then pour into two-quart jars, glass pitchers, or other glass containers. Set these in pans of hot water to allow slow cooling. As soon as sediment has settled out—this will take twenty-four hours or more—turn off clear liquid and again beat to boiling in porcelain-lined kettles, this time but one-third full. Boil rapidly until liquid has reached about one-seventh of its original volume, and is of the consistency of thin syrup, then cool slowly as before. In a day or so, syrup should be perfectly clear and can then be bottled for future use.

WANDERED AWAY DIED FROM EXPOSURE

LINDSAY, Nov. 6.—A report reached Lindsay yesterday that an aged woman, who has relatives in Lindsay, was found dead in a swamp in Galway Township and near the village of Kinmount.

According to the report the unfortunate woman wandered away from her home into the swamp and died from exposure.

MILK SAMPLE WAS REFUSED

At a meeting of the Property Committee, held last evening, Sanitary Inspector Stapleton reported that he had been refused a sample of milk from one of the delivery wagons of the Peterborough Pure Milk Company. The driver of the wagon demanded a receipt. This was refused by the Inspector. The committee authorized Inspector Stapleton to procure a proper receipt book, and whenever a receipt is demanded, to issue one. Failing to secure a sample of milk when a receipt is issued, the Inspector will enforce the by-law, which provides penalties for the refusal of a sample of milk.

Band Instruments.

It was moved by Ald. Dobbin and seconded by Ald. Smith, that Ald. Saunders, chairman of the Property Committee, be authorized to have the 93rd Band instruments put in repair at a cost not to exceed ten dollars.

Sanitary Inspector Stapleton was authorized to procure a flashlight to light his way in dark places.

The matter of securing a hot-water tank for the Police Station was left in the hands of Ald. Saunders, with instructions to wait before the City Trust Commission in connection with the matter.

Water Supply.
